For lewyd men this book I writ. Bishop Grosthead.

So these great clerks their little wisdom shew
To mock the lewd, as learn'd in this as they. Davies.

2. Wicked; bad; dissolute.

If some be admitted in to the ministry, either void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.

Before they did oppress the people, only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same oppressions by warrant. Davies on Ireland.

3. Lustful; libidinous.

Swiche old lewed words used he. Chaucer, March. Tale.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Then lewd Anchemolus he laid in dust,
Who stain'd his step-dame's bed with impious lust. Dryden.

LE'WDLY.† adv. [from lewd.]

1. Foolishly; ignorantly; in a state of ignorance.

All which my daies I have not lewdly spent,
Nor spilt the blossom of my tender yeares
In ydlesse. Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 31.

Employing his labours lewdly, he maketh a vain god of the same clay. Wisdom, xv. 8.

Lord Peter, even in his lucid intervals, was very lewdly given in his common conversation, extreme wilful and positive, and would at any time rather argue to death than allow himself to be once in an errour. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

2. Wickedly; naughtily.

A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,
Have practis'd dangerously against your state. Shakspeare.

3. Libidinously; lustfully.

He lov'd fair lady Eltred, lewdly lov'd,
Whose wanton pleasures him too much did please,
That quite his heart from Guendeline remov'd. Spenser.

So lewdly dull his idle works appear,
The wretched texts deserve no comments here. Dryden.

LE'WDNESS.† n. s. [from lewd.]

1. Foolishness; grossness; want of shame.

Lewdness blotteth good deserts with blame. Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 38.

2. Wickedness; propensity to wickedness.

In stead of teares, the starres like weeping eies
Drop down their exhalations from the skies;
And Tithon's bride new rising from her bed,
Beholds their leaudness with a blushing red. Mir. for Mag. p. 730.

If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you. Acts, xviii. 14.

3. Lustful licentiousness.

Suffer no lewdness, nor indecent speech,
Th' apartment of the tender youth to reach. Dryden, Juv.

Damianus's letter to Nicholas is an authentick record of the lewdnesses committed under the reign of celibacy. Atterbury.

LE'WDSTER. n. s. [from lewd.] A lecher; one given to criminal pleasures.

Against such lewdsters, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Winds.

LE'WIS D'OR. n. s. See LOUIS D'OR.

LEXICO'GRAPHER. n. s. [λεξικὸν and γράφω, Gr. lexicographe, French.] A writer of dictionaries; a harmless drudge, that busies himself in tracing the original, and detailing the signification of words.

Commentators and lexicographers, acquainted with the Syriack language, have given these hints in their writings on Scripture. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

LEXICO'GRAPHY.† n. s. [λεξικὸν and γράφω, Gr.] The art or practice of writing dictionaries.

I shall only make some few reflections upon etymology and syntax, supposing orthography to belong to lexicography. Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, (1680,) p. 59.

LE'XICON. n. s. [λεξικὸν.] A dictionary; a book teaching the signification of words.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet, if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, yet he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yeoman competently wise in his mother dialect only. Milton.

LEY. n. s. See LAY, and LEA.

Ley, lee, lay, are all from the Sax. leaȝ, a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter ȝ or g. Gibson's Camden.

LIABI'LITY.* n. s. [from liable.] The state of being liable. This is used in conversation oftener than the old word liableness. Of neither has Dr. Johnson taken notice. The present is certainly very modern.

LI'ABLE.† adj. [liable, from the old Fr. lia, whence lier, attacher: See Lacombe: And that from the Lat. ligo, to bind; so that liable is quasi ligabilis.] Obnoxious; not exempt; subject: with to.

But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burthensome,
Proudly secure, yet liable to fall
By weakest subtleties. Milton, S. A.

The English boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures. Dryden, Juv.

This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to many defects. Swift.

LI'ABLENESS.* n. s. [from liable.] State of being liable to; obnoxiousness; subjection; propensity.

Abusing the liableness of women to self-love and vanity, they are continually striking fire out of their fancies upon this tinder. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 162.

That state or condition must be the better, and in conformity to right reason more eligible, in which there is no liableness to the wrath and anger of God. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 485.

There is an inlet for ambition, though not for lust; a liableness to the filthiness of the spirit, though not of the flesh. Hammond, Works, iv. 511.

How difficult a thing it is, especially in matter of reforming, to pare off the excess, and not to cut to the quick; to stay at the right point, and not over-do; because of the liableness, in such cases, in declining one extreme, to fall into another. Fuller, Moderation of the Ch. of Eng. p. 432.

LI'AR. n. s. [from lie. This word would analogically be lier; but this orthography has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from lier, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it.] One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity.

She's like a liar, gone to burning hell!
'Twas I that kill'd her. Shakspeare, Othello.

He approves the common liar, fame,
Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, whensoever it seems to be contradicted. Boyle.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part,
Wise is thy voice, and noble is thy heart Pope, Odyss.

Li'ard.† adj. [old Fr. liart, gris pommelé; Lacombe: Ital. leardo, gray or whitish horse-hair.] Gray: It was common, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, to call a gray horse from the colour, liard, as a bay one bayard. In Scotland liard, or liart, denotes gray-haired; as, he's a liard auld man; auld liart beard, i. e. old gray-beard.

This carter thakketh his horse upon the croupe —
That was wel twight, min owen liard boy.
Chaucer, Frere's Tale.

To Lib.* v. a. [lubben, Dutch.] To castrate. Still a northern word.

The bellowing bullock lib, and goat.
Chapman, Hesiod, (1618.)

Liba'tion. n. s. [libatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacrifice, or libation to the earth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The wine so poured.

They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men. Stillingfleet on Rom. Idolatry.

The goblet then she took, with nectar crown'd,
Sprinkling the first libations on the ground. Dryden, Æn.

Li'bbard. n. s. [libaert, German; leopardus, Lat.] A leopard.

Make the libbard stern,
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn.
Spenser, F. Q.

The libbard and the tiger, as the mole
Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw. Milton, P. L.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Piso resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the disperseness of habitations, or towns of Africk. Brerewood.

Li'bbards-bane.* n. s. A poisonous plant.

Night-shade, moonwort, libbard's-bane. B. Jonson, Masques.

LI'BEL.† n. s. [libellus, Latin; libelle, French.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.

Every fidler sings libels openly; and each man is ready to challenge the freedom of David's ruffians, "Our tongues are our own, who shall control us?" This is not a fashion for Christians, whose tongues must be ranged within the compass as of truth, so of charity and silent obedience.
Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory; every such libel here becomes panegyrick there. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Good heav'n! that sots and knaves should be so vain,
To wish their vile resemblance may remain!
And stand recorded, at their own request,
To future days, a libel or a jest. Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person exhibited in court.

To Li'bel. v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation; written or printed: it is now commonly used as an active verb, without the preposition against.

Sweet scrauls to fly about the streets of Rome:
What's this but libelling against the senate? Shakspeare.

He, like a privileg'd spy, whom nothing can Discredit, libels now 'gainst each great man. Donne.

To Li'bel. v. a. To satirise; to lampoon.

Is the peerage of England dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? if he be libelled, or any way defamed, he has his scandalum magnatum to punish the offender. Dryden.

But what so pure which envious tongues will spare?
Some wicked wits have libelled all the fair. Pope.

Li'beller.† n. s. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner. "The satirist and libeller differ as much as the magistrate and the murderer. In the consideration of human life, the satirist never falls upon persons who are not glaringly faulty, and the libeller on none but who are conspicuously commendable." Tatler, No. 92.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality. Dryden, Juv.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners. Tatler.

The common libellers, in their invectives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth, equally common to all bodies of men. Swift.

Li'belling.* n. s. [from libel.] Act of defaming or abusing.

This is the design and the mischievous issue, which to cover and propagate, the cunning machinator pretends the exaltation of the freeness of that grace which he designs to dishonour and defeat. He raiseth a mighty cry of free grace, and intitles the libellings of divine goodness by the specious name of Vindiciæ gratiæ. Glanville, Serm. x. p. 380.

Libelling is not the crime of an illiterate people.
Burke, Speech on Libels.

Li'bellous. adj. [from libel.] Defamatory.

It was the most malicious surmise that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet. Wotton.

LI'BERAL.† adj. [liberalis, Latin; liberal, Fr.]

1. Not mean; not low in birth; not low in mind.

Where gentle court and gracious delight
She to them made, with mildnesse virginall
Shewing herselfe both wise and liberall.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 20.

2. Becoming a gentleman.

3. Munificent; generous; bountiful; not parsimonious.

Her name was Mercy, well known over all,
To be both gracious and eke liberal. Spenser, F. Q.

Sparing would shew a worse sin than ill doctrine.
Men of his way should be most liberal,
They're set here for examples. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Needs must the power
That made us, and for us this ample world,
Be infinitely good, and of his good
As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton, P. L.

The liberal are secure alone;
For what we frankly give, for ever is our own. Granville.

4. It has of before the thing, and to before the person.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. Bacon, Ess.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, are, in their sermons, very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

5. Gross; licentious; free to excess.

Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice;
Parts, that become thee happily enough,
And in such eyes as ours appear not faults;
But where thou art not known, why, there they shew
Something too liberal. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Is he not a profane and very liberal counsellor?
Shakspeare, Othell.

I might, if it pleas'd me, stand still, and hear
My sister made a may-game, might I not?
And give allowance to your liberal jests
Upon his person, whose least anger would Consume a legion of such wretched people.
Beaum. and Fl. Captain.

Libera'lity. n. s. [liberalitas, Latin; liberalité, French.] Munificence; bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows to court
With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shakspeare.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine;
That liberality is but cast away,
Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay. Denham.

To LI'BERALIZE.* v. a. [from liberal.] To make liberal, generous, gentlemanly, open.

He [Mr. Grenville] was bred to the law, which is, in my opinion, one of the first and noblest of human sciences; a science which does more to quicken and invigorate the understanding, than all the other kinds of learning put together; but it is not apt, except in persons very happily born, to open and to liberalize the mind exactly in the same proportion. Burke, Speech on American Taxation, (1774.)

LI'BERALLY.† adv. [from liberal.]

1. Bounteously; bountifully; largely.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. James, i. 5.

2. Not meanly; magnanimously.

3. Freely; copiously.

They invited their father to drink liberally. Patrick on Gen. xix. 32.

4. Licentiously.

Had mine own brother spoke thus liberally,
My fury should have taught him better manners.
Greene, Com. of Tu Quoque.

To LI'BERATE.* v. a. [libero, Lat.] To free; to set free. Upon this word Mr. Mason has rashly observed, that "though this verb, and its derivative noun liberation, are now frequent in periodical publications of news, they are too modern to be found in any dictionary; nor had he met with either, to the best of his recollection, in any writer whom he would produce for an authority." The verb and substantive, however, are both of nearly two hundred years of age in our language; and may be seen in the old vocabulary of Cockeram.

By what means a man may liberate himself from those fears. Johnson, in Taylor's Sermons.

LIBERA'TION.* n. s. [liberatio, Lat.] The act of setting free; deliverance. Cockeram, and Coles.

This mode of analysing requires perfect liberation from all prejudged system. Pownall on Antiq. p. 155.

LI'BERATOR.* n. s. [liberator, Lat.] A deliverer.

The exploits of the judges and kings given to the people of God for liberators. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 155.

LI'BERTINAGE.* n. s. [libertinage, Fr.]

1. Sensuality; dissoluteness. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Licentiousness of opinion.

Erasmus thought he saw, under all their fondness for the language of old Rome, a growing libertinage, which disposed them to think slightly of the christian faith. Warburton, Serm. xiii. note.

LI'BERTINE. n. s. [libertin, French.]

1. One unconfined; one at liberty.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. One who lives without restraint or law.

Man, the lawless libertine, may rove,
Free and unquestion'd. Rowe, Jane Shore.

Want of power is the only bound that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the sex. Richardson, Clarissa.

3. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of couzenage,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakspeare.

That word may be applied to some few libertines in the audience. Collier, View of the Stage.

4. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their condition, as libertines against their patrons. Ayliffe, Parergon.

LI'BERTINE. adj. [libertin, French.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are men that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent enquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals? Swift, Proj. for Advan. of Religion.

LI'BERTINISM.† n. s. [from libertine.]

1. Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

Modest heathens would hiss this libertinism off the stage. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. iv. 2.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism, of infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury, Serm.

2. Privilege or state of a freedman.

Dignified with the title of free-man, and denied the libertinism that belongs to it. Hammond, Works, iv. 486.

LI'BERTY. n. s. [liberté, French; libertas, Latin.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears, he'll turn me away. Shakspeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heavenly bright!
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Exemption from tyranny or inordinate government.

Justly thou abhorr'st
The son, who, on the quiet state of man,
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue
Rational liberty; yet know withal,
Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells. Milton, P. L.

3. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

4. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Davies.

5. Relaxation of restraint: as, he sees himself at liberty to chuse his condition.

License they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton, Sonnet.

6. Leave; permission.

I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which, with some men, has the same authority. Locke.

LIBI'DINIST.* n. s. [from libidinous.] One devoted to lewdness or lust.

Nero, being monstrous incontinent himself, verily believed, that all men were most foul libidinists, yea, that there was not a chaste person in all the world. Junius, Sin Stigmatized, (1639,) p. 350.

LIBI'DINOUS.† adj. [libidinosus, Latin; libidineux, Fr.] Lewd; lustful.

It is not love, but strong libidinous will,
That triumphs o'er me. Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

For his libidinous courses he was slain by his sister's husband. Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 253.

Thou didst cover,
With a maid's habit, a libidinous lover. Fanshaw, Pastor Fido.

None revolt from the faith, because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the Gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless. Bentley.

LIBI'DINOUSLY.† adv. [from libidinous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

Simon Magus, and his mystical priests, lived libidinously; and used all manner of incentives and allurements to venery. Bp. Lavington, Moravians Compared, p. 104.

LIBI'DINOUSNESS.* n. s. [from libidinous.] Lewdness; lustfulness.

*LI'BRA. n. s. [Latin.] The seventh sign in the zodiack; the balance.

From eastern point
Of Libra to the fleecy star. Milton, P. L.

LIBRA'RIAN.† n. s. [librarius, Latin.]

1. One who has the care of a library. This word is of modern usage; library-keeper being the usual term for the officer of this description, which is used by bishop Barlow, Prideaux, Boyle, Bentley, and others.

It was his inconceivable knowledge of books, that induced the great Duke Cosmo the third to do him the honour of making him his librarian. Spence, Life of Magliabecchi.

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charybdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves: this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarian. Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

LIBRA'RIANSHIP.* n. s. The office of a librarian.

LI'BRARY.† n. s. [librairie, Fr.]

1. A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to avise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An antient book, hight Briton's monuments. Spenser, F. Q.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. A book-room.

Magliabecchi had a local memory of the places where every book stood; as in his master's shop at first, and in several other libraries afterwards. Spence.

To LI'BRATE. v. a. [libro, Lat.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise.

LIBRA'TION. n. s. [libratio, Latin; libration, Fr.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration, of the body. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Their pinions still
In loose librations stretch'd, to trust the void
Trembling refuse. Thomson, Spring.

2. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that, at full moon, they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptick, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Dict. Trev.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

LI'BRATORY. adj. [from libro, Latin.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,
And clammy dews that loathsome lice beget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden, Virg.

LI'CEBANE. n. s. [lice and bane.] A plant.

LI'CENSABLE.* adj. [from To license.]

1. That may be permitted by a legal grant.

2. Dismissable. Not in use. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

LI'CENSE. n. s. [licentia, Latin; licence, Fr.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Musidorus their chief. Sidney.

Taunt my faults
With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

They baul for freedom in their senseless moods,
And still revolt when truth would set them free;
Licence they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton, Sonnet.

The privilege that antient poets claim,
Now turn'd to license by too just a name. Roscommon.

Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence; though man, in that state, have an uncontroulable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself. Locke.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate. Judith, xi. 14.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addison on Italy.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself. Acts.

To LI'CENSE.† v. a. [licencier, Fr.]

1. To permit by a legal grant.

There must be licensing dancers, that no gesture, motion, or deportment, be taught our youth, but what by their allowance shall be thought honest! — The lutes, the violins, the guitars, — must not be suffered to prattle as they do, but must be licensed what they may say. Milton, Areopagitica.

Wit's titans brav'd the skies,
And the press groan'd with licens'd blasphemies. Pope.

2. To dismiss; to send away. Not in use.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he listed he could license his thoughts. Wotton.

LI'CENSER.† n. s. [from license.] A granter of permission; commonly a tool of power.

It will ask more than the work of twenty licensers to examine all the lutes, the violins, and the guitars, in every house. Milton, Areopagitica.

It seems probable that these eight verses were suppressed by Thomas Norton, Sackville's supposed assistant in the play, who was not only an active and I believe a sensible puritan, but a licencer of the publication of books under the commission of the bishop of London. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 370.

LICE'NTIATE.† n. s. [licentiatus, low Lat.]

1. A man who uses license. Not in use.

The licentiates somewhat licentiously, lest they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter, if the sense fall aptly. Camden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of a licentiate or master in this faculty. Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. A term applied to those who receive, in our own country, licences from the college of physicians to practise in the faculty of medicine.

The college of physicians, in July 1687, published an edict, requiring all the fellows, candidates, and licentiates, to give gratuitous advice to the neighbouring poor. Johnson, Life of Garth.

To LICE'NTIATE. v. a. [licentier, Fr.] To permit; to encourage by license.

We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse. L'Estrange.

LICE'NTIOUS. adj. [licencieux, French; licentiosus, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages' pride, like corn-fed steed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat swoln encrease,
To all licentious lust, and gan exceed
The measure of her mean, and natural first need.
Spenser, F. Q.

How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate? Shakspeare.

2. Presumptuous; unconfined.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course. Roscommon.

LICE'NTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.] With too much liberty; without just restraint.

The licentiates, somewhat licentiously, will pardon themselves. Camden, Rem.

LICE'NTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from licentious.] Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Ralegh.

This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty. Swift.

During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.

LICH.* adj. [lic, Sax. similis.] Like; resembling; equal. Obsolete.

Anon he let two cofres make
Of one semblance, and of one make,
So lich, that no lif thilke throwe,
That one may fro that other knowe. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.
[He] rather joy'd to be than seemen sich,
For both to be and seeme to him was labour lich.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 29.

LICH. n. s. [lice, Sax.] A dead carcase; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve, magna, parens! Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LI'CHEN.* n. s. [lichen, Fr.] Liverwort. Miller.

I observed nothing but several curious lichens, and plenty of gale (or Dutch myrtle) perfuming the borders of the lake. Gray's Letters.

LI'CHOWL. n. s. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretel death.

LI'CIT.* adj. [licitus, Lat.] Lawful.

A just and licit thing. Port Royal, Gr. Primitives, p. 150.

LI'CITLY.* adv. [from licit.] Lawfully.

The question may be licitly discussed.
Throckmorton's Considerations, p. 38.

LI'CITNESS.* n. s. [from licit.] Lawfulness.

To LICK. v. a. [liccian, Saxon; lecken, Dutch.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.

Æsculapius went about with a dog and she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs. Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.
He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews. Dryden.

I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste. Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; but let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. To LICK up. To devour.

Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass. Numb. xxii. 4.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,
Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself;
Think how posterity will treat thy name. Pope, Hor.

LICK.* n. s. [from the verb.] A wash; what is smeared over. Not in use.

My face, which you behold so flaming red, is done over with ladies' licks. Transl. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 233.

To LICK.* v. a. [laegga, Su. Goth. to strike.] To beat. Common, as a colloquial expression, in many parts of England.

LICK.† n. s. [from the preceding verb, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed.] A blow; rough usage: a low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chafed boar, and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LI'CKER.* n. s. [from lick; Fr. licheur.] One who licks or laps up. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

LI'CKERISH.† } LI'CKEROUS. } adj. [liccepa, a glutton, Saxon. This seems to be the proper way of spelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor. Dr. Johnson. — An old form of writing it is also licorous, and licorish; as, in Huloet's old dictionary, and by Cornwallis in his Notes on Seneca, 1601. See also LICKERISHNESS.]

1. Nice in the choice of food.

The liquorous palate of the glutton ranges through seas and lands for uncouth delicacies. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfaction to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager not with hunger but gust.

It is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Strephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know,
That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;
But lickerous, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sidney.

Certain rare manuscripts, sought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits, liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Wotton.

In vain he proferr'd all his goods to save
His body, destin'd to that living grave;
The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,
And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.

In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite. This sense I doubt.

Some burst with the plenty and abundance they have, and would sell paradise out of hand for a lickerous morsel.
Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 36.

Would'st thou seek again to trap me here
With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton, Comus.

LI'CKERISHNESS.† } LI'CKEROUSNESS. } LI'COROUSNESS. } n. s. [from lickerish, and lickerous.] Niceness of palate; daintiness of taste.
Barret, and Sherwood.

As earnestlie to desyre delycate thinges, is a poynte of lycorishnesse; so to refuse thinges usuall and profitable, is madnesse. Woolton, Christian Manual, (1576,) sign. H. iii. b.

LI'CKERISHLY.* } adv. [from lickerish.] Daintily;
LI'COROUSLY. } deliciously.
Gloss. Urry's Chaucer.

LI'CORICE. n. s. [γλυκύῤῥιζα; liquoricia, Italian.] A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taste sweeter than sugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill, Materia Medica.

LI'CTOR. n. s. [Latin.] A beadle that attends the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Proconsuls to their provinces
Hasting, or on return, in robes of state,
Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milton, P. R.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake
His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;
Though in his country-town no lictors were,
Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden, Juv.

LID. n. s. [hliѣ, Saxon; lied, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; any stopple that covers the mouth, but not enters it.

Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,
Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Our eyes have lids, our ears still ope we keep. Davies.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,
As any muse's tongue could speak;
When from its lid a pearly tear
Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes
To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
And drive departed souls to Styx:
That rod was just a type of Sid's,
Which o'er a British senate's lids
Could scatter opium full as well,
And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. s. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach. Shakspeare.

All liquid things concocted by heat become yellow; as, lye, wort, &c. Peacham on Drawing.

LIE. n. s. [lıȝe, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

— Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

A lye is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lye. South.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lye, than the will can chuse an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his errour; this is the primary idea: but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts, Logick.

2. A charge of falsehood: to give the lie, is a formulary phrase.

That lie shall lye so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge;
Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous.

The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply;
The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

To LIE.† v. n. [leoȝan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch; liuga, Su. Goth. "consent. reliquis dialect. Celto-Scythicis." Serenius. Ben Jonson, in his English Grammar, observes, under the letter y, that "we usually difference to lye, or feign, from to lie along, by the use of the y:" a distinction, which has very commonly been made, and which, though not here adopted by Dr. Johnson, seems, as Mr. Nares has remarked, an useful one.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, He lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakspeare, Othello.

If a soul lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore. Leviticus.

Should I lye against my right? Job, xxxiv. 6.

2. To exhibit false representation.

Inform us, will the emp'ror treat?
Or do the prints and paper lie? Swift.

To LIE. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lien. [lıeȝan, Saxon; liggen, Dutch.]

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

2. To rest; to press upon.

Death lies on her like an untimely shower
Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shakspeare.

Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee. Epitaph on Vanbrugh.

3. To be reposited in the grave.

All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house. Isa. xiv. 18.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in your burying place. Gen. xlvii. 30.

4. To be in a state of decumbiture.

How many good young princes would do so; their fathers lying so sick as yours at this time is. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

My little daughter lieth at the point of death; I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed. St. Mark.

5. To pass the time of sleep.

The watchful traveller,
That by the moon's mistaken light did rise,
Lay down again, and clos'd his weary eyes. Dryden.

Forlorn he must, and persecuted fly;
Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

6. To be laid up or reposited.

I have seen where copperas is made great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

7. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lien at their hearts. Temple.

8. To reside.

If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. Gen. iv. 7.

9. To be placed or situated with respect to something else.

Deserts, where there lay no way. Wisdom.

I fly
To those happy climes that lie,
Where day never shuts his eye. Milton, Comus.

There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryden.

Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Collier of Envy.

The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea. Locke.

10. To press upon afflictively.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Psalms.

He that commits a sin shall find
The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind,
Though bribes or favour shall assert his cause. Creech.

Shew the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Leonora. Addison.

11. To be troublesome or tedious.

Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least what lay upon their hands, in chemistry, it cannot be denied but princes may pass their time advantageously that way. Temple.

I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands. Addison, Guardian.

12. To be judicially imputed.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakspeare.

13. To be in any particular state.

If money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakspeare.

The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth. Isaiah.

The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still. Exodus.

Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

14. To be in a state of concealment.

Many things in them lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight. Locke.

15. To be in prison.

Your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

16. To be in a bad state.

Why will you lie pining and pinching yourself in such a lonesome, starving course of life? L'Estrange, Fab.

The generality of mankind lie pecking at one another, till one by one they are all torn to pieces. L'Estrange, Fab.

Are the gods to do your drudgery, and you lie bellowing with your finger in your mouth? L'Estrange, Fab.

17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.

To see a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion. Collier.

It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man, lying under a sharp fit of the stone for a week, receives from this fine sentence. Tillotson, Serm.

As a man should always be upon his guard against the vices to which he is most exposed, so we should take a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct. Addison, Freeholder.

The maintenance of the clergy is precarious, and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be defrauded. Swift.

18. To consist.

The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.
—It lies much in your holding up. Shakspeare.

He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour, forgets the early rising, and hard riding of huntsmen. Locke.

19. To be in the power; to belong to.

Do'st thou endeavour, as much as in thee lies, to preserve the lives of all men? Duppa, Rules for Devotion.

He shews himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it, as much as in him lies. Stillingfleet on Idolatry.

Mars is the warrior's god, in him it lies
On whom he favours to confer the prize. Dryden.

20. To be valid in a court of judicature: as, an action lieth against one.

21. To cost; as, it lies me in more money.

22. To Lie at. To importune; to teaze.

23. To Lie by. To rest; to remain still.

Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by;
In sweet musick is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or hearing die. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

24. To Lie down. To rest; to go into a state of repose.

The leopard shall lie down with the kid. Isa. xi. 6.

The needy shall lie down in safety. Isa. xiv. 30.

25. To Lie down. To sink into the grave.

His bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust. Job, xx. 11.

26. To Lie in. To be in childbed.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to lie in and sleep, or to louse themselves in the sun-shine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser on Ireland.

You confine yourself most unreasonably. Come; you must go visit the lady that lies in. Shakspeare, Coriol.

She had lain in, and her right breast had been apostemated. Wiseman, Surgery.

When Florimel design'd to lie privately in;
She chose with such prudence her pangs to conceal,
That her nurse, nay her midwife, scarce heard her once squeal. Prior.

Hysterical affections are contracted by accidents in lying in. Arbuthnot on Diet.

27. To Lie under. To be subject to; to be oppressed by.

A generous person will lie under a great disadvantage. Smalridge, Serm.

Europe lay then under a deep lethargy, and was no otherwise to be rescued but by one that would cry mightily. Atterbury.

28. To Lie upon. To become the matter of obligation or duty.

These are not places merely of favour, the charge of souls lies upon them; the greatest account whereof will be required at their hands. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

It should lie upon him to make out how matter, by undirected motion, could at first necessarily fall, without ever erring or miscarrying, into such a curious formation of human bodies. Bentley, Serm.

29. To Lie with. To converse in bed.

Pardon me, Bassanio,
For by this ring she lay with me. Shakspeare.

30. It may be observed of this word in general, that it commonly implies something of sluggishness, inaction, or steadiness, applied to persons; and some gravity or permanency of condition, applied to things.

Lief.† adj. [leoꝼ, Saxon; written by our old authors, leef, and lefe. See Leef, and Lever. Lief, however, follows the form of the Goth. liubs, and the Germ. lief, which signify beloved.] Dear; beloved. Obsolete.

My liefest lord she thus beguiled had,
For he was flesh; all flesh doth frailty breed. Spenser, F. Q.

You, with the rest,
Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;
And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
My liefest liege to be mine enemy. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Lief. adv. Willingly: now used only in familiar speech.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

LIEGE. adj. [lige, French; ligio, Italian; ligius, low Lat.]

1. Bound by some feudal tenure; subject: whence liegeman for subject.

2. Sovereign. [This signification seems to have accidently risen from the former, the lord of liege men, being by mistake called liege lord.]

Did not the whole realm acknowledge Henry for their king and liege lord? Spenser on Ireland.

My lady liege, said he,
What all your sex desire is sovereignty. Dryden.

So much of it as is founded on the law of nature, may be stiled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God our liege lord, so as to act in all things according to his will. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

Liege. n. s. Sovereign; superiour lord; scarcely in use.

O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke. Shakspeare.
The other part reserv'd I by consent,
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt. Shakspeare.
The natives, dubious whom
They must obey, in consternation wait
Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege. Philips.

Li'egeman. n. s. [from liege and man.] A subject: not in use.

This liegeman gan to wax more bold,
And when he felt the folly of his lord,
In his own kind, he gan himself unfold. Spenser, F. Q.

Sith then the ancestors of those that now live, yielded themselves then subjects and liegemen, shall it not tye their children to the same subjection? Spenser on Ireland.

Stand, ho! who is there?
—Friends to this ground, and liegemen to the Dane. Shakspeare.

Li'eger. n. s. [more proper legier, or ledger.] A resident ambassadour.

His passions and his fears
Lie liegers for you in his breast, and there
Negotiate your affairs. Denham, Sophy.

Li'en, the participle of lie.

One of the people might lightly have lien with thy wife. Gen. xxvi. 10.

Liente'rick. adj. [from lientery.] Pertaining to a lientery.

There are many medicinal preparations of iron, but none equal to the tincture made without acids; especially in obstructions, and to strengthen the tone of the parts; as in lienterick and other like cases. Grew, Museum.

Li'entery. n. s. [from λεῖον, læve, smooth, and ἔντερον, intestinum, gut; lienterie, French.] A particular looseness, or diarrhœa, wherein the food passes so suddenly through the stomach and guts, as to be thrown out by stool with little or no alteration. Quincy.

Li'er. n. s. [from to lie.] One that rests or lies down; or remains concealed.

There were liers in ambush against him behind the city. Jos. viii. 14.

LIEU. n. s. [French.] Place; room: it is only used with in: in lieu, instead.

God, of his great liberality, had determined, in lieu of man's endeavours, to bestow the same by the rule of that justice which best beseemeth him. Hooker.

In lieu of such an increase of dominion, it is our business to extend our trade. Addison, Freeholder.

Lieve. adv. [See Lief.] Willingly.

Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town crier had spoke my lines. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Action is death to some sort of people, and they would as lieve hang as work. L'Estrange.

Lieute'nancy. n. s. [lieutenance, French; from lieutenant.]

1. The office of a lieutenant.

If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenancy, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft. Shakspeare, Othello.

2. The body of lieutenants.

The list of undisputed masters, is hardly so long as the list of the lieutenancy of our metropolis. Felton on the Classicks.

LIEUTE'NANT.† n. s. [lieutenant, French.]

1. A deputy; one who acts by vicarious authority.

Exhibiting himselfe into the handes of Christes vicar or lieutenaunt. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) N. iv. b.

Whither away so fast?
—No farther than the tower,
We'll enter all together,
And in good time here the lieutenant comes. Shakspeare.

I must put you in mind of the lords lieutenants, and deputy lieutenants, of the counties: their proper use is for ordering the military affairs, in order to oppose an invasion from abroad, or a rebellion or sedition at home. Bacon.

Killing, as it is considered in itself without all undue circumstances, was never prohibited to the lawful magistrate, who is the vicegerent or lieutenant of God, from whom he derives his power of life and death. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Sent by our new lieutenant, who in Rome,
And since from me, has heard of your renown:
I come to offer peace. Philips, Briton.

2. In war, one who holds the next rank to a superiour of any denomination; as, a general has his lieutenant generals, a colonel his lieutenant colonel, and a captain simply his lieutenant.

It were meet that such captains only were employed as have formerly served in that country, and been at least lieutenants there. Spenser on Ireland.

According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship. Wotton.

The earl of Essex was made lieutenant general of the army; the most popular man of the kingdom, and the darling of the sword men. Clarendon.

His lieutenant, engaging against his positive orders, being beaten by Lysander, Alcibiades was again banished. Swift.

Canst thou so many gallant soldiers see,
And captains and lieutenants slight for me? Gay.

Lieute'nantship.† n. s. [from lieutenant.] The rank or office of lieutenant.

Though we should graunt him the lieutenantship he pretendeth to have. Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 405.

LIFE.† n. s. plural lives. [lıꝼ, lẏꝼ, Saxon; lıꝼıan, to live.]

1. Union and co-operation of soul with body; vitality; animation, opposed to an inanimate state.

On thy life no more.
—My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thy foes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
She shews a body rather than a life,
A statue than a breather. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Gen. i. 20.

The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

2. Present state; as distinct from other parts of human existence.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for t'other!

Dream of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,
Is more a solid thing than thou!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities;
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,
But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.
When I consider life 'tis all a cheat,
Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lies more; and when it says we shall be blest,
With some new joy, takes off what we possest.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give:
I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.
Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind
Through life's perverse meanders errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.
So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And steal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.

3. Enjoyment, or possession of existence, as opposed to death.

Then avarice gan through his veins to inspire
His greedy flames, and kindle life devouring fire. Spenser, F. Q.
Their complot is to have my life:
And, if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness. Shakspeare.
Nor love thy life nor hate; but what thou liv'st
Live well, how long or short permit to heaven. Milton, P. L.

He entreated me not to take his life, but exact a sum of money. Broome on the Odyssey.

4. Blood, the supposed vehicle of life.

His gushing entrails smok'd upon the ground,
And the warm life came issuing through the wound. Pope.

5. Conduct; manner of living with respect to virtue or vice.

His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might
Be wrong, his life I'm sure was in the right. Cowley.
Henry and Edward, brightest sons of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;
After a life of glorious toils endur'd,
Clos'd their long glories with a sigh. Pope.

I'll teach my family to lead good lives. Mrs. Barker.

6. Condition; manner of living with respect to happiness and misery.

Such was the life the frugal Sabines led;
So Remus and his brother god were bred. Dryden, Virg.

7. Continuance of our present state: as, half his life was spent in study.

Some have not any clear ideas all their lives. Locke.

Untam'd and fierce the tyger still remains,
And tires his life with biting on his chains. Prior.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison on Italy.

8. The living form: opposed to copies.

That is the best part of beauty which a picture cannot express, no, nor the first sight of the life. Bacon, Ess.

Let him visit eminent persons of great name abroad, that he may tell how the life agreeth with the fame. Bacon.

He that would be a master, must draw by the life as well as copy from originals, and join theory and experience together. Collier of the Entertainment of Books.

9. Exact resemblance: with to before it.

I believe no character of any person was ever better drawn, to the life than this. Denham.

Rich carvings, portraiture, and imagery,
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The godhead's power. Dryden, Kn. Tale.
He saw in order painted on the wall
The wars that fame around the world had blown,
All to the life, and ev'ry leader known. Dryden, Æn.

10. General state of man.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare!
Unmindful of their Maker. Milton, P. L.
All that cheers or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

11. Common occurrences; human affairs; the course of things.

This I know, not only by reading of books in my study, but also by experience of life abroad in the world. Ascham.

Not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtile; but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton, P. L.

12. Living person.

Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On my own sword? whilst I see lives the gashes
Do better upon them. Shakspeare, Macbeth

13. Narrative of a life past.

Plutarch, that writes his life,
Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife. Pope.

14. Spirit; briskness; vivacity; resolution.

The Helots bent thitherward with a new life of resolution, as if their captain had been a root out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words; and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is as good oratory and poetry to them as the best. Felton.

Not with half the fire and life,
With which he kiss'd Amphytrion's wife. Prior.

15. Animal, animated existence; animal being.

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson.

16. System of animal nature.

Lives through all life. Pope.

17. Life is also used of vegetables, and whatever grows and decays.

LI'FEBLOOD. n. s. [life and blood.] The blood necessary to life; the vital blood.

This sickness doth infect
The very lifeblood of our enterprise. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
How could'st thou drain the lifeblood of the child? Shakspeare.
His forehead struck the ground,
Lifeblood and life rush'd mingled through the wound. Dryden.

They loved with that calm and noble value which dwells in the heart, with a warmth like that of lifeblood. Spectator.

Money, the lifeblood of the nation,
Corrupts and stagnates in the veins,
Unless a proper circulation,
Its motion and its heat maintains. Swift.

LI'FEBLOOD.* adj. Necessary as the blood to life; vital; essential.

To set at nought and trample under foot all the most sacred and lifeblood laws, statutes, and acts of parliament. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

LIFEEVERLA'STING. An herb. Ainsworth.

LI'FEGIVING. adj. [life and giving.] Having the power to give life.

His own heat,
Kindled at first from heaven's lifegiving fire. Spenser.
He sat devising death
To them who liv'd; nor on the virtue thought
Of that lifegiving plant. Milton, P. L.

LI'FEGUARD.† n. s. [life and guard.] The guard of a king's person.

Such a noble and useful courage, as will render you a lifeguard to your prince, a wall and bulwark to your country, and make your famous artillery-ground a sanctuary to your city. Scott, Serm. before the Artill. Comp. (1680.)

LI'FELESS.† adj. [lıfleaſ, Saxon.]

1. Dead; deprived of life.

I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier. Prior.

2. Unanimated; void of life.

Was I to have never parted from thy side?
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib! Milton, P. L.
Thus began

The power which produces their motions, springs from something without themselves: if this power were suspended, they would become a lifeless, unactive heap of matter. Cheyne.

And empty words she gave, and sounding strain,
But senseless, lifeless! idol void and vain. Pope.

3. Wanting power, force, or spirit.

Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end. Shakspeare.
Unknowing to command, proud to obey
A lifeless king, a royal shade I lay. Prior.

4. Wanting or deprived of physical energy.

The other victor-flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood. Dryden.

LI'FELESSLY. adv. [from lifeless.] Without vigour; frigidly; jejunely.

Jordain talked prose all his life-time, without knowing what it was. Addison on Medals.

LIFEWE'ARY. adj. [life and weary.] Wretched; tired of living.

Let me have
A dram of poison, such soon speeding geer
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the lifeweary taker may fall dead. Shakspeare.

To LIFT.✝ v. a. I lifted, or lift; I have lifted, or lift. [lyffta, Swedish; loffter, Danish; levo, Latin, to lift or hold up; hence a lever, that which lifts up: but perhaps our word may be referred to the Sax. lyft, the air. See also LOFT, and ALOFT.]

1. To raise from the ground; to heave; to elevate; to hold on high.

Filial ingratitude!
Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand
For lifting food to't? Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Your guests are coming;
Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial. Shakspeare Wint. Tale.
Propp'd by the spring, it lifts aloft the head,
But of a sickly beauty soon to shed,
In summer living, and in winter dead. Dryden.

2. To bear; to support. Not in use.

So down he fell, that th' earth him underneath
Did groan, as feeble so great load to lift. Spenser, F. Q.

3. To rob; to plunder. Whence the term shoplifter. [hliftus, Gothick, a thief. See also the neuter verb, and the substantive LIFTER.]

So weary bees in little cells repose,
But if night robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.

4. To exalt; to elevate mentally.

His heart was lift up in the ways of the Lord. 2 Chron.
Of Orpheus now no more let poets tell,
To bright Cæcilia greater pow'r is given,
His numbers rais'd a shade from hell,
Hers lift the soul to heaven. Pope.

5. To raise in fortune.

The eye of the Lord lifted up his head from misery. Ecclus.

6. To raise in estimation.

7. To exalt in dignity.

See to what a godlike height
The Roman virtues lift up mortal man! Addison, Cato.

8. To elevate; to swell, as with pride.

Lifted up with pride. Tim. iii. 6.

Our successes have been great, and our hearts have been too much lifted up by them, so that we have reason to humble ourselves. Atterbury.

9. Up is sometimes emphatically added to lift.

He lift up his spear against eight hundred, whom he slew at one time. 2 Sam. xxiii. 8.

Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand. Genesis.

To LIFT.✝ v. n.

1. To strive to raise by strength.

Pinch cattle of pasture while summer doth last,
And lift at their tailes ere a winter be past. Tusser.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken. Locke.

2. To practise theft.

One other peculiar virtue you possess, in lifting, or legier-du-main! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

LIFT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The manner of lifting.

In the lift of the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees. Bacon.

In races, it is not the large stride, or high lift, that makes the speed. Bacon, Ess.

2. The act of lifting.

The goat gives the fox a lift, and out he springs. L'Estrange.

3. Effort; struggle. Dead lift is an effort to raise what with the whole force cannot be moved; and figuratively any state of impotence and inability.

Myself and Trulla made a shift
To help him out at a dead lift. Hudibras.
Mr. Doctor had puzzled his brains
In making a ballad, but was at a stand:
And you freely must own, you were at a dead lift. Swift.

4. Lift, in Scotland, denotes a load or surcharge of any thing; as also, if one be disguised much with liquor, they say, He has got a great lift.

5. [In Scottish.] The sky; for in a starry night they say, How clear the lift is!

6. Lifts of a sail are ropes to raise or lower them at pleasure.

LI'FTING.✱ n. s. [from lift.] The act of lifting; assistance.

I cannot forbear doing that author the justice of my publick acknowledgements for the great helps, and liftings, I had out of his incomparable piece, while I was penning this treatise. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 5.

To LIG.✝ v. n. [Goth. ligan, Sax. liȝan, liȝan, Germ. ligen, Dan. ligge, Dutch, liggen.] To lie. Still used in our northern counties.

What hounds liggen on the floor adoun. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Thou kenst the great care
I have of thy health and thy welfare,
Which many wild beasts liggen in wait
For to entrap in thy tender state. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
Vowing that never he in bed againe
His limbs would rest, ne lig in ease embost,
Till that his lady's sight he mote attaine. Spenser, F. Q.

LI'GAMENT. n. s. [ligamentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, French.]

Ligament is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any sense, lest they should suffer upon the motion of the joint: their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, lest they should be dislocated with exercise. Quincy.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sandys.

The incus is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes. Holder.

2. [In popular or poetical language.] Any thing which connects the parts of the body.

Though our ligaments betimes grow weak,
We must not force them till themselves they break. Denham.

3. Bond; chain; entanglement.

Men sometimes, upon the hour of departure, do speak and reason above themselves; for then the soul, beginning to be freed from the ligaments of the body, reasons like herself, and discourses in a strain above mortality. Addison, Spect.

LIGAME'NTAL. } n. s. [from ligament.] Composing LIGAME'NTOUS. } a ligament.

The urachos or ligamental passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it dischargeth the watery and urinary part of its aliment. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The clavicle is inserted into the first bone of the sternon, and bound in by a strong ligamentous membrane. Wiseman.

LIGA'TION.† n. s. [ligatio, Latin.]

1. The act of binding.

2. The state of being bound.

This ligation of senses proceeds from an inhibition of spirits, the way being stopped by which they should come. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 24.

There is a peculiar religion attends friendship; there is, according to the etymology of the word, a ligation and solemn tie, the rescinding whereof may be truly called a schism. Howell, Lett. ii. 46.

Sleep, if perfect and sound, is the ligation of all the senses. Smith on Old Age, p. 101.

The slumber of the body seems to be but the waking of the soul: it is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason. Addison.

LI'GATURE. n. s. [ligature, French; ligatura, Latin.]

1. Any thing tied round another; bandage.

He deludeth us also by philters, ligatures, charms, and many superstitious ways in the cure of diseases. Brown.

If you slit the artery, and thrust into it a pipe, and cast a strait ligature upon that part of the artery; notwithstanding the blood hath free passage through the pipe, yet will not the artery beat below the ligature; but do but take off the ligature, it will beat immediately. Ray on Creation.

The many ligatures of our English dress check the circulation of the blood. Spectator.

I found my arms and legs very strongly fastened on each side to the ground; I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my arm-pits to my thighs. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. The act of binding.

The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his face. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropsy, as by strong ligature or compression. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. The state of being bound. Not very proper.

Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LIGHT.† n. s. [leoht. Sax. from leohtan, to light, viz. the third person singular, leohð. Mr. H. Tooke. But it is the Goth. liuhath, or liuhats, whence also the Germ. lioht, Dutch licht, and the Sax. liht, leoht. Serenius notices the Icel. light, likt; and deduces it from hloa, to shine.]

1. That material medium of sight; that body by which we see; luminous matter.

Light is propagated from luminous bodies in time, and spends about seven or eight minutes of an hour in passing from the sun to the earth. Newton, Opticks.

2. State of the elements, in which things become visible: opposed to darkness.

God called the light day; and the darkness he called night. Genesis.

So alike thou driv'st away
Light and darkness, night and day. Carew.

3. Power of perceiving external objects by the eye: opposed to blindness.

My strength faileth me; as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me. Psalms.

If it be true
That light is in the soul,
She all in every part; why was the sight
To such a tender ball as the eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd;
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore. Milton, S. A.

4. Day.

The murderer rising with the light killeth the poor. Job.

Ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise

5. Life.

Infants that never saw light. Job.

Swift roll the years, and rise the expected morn,
O spring to light, auspicious babe be born! Pope.

6. Artificial illumination.

Seven lamps shall give light. Numbers.

7. Illumination of mind; instruction; knowledge.

Of those things which are for direction of all the parts of our life needful, and not impossible to be discerned by the light of nature itself, are there not many which few men's natural capacity hath been able to find out? Hooker.

Light may be taken from the experiment of the horse-tooth ring, how that those things which assuage the strife of the spirits, do help diseases contrary to the intention desired. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I will place within them as a guide
My umpire conscience, whom if they will hear
Light after light well us'd they shall attain,

I opened Ariosto in Italian, and the very first two lines gave me light to all I could desire. Dryden.

If internal light, or any proposition which we take for inspired, be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it. Locke.

The ordinary words of language, and our common use of them, would have given us light into the nature of our ideas, if considered with attention. Locke.

The books of Varro concerning navigation are lost, which no doubt would have given us great light in those matters. Arbuthnot on Coins.

8. The part of a picture which is drawn with bright colours, or in which the light is supposed to fall.

Never admit two equal lights in the same picture; but the greater light must strike forcibly on those places of the picture where the principal figures are; diminishing as it comes nearer the borders. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

9. Reach of knowledge; mental view.

Light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him. Dan. v. 11.

We saw as it were thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South Sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents that hitherto were not come to light. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They have brought to light not a few profitable experiments. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

10. Point of view; situation; direction in which the light falls.

Frequent consideration of a thing wears off the strangeness of it; and shews it in its several lights, and various ways of appearance, to the view of the mind. South.

It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider any thing in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights. Spectator.

An author who has not learned the art of ranging his thoughts, and setting them in proper lights, will lose himself in confusion. Addison, Spect.

11. Publick view; publick notice.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light;
Heavens! was I born for nothing but to write? Pope.

12. The publick.

Grave epistles bringing vice to light,
Such as a king might read, a bishop write. Pope.

13. Explanation.

I have endeavoured, throughout this discourse, that every former part might give strength unto all that follow, and every latter bring some light unto all before. Hooker.

We should compare places of Scripture treating of the same point: thus one part of the sacred text could not fail to give light unto another. Locke, Ess. on St. Paul's Epistles.

14. Any thing that gives light; a pharos; a taper; any luminous body.

That light we see is burning in my hall;
How far that little candle throws his beams,
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shakspeare.

Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and fell down before Paul. Acts, xvi. 29.

I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Acts, xiii. 47.

Let them be for signs,
For seasons, and for days, and circling years;
And let them be for lights, as I ordain
Their office in the firmament of heaven,
To give light on the earth. Milton, P. L.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and a meteor. Glanville.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt because they stand so thick i' the sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

I will make some offers at their safety, by fixing some marks like lights upon a coast, by which their ships may avoid at least known rocks. Temple.

He still must mourn
The sun, and moon, and every starry light,
Eclips'd to him, and lost in everlasting night. Prior.

LIGHT.† adj. [lıht, Saxon.]

1. Not tending to the centre with great force; not heavy.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

These weights did not exert their natural gravity till they were laid in the golden balance, insomuch that I could not guess which was light or heavy whilst I held them in my hand. Addison, Spect.

2. Not burdensome; easy to be worn, or carried, or lifted; not onerous.

Horse, oxen, plough, tumbrel, cart, waggon, and wain,
The lighter and stronger the greater thy gaine. Tusser.

It will be light, that you may bear it
Under a cloke that is of any length. Shakspeare.

A king that would not feel his crown too heavy, must wear it every day; but if he think it too light, he knoweth not of what metal it is made. Bacon, Ess.

3. Not afflictive; easy to be endured.

Every light and common thing incident into any part of man's life. Hooker.

Light sufferings give us leisure to complain,
We groan, but cannot speak, in greater pain. Dryden.

4. Easy to be performed; not difficult.

What is lightere to seye to the syk man in palesye, sinnes be forghivn to thee; or to seye, rise, take thy bed and walke? Wicliffe, St. Mark, ii.

Well pleas'd were all his friends, the task was light,
The father, mother, daughter, they invite. Dryden.

5. Easy to be acted on by any power.

Apples of a ripe flavour, fresh and fair,
Mellow'd by winter from their cruder juice,
Light of digestion now, and fit for use. Dryden, Juv.

6. Not heavily armed.

Paulus Bachitius, with a company of light horsemen, lay close in ambush, in a convenient place for that purpose. Knolles.

7. Active; nimble.

12. Gay; airy; wanting dignity or solidity; trifling.

Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. Shakspeare.

Forgive
If fictions light I mix with truth divine,
And fill these lines with other praise than thine. Fairfax.

13. Not chaste; not regular in conduct.

Let me not be light,
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakspeare.

I have spent some evenings among the men of wit of that profession [the clergy] with an inexpressible delight. Their habitual care of their character gives such a chastisement to their fancy, that all which they utter in company is as much above what you meet with in other conversation, as the charms of a modest are superiour to those of a light woman. Tatler, No. 270.

14. [From light, n. s.] Bright; clear.

As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away. Gen. xliv. 3.

The horses ran up and down with their tails and mains on a light fire. Knolles.

15. Not dark; tending to whiteness.

In painting, the light and a white colour are but one and the same thing: no colour more resembles the air than white, and by consequence no colour which is lighter. Dryden.

Two cylindric bodies with annular sulci, found with sharks' teeth, and other shells, in a light coloured clay. Woodward.

LIGHT. adv. [for lightly, by colloquial corruption.] Lightly; cheaply.

Thus, in all likelihood, would it be with a libertine, who should have a visit from the other world: the first horror it raised would go off, as new diversions come on. Atterbury.

LI'KELY.† adj. [from like.]

1. Such as may be liked; such as may please.

These young companions make themselves believe they love at the first looking of a likely beauty. Sidney.

Sir John, they are your likeliest men; I would have you served with the best. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Those argent fields more likely habitants,
Translated saints and middle spirits hold
Betwixt the angelical and human kind. Milton, P. L.

2. Probable; such as may in reason be thought or believed; such as may be thought more reasonably than the contrary: as, a likely story, that is, a credible story.

It seems likely that he was in hope of being busy and conspicuous. Johnson, Life of Otway.

LI'KELY. adv. Probably; as may reasonably be thought.

While man was innocent, he was likely ignorant of nothing that imported him to know. Glanville, Scepsis.

To LI'KEN. v. a. [from like.] To represent as having resemblance; to compare.

The prince broke your head for likening him to a singing man of Windsor. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

For who, though with the tongue
Of angels, can relate? or to what things
Liken on earth conspicuous, that may lift
Human imagination to such heighth
Of God-like power? Milton, P. L.

LI'KENESS.† n. s. [from like. Sax. lıcneꞅꞅe.]

1. Representation; parable; comparison.

He seide to them, sothely ye schal seye to me this likenesse, leche, heale thyself. Wicliffe, St. Luke, iv.

2. Resemblance; similitude.

They all do live, and moved are
To multiply the likeness of their kind. Spenser.

A translator is to make his author appear as charming as he can, provided he maintains his character, and makes him not unlike himself. Translation is a kind of drawing after the life, where there is a double sort of likeness, a good one and a bad one. Dryden.

There will be found a better likeness, and a worse; and the better is constantly to be chosen. Dryden.

3. Form; appearance.

Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain. Shakspeare.

It is safer to stand upon our guard against an enemy in the likeness of a friend, than to embrace any man for a friend in the likeness of an enemy. L'Estrange.

4. One who resembles another; a copy; a counterpart.

Poor Cupid, sobbing, scarce could speak,
Indeed mamma, I did not know ye:
Alas! how easy my mistake?
I took you for your likeness Cloe. Prior.

LI'KEWISE.† adv. [like and wise. "In very ancient style, all the words that are now compounded with wise were uncompounded, and had the preposition. They said 'in like wise' and 'in other wise.' But about the time that our present version of the Scriptures was made, the old usage was wearing out. The phrase 'in like wise' occurs [in this version] but once; (St. Matt. xxi. 24.) which Dr. Johnson has printed likewise, as if one word: whereas the compound term like-wise occurs frequently. We find, in several places, 'on this wise, in any wise, in no wise.' The two first phrases are now obsolete, and the third seems to be in the state which Dr. Johnson calls obsolescent." Campbell, Philosoph. of Rhetorick, i. 380.] In like manner; also; moreover; too.

Jesus said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things. St. Matt. xxi. 24.

So was it in the decay of the Roman empire, and likewise in the empire of Almaigne, after Charles the Great, every bird taking a feather. Bacon, Ess.

Spirit of vitriol poured to pure unmixed serum, coagulates it as if it had been boiled. Spirit of sea-salt makes a perfect coagulation of the serum likewise, but with some different phænomena. Arbuthnot, on Aliments.

LI'KING. adj. [Perhaps because plumpness is agreeable to the sight.] Plump; in a state of plumpness.

I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink; for why should he see your faces worse liking, than the children which are of your sort? Dan. i. 10.

LI'KING.† n. s. [from like.]

1. Good state of body; plumpness.

I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Their young ones are in good liking; they grow up with corn. Job, xxxix. 4.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness; and, being in good liking, were set on a stall when exposed to sale, to shew the good habit of their body. Dryden, Notes to Pers.

2. State of trial.

The royal soul, that, like the labouring moon,
By charms of art was hurried down;
Forc'd with regret to leave her native sphere,
Came but a while on liking here. Dryden.

3. Inclination; desire. [lıcunᵹ, will, Sax.]

Your liking is that I should tel a tale. Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

Why do you longer feed on loathed light,
Or liking find to gaze on earthly mold? Spenser, F. Q.

4. Delight in; pleasure in: with to. [lıcunᵹ, pleasure, Saxon.]

There are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write: and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring of the parts. Dryden.

LI'LACH.† n. s. [lilac, lilâs, French.] A tree.

The white thorn is in leaf, and the lilach tree. Bacon.

The lilac hangs to view
Its bursting gems in clusters blue. T. Warton, Ode 10.

To LILL.* v. a. To put out: used of the tongue. See To LOLL.

Cerberus
His three deformed heads did lay along,
And lilled forth his bloody flaming tong. Spenser, F. Q.

LI'LLIED. adj. [from lily.] Embellished with lilies.

Nymphs and shepherds dance no more
By sandy Ladon's lillied banks. Milton, Arcades.

LILY.† n. s. [lilium, Latin; lılıa, lılıʒe, Saxon. The etymology warrants lily; but, as Mr. Nares has observed, the analogy of our language not only allows us to double a letter, in order to shorten a preceding vowel, but even requires that we should do it; and indeed it was written lilly anciently.]

There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, red lilies, and martagons of various sorts. Miller.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
Almost no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Arnus, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lilly, or flower-de-luce. Peacham on Drawing.

Take but the humblest lily of the field;
And if our pride will to our reason yield;
It must by sure comparison be shown,
That on the regal seat great David's son,
Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r,
Shines with less glory than that simple flow'r. Prior.

LI'LY-DAFFODIL. n. s. [lilio-narcissus.] A foreign flower.

LI'LYHANDED.* adj. [lilly and hand.] Having hands white as the lilly.

The lilly-handed Liagore
Did feele his pulse. Spenser, F. Q.

LI'LY-HYACINTH. n. s. [lilio-hyacinthus.]

It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped like the flower of hyacinth: the roots are scaly, and shaped like those of the lily. There are three species of this plant; one with a blue flower, another white, and a third red. Miller.

LI'LY of the Valley, or May lily. n. s. [lilium convallium.]

The flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a bell, and divided at the top into six segments; the ovary becomes a soft globular fruit, containing several round seeds. It is very common in shady woods. Miller.

Lily of the valley has a strong root that runs into the ground. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LI'LYLIVERED.† adj. [lily and liver.] Whitelivered; cowardly.

A base, lilylivered, action-taking knave. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily-liver'd boy! Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To LILT.* v. n. To do any thing cleverly or quickly. Lancashire, according to Mr. Pegge. The Scotch use lilt in the sense of "singing cheerfully;" and "to lilt and dance" is "to dance with great vivacity." See Dr. Jamieson's Scott. Dict. in V. To LILT. [lulla, Su. Goth. to sing.]

LI'MATURE. n. s. [limatura, Lat.] Filings of any metal; the particles rubbed off by a file.

LIMB.† n. s. [lım, Saxon; lem, Danish; "limr, Icel. membrum; lima, articulatim dissecare." Serenius. Mr. H. Tooke deduces it from the Sax. lımpıan, to belong to.]

1. A member; a jointed or articulated part of animals.

A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
Now am I come each limb to survey,
If thy appearance answer loud report. Milton, S. A.

2. [Limbe, French; limbus, Latin.] An hedge; a border. A philosophical word.

By moving the prisms about, the colours again emerged out of the whiteness, the violet and the blue at its inward limb, and at its outward limb the red and yellow. Newton.

To LIMB. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with limbs.

As they please,
They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size
Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare. Milton, P. L.

2. To tear asunder; to dismember.

LI'MBECK. n. s. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from alembick.] A still.

Her cheeks, on which this streaming nectar fell,
Still'd through the limbeck of her diamond eyes. Fairfax.

Fires of Spain, and the line,
Whose countries limbecks to our bodies be,
Canst thou for gain bear? Donne.

Call up, unbound,
In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Howell.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbecks rise,
It would in richer showers descend again. Dryden.

The warm limbeck draws
Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.

To LI'MBECK.* v. a. [from the noun.] To strain as through a still. An uncommon, and not a good expression. Feltham somewhere also uses it.

The greater do nothing but limbeck their brains in the art of alchumie. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

LI'MBED. adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.

A steer of five years age, large limb'd, and fed,
To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led. Pope, Iliad.

LI'MBER.† adj. [lemper, Danish, to bend to any one's will; lempa, Su. to give way, to yield. Junius and Serenius.] Flexible; easily bent; pliant; lithe.

You put me off with limber vows. Shakspeare.

I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state, Edward Atheling could subsist, being the indubitate heir of the Saxon line: but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear. Wotton.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans
For wings; and smallest lineaments exact
In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride. Milton, P. L.

She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long soft limber ears to defend her. More on Atheism.

The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the œsophagus, very limber. Ray on Creation.

LI'MBERNESS. n. s. [from limber.] Flexibility; pliancy.

LI'MBERS.* n. s. pl. [limar, plur. of lim, Icel. boughs of trees.] In the rustick language of Berkshire, thills or shafts; in military language, two-wheel carriages having boxes for ammunition; and in naval language, limber-holes are little square apertures cut in the timbers of a ship to convey the bilge water to the pump. See LIMMER.

LI'MBLESS.* adj. [lımbleaꝑ, Sax.] Wanting limbs; deprived of limbs.

Lop these legs that bore me
To barbarous violence; with this hand cut off
This instrument of wrong, till nought were left me
But this poor bleeding limbless trunk. Massinger, Renegado.

LI'MBMEAL.* adv. [limb and meal.] Piecemeal; in pieces.

O! that I had her here to tear her limbmeal. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Tears cards limbmeal without regard to age, sex, or quality. Butler, Char. Rem.

LI'MBO.† } n. s. [" Eo quod sit limbus inferorum;"
LI'MBUS. } Du Cange; that is, as if the frontier or margin of the other world.]

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.

I do clearly reject, and esteem as fables, all the limbos of the fathers. Bp. Hooper, Confess. of Chr. Faith, (1584,) § 25.

No, he is in tartar limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel. Shakspeare.

O what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss. Shakspeare.

According to the common doctrine of their church, [the church of Rome,] the souls of pious men were held in a limbus, remote from God, in the borders of hell. Bp. Patrick, Answ. to the Touchstone, p. 179.

All these up-whirl'd aloft
Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
Into a limbo large, and broad, since call'd
The paradise of fools. Milton, P. L.

2. Any place of misery and restraint.

For he no sooner was at large,
But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
And in the self-same limbo put
The knight and squire, where he was shut. Hudibras.

Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo. Dryden. Span. Friar.

LIME.† n. s. [lim, ʒelıman, Saxon, to glue; lijm, Teut. glue.]

1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net or lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows. Shakspeare.

Jollier of this state
Than are new-benefic'd ministers, he throws,
Like nets or lime-twigs, wheresoe'er he goes,
His title of barrister on every wench. Donne.

By this means
I knew the foul enchanter though disguis'd,
Enter'd the very lime-twigs of his spells,
And yet came off. Milton, Comus.

A thrush was taken with a bush of lime-twigs. L'Estrange.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround. Dryden.

Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts
Like nets, or lime-twigs, for rich widows' hearts. Pope.

2. Matter of which mortar is made: so called because used in cement. [lime, Sax. calx.]

There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone. Hill, Mat. Medica.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side. Bacon, Hen. VII.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen prais'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
But all admire Inigo Jones. Swift.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold. Mortimer.

LIME Tree, or LINDEN. n. s. [linb, Saxon, tilia, Lat.]

1. The linden tree.

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footstalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes testiculated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue sound many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one, in Norfolk, sixteen yards in circuit. Miller.

For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

2. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Thomson, Summer.

To LIME.† v. a. [ʒelıman, Sax.]

1. To entangle; to ensnare.

With attendance, and with besinesse,
Ben we ylimed both more and lesse. Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

Oh bosom, black as death!
Oh limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them. Shakspeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush,
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. To smear with lime.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And place a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shakspeare.

Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them. L'Estrange.

3. To cement. This sense is out of use.

I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. To manure ground with lime.

Encouragement that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming. Child.

All sorts of pease love limed or marled land. Mortimer.

LI'MEBURNER.* n. s. [lime and burn.] One who burns stones to lime. Huloet.

LI'MEHOUND.* n. s. [called also lym, limer, or limmer. See LYM, and LIMMER. See also Cotgrave, "limier, a bloodhound." Holme, in his old Academy of Armory, deduces our word limer from the leam or string with which this kind of dog was led. And so in the Gentleman's Recreation: "The string wherewith we lead a grey-hound is called a leace; and that for a hound, a lyme," p. 16.] A limer, or large dog used in hunting the wild boar. Kersey.

But Talus, that could like a limehound wind her,
And all things secrete wisely could bewray,
At length found out, whereas she hidden lay.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 25.

All the limehounds in the city should have drawn after you by the scent. B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

Li'mekiln. n. s. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

The counter gate is as hateful to me, as the reek of a lime kiln. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

They were found in a lime kiln, and having passed the fire, each is a little vitrified. Woodward.

Li'mestone. n. s. [lime and stone.] The stone of which lime is made.

Fire stone and lime stone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Li'me-twig.† See the first sense of Lime.

Li'metwigged.* adj. [from lime and twig.] Smeared with lime; prepared to entangle.

Not to have their consultations lime-twigg'd with quirks and sophisms of philosophical persons.
L. Addison, W. Barbary, (1671,) Pref.

Lime-water. n. s.

Lime-water, made by pouring water upon quick lime, with some other ingredients to take off its ill flavour, is of great service internally in all cutaneous eruptions, and diseases of the lungs.
Hill, Materia Medica.

He tried an experiment on wheat infused in lime water alone, and some in brandy and lime water mixed, and had from each grain a great increase. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Li'mit. n. s. [limite, French; limitor, Latin.] Bound; border; utmost reach.

The whole limit of the mountain round about shall be most holy. Exod. xliii. 12.

We went, great emperor, by thy command,
To view the utmost limits of the land;
Ev'n to the place where no more world is found,
But foaming billows beating on the ground. Dryden.

To Li'mit. v. a. [limiter, French, from the noun.]

1. To confine with certain bounds; to restrain; to circumscribe; not to leave at large.

They tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel.
Psal. lxxviii. 41.

Thanks I must you con, that you
Are thieves profest; for there is boundless theft
In limited professions. Shakspeare, Timon.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch. Swift.

2. To restrain from a lax or general signification: as, the universe is here limited to this earth.

Limita'neous. adj. [from limit.] Belonging to the bounds. Dict.

Li'mitary. adj. [from limit.] Placed at the boundaries as a guard or superintendant.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains,
Proud limitary cherub! Milton, P. L.

Limita'tion.† n. s. [limitation, French; limitatio, Latin.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof. Hooker.

Am I yourself,
But, as it were, in sort of limitation? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir. This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour, who would look for him amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men. Locke.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; if he afterwards consent to limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure. Swift.

2. Confinement from a lax or undeterminate import.

The cause of error is ignorance, what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable. Hooker.

3. Limited time.

You have stood your limitation, and the tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. A certain precinct, in which friars were allowed to beg, or exercise their function.

Some [pulpits] have not had foure sermons these fifteene or sixteene yeares, since friers left their limitations.
Bp. Gilpin, Serm. before K. Edward VI. p. 25.

Li'mitedly.* adv. [from limited.] With limitation.

Some person or number of persons were vested with a sovereign authority, subordinate to our Lord, to be managed in a certain manner, either absolutely according to pleasure, or limitedly according to certain rules.
Barrow, Unity of the Church.

Li'miter.* n. s. [from limit.]

1. One who restrains within certain bounds; that which circumscribes.

Calling the same god "Jovem terminalem," that is, Jupiter the limiter or the bounder of all things.
Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 176.

It appeareth, that the sun is not that infinite limiter, which giveth several gifts, and setteth several bounds, unto all other things. Ibid. p. 180.

A law so good and moral, the limiter of sin.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

2. A friar who had a licence to beg within a certain district, or whose duty was confined to a certain district. Obsolete.

Almost every fryer limitour caryeth it written in his bosome.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 69.

I mean me to disguise
In some strange habit after uncouth wize,
Or like a pilgrim, or a limiter. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Li'mitless.* adj. [limit and less.] Unbounded; unlimited.

Thou wilt crown
With limitless renown. Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

Now to this sea of city-commonwealth,
Limitless London, am I come obscur'd.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrimage, H. 4. b.

Ye never aime
A limitless desire to what may maime
The settled quiet of a peaceful state. Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 4.

Li'mmer.† n. s.

1. [limier, French.] A lime-hound. See Lime-hound. "A limmer is a mungrel dog, half a cur, and half a hound or spaniel." Huloet. And thus Ainsworth calls this dog a mongrel. Mr. Tyrwhitt has admitted this word into his Glossary to Chaucer from the preceding one subjoined to Urry's edition of the old poet, and defines it "a blood-hound," with a reference, in proof of the assertion, to both words in the following lines; in which, however, the second usage of limer means not the hound, but the lad or servant that led this kind of dog, which was accustomed to be so brought into the field.

There overtoke I a grete rout
Of hunters and of foresters,
And many relaies and limers,
That hied 'hem to the forest fast,
And I with 'hem; so at the last
I askid one lad, a lymere,
Say felowe, who shal huntin here? Dreme of Chaucer, 360.

A lymer, or leamer, so called from the leam or line wherewith he is led, is a middle-sized hound between a harier and a greyhound both for kind, and frame of body, being active, light, and nimble. Holme, Academy of Armory

2. [limer, plural of lim, Icel. boughs of trees. See LIMBERS.] A thill or shaft. "Limmers, a pair of shafts." North. Grose.

3. [limonier, Fr.] A thill-horse; a "limmer." Sherwood.

To LIMN. v. a. [enluminer, French, to adorn books with pictures.] To draw; to paint any thing.

Mine eye doth his effigies witness,
Most truly limn'd, and living in your face. Shakspeare.
Emblems limned in lively colours. Peacham.

How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limned in their unaffected bravery? Glanville.

LI'MNER. n. s. [corrupted from enlumineur, a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limners at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so unerringly, according to the idea of its kind. Glanville, Scepsis.

Poets are limners of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;
Words are the paint by which their thoughts are shown,
And nature is their object to be drawn. Granville.

LI'MOUS. adj. [limosus, Latin.] Muddy; slimy.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees unto a firm land. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They esteemed this natural melancholick acidity to be the limous or slimy fœculent part of the blood. Floyer.

LIMP, adj. [limpio, Italian.]

1. Vapid; weak. Not in use.

The chub eats waterish, and the flesh of him is not firm, limp and tasteless. Walton, Angler.

2. It is used in some provinces, and in Scotland, for limber, flexile.

To LIMP.† v. n. [limp-healt, lame, Sax. lempen, limpen, to halt in one's gait. Lye.] To halt; to walk lamely.

An old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step
Limp'd in pure love. Shakspeare, As you like it.
Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire. Shakspeare.
How far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprising it; so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance. Shakspeare.

When Plutus, with his riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot. Bacon.

Limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden, Hor.
The limping smith observ'd the sadden'd feast,
And hopping here and there put in his word. Dryden.
Can syllogism set things right?
No: majors soon with minors fight:
Or both in friendly consort join'd,
The consequence limps false behind. Prior.

LIMP.* n. s. [from the verb.] Halt; the act of limping: a colloquial expression; as, he has a limp in his walking.

LI'MY. adj. [from lime.]

1. Viscous; glutinous.

Striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his winges twain
In limy snares the subtil loops among. Spenser.

2. Containing lime.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some limy soil, was tanned, or turned into a kind of leather. Grew, Museum.

To LIN.† v. n. [linna, Icel. to cease; ablinnan, Sax. the same.] To yield; to cease; to give over. It is still a northern word.

Unto his foe he came,
Resolv'd in mind all suddenly to win,
Or soon to lose before he once would lin. Spenser, F. Q.
For couer fire, and it will never linne
Till it breake forth; in like case, shame and sinne.
Mir. for Mag. p. 365.

Set a beggar on horseback, he'll never lin till he be a gallop. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

LI'NCHPIN.† n. s. [quasi links-pin. Skinner. — Su. Goth. lunta, paxillus axis. Dr. Jamieson. — It is the Sax. lyniꝛ, axis.] An iron pin, that keeps the wheel on the axle-tree. Dict.

Through which something of a lace or bobbin might be drawn, as a nail through the linchpin of an axletree to keep the wheel on. Clubb's Wheatfield.

LI'NCOLN Green. * n. s. The colour of stuff or cloth made formerly at Lincoln.

All in a woodman's jacket he was clad
Of Lincolne greene, belay'd with silver lace. Spenser, F. Q.

Two neighbouring trees, with walls encompass'd round,
One a hard oak, a softer linden one. Dryden.

LINE.† n. s. [linea, Latin.]

1. Longitudinal extension.

Even the planets, upon this principle, must gravitate no more towards the sun: so that they would not revolve in curve lines, but fly away in direct tangents, till they struck against other planets. Bentley.

2. A slender string.

Well sung the Roman bard; all human things,
Of dearest value, hang on slender strings:
O see the then sole hope, and in design
Of heav'n our joy, supported by a line. Waller.

A line seldom holds to strein, or draws streight in length, above fifty or sixty feet. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

3. A thread extended to direct any operations.

We as by line upon the ocean go,
Whose paths shall be familiar as the land. Dryden.

4. The string that sustains the angler's hook.

Victorious with their lines and eyes,
They make the fishes and the men their prize. Waller.

5. Lineaments, or marks in the hand or face.

Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of
Which then he wore.

I shall have good fortune; go to, here's a [line of life; here's a small trifle of wives. Shakspeare.

Here, while his scanting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmestry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.

6. Delineation; sketch.

You have generous thoughts turned to such speculations: but this is not enough towards the raising such buildings as I have drawn you here the lines of, unless the direction of all affairs here were wholly in your hands. Temple.

The inventors meant to turn such qualifications into persons as were agreeable to his character, for whom the line was drawn. Pope, Ess. on Homer.

7. Contour; outline.

Oh lasting as those colours may they shine,
Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line! Pope.

8. As much as is written from one margin to the other; a verse.

In the preceding line, Ulysses speaks of Nausicaa, yet immediately changes the words into the masculine gender. Broome.

In moving lines these few epistles tell
What fate attends the nymph who loves too well. Garth.

Now snatch an hour that favours thy designs,
Unite thy forces, and attack their lines. Dryden, Æn.

11. Method; disposition.

The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order. Shakspeare.

12. Extension; limit.

Eden stretch'd her line
From Auran eastward to the royal towers

13 Equator; equinoctial circle.

It were the greatest folly in the world to perplex one's self with that, which perchance will never come to pass: but if it should, then God, who sent it, will dispose it to the best; most certainly to his glory; which would satisfy us in our respects to him; and, unless it be our fault, as certainly to our good; which, if we be not strangely unreasonable, must satisfy in reference to ourselves and private interests. Besides all this, in the very dispensation God will not fail to give such allays, which, like the cool gales under the line, will make the greatest heats of suffering very supportable. Hammond, in Fell's Life of him, § 2.

When the sun below the line descends,
Then one long night continued darkness joins. Creech.

14. Progeny; family, ascending or descending. [lin, old French.]

He chid the sisters
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then prophet-like,
They hail'd him father to a line of kings. Shakspeare.

He sends you this most memorable line,
In every branch truly demonstrative,
Willing you overlook this pedigree. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Some lines were noted for a stern, rigid virtue, savage, haughty, parsimonious, and unpopular; others were sweet and affable. Dryden.

His empire, courage, and his boasted line,
Were all prov'd mortal. Roscommon.

A golden bowl
The queen commanded to be crown'd with wine,
The bowl that Belus us'd, and all the Tyrian line. Dryden.

The years
Ran smoothly on, productive of a line
Of wise heroick kings. Philips.

15. A line is one tenth of an inch. Locke.

16. [In the plural.] A letter: as, I read your lines. Dr. Johnson. — Used also now in the singular; I send you a line.

17. Lint or flax. [linum, Latin; linen, Sax.]

Nor anie weaver, which his worke doth boast
In diaper, in damaske, or in lyne. Spenser, Mu

To LINE. v. a. [supposed by Junius from linum, linings being often made of linen.]

1. To cover on the inside.

A box lined with paper to receive the mercury that might be spilt. Boyle.

2. To put any thing in the inside: a sense rather ludicrous.

The charge amounteth very high for any one man's purse, except lined beyond ordinary, to reach unto. Carew.

Her women are about her: what if I do line one of their hands? Shakspeare, Cymb.

He, by a gentle bow, divin'd
How well a cully's purse was lin'd. Swift.

3. To guard within.

Notwithstanding they had lined some hedges with musqueteers, they were totally dispersed. Clarendon.

4. To strengthen by inner works.

Line and new repair our towns of war
With men of courage, and with means defendant. Shakspeare.

5. To cover with something soft.

Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire. Shakspeare.

6. To double; to strengthen with help.

Who lin'd himself with hope,
Eating the air, on promise of supply. Shakspeare.

My brother Mortimer doth stir
About his title, and hath sent for you
To line his enterprise. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, both of them rather courtiers, and assured to the state, than martial men, yet lined and assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience and valour. Bacon.

7. To impregnate: applied to animals generating.

Thus from the Tyrian pastures lin'd with Jove
He bore Europa, and still keeps his love. Creech.

LI'NEAGE. n. s. [linage, Fr.] Race; progeny; family, ascending or descending.

Both the lineage and the certain sire
From which I sprung from me are hidden yet. Spenser.

Joseph was of the house and lineage of David. St. Luke, ii. 4.

The Tirsan cometh forth with all his generation or lineage, the males before him, and the females following him; and if there be a mother from whose body the whole lineage is descended, there is a traverse where she sitteth. Bacon.

Men of mighty fame,
And from the immortal gods their lineage came. Dryden.

No longer shall the widow'd land bemoan
A broken lineage, and a doubtful throne,
But boast her royal progeny's increase,
And count the pledges of her future peace. Addison.

This care was infused by God himself, in order to ascertain the descent of the Messiah, and to prove that he was, as the prophets had foretold, of the tribe of Judah, and of the lineage of David. Atterbury.

LI'NEAL. adj. [linealis, from linea, Latin.]

1. Composed of lines; delineated.

When any thing is mathematically demonstrated weak, it is much more mechanically weak; errors ever occurring more easily in the management of gross materials than lineal designs. Wotton, Architecture.

2. Descending in a direct genealogy.

To re-establish, de facto, the right of lineal succession to paternal government, is to put a man in possession of that government which his fathers did enjoy, and he by lineal succession had a right to. L... Wars.

3. Hereditary; derived from ancestors.

Peace be to France, if France in peace permit
Our just and lineal entrance to our own. Shakspeare. Milton, P. L.

4. Allied by direct descent.

Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Ermengere. Shakspeare, Hen V.

O that your brows my laurel had sustain'd!
Well had I been depos'd if you had reign'd:
The father had descended for the son;
For only you are lineal to the throne. Dryden.

Li'neally. adv. [from lineal.] In a direct line.

If he had been the person upon whom the crown had lineally and rightfully descended, it was good law. Clarendon.

Li'neament. n. s. [lineament, French; lineamentum, Latin.] Feature; discriminating mark in the form.

Noble York
Found that the issue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke, my father. Shakspeare.

Six wings he wore to shade
His lineaments divine. Milton, P. L.

Man he seems
In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine. Milton, P. R.

There are not more differences in men's faces, and the outward lineaments of their bodies, than there are in the makes and tempers of their minds; only there is this difference, that the distinguishing characters of the face, and the lineaments of the body, grow more plain with time, but the peculiar physiognomy of the mind is most discernible in children. Locke.

I may advance religion and morals, by tracing some few lineaments in the character of a lady, who hath spent all her life in the practice of both. Swift.

The utmost force of boiling water is not able to destroy the structure of the tenderest plant: the lineaments of a white lily will remain after the strongest decoction. Arbuthnot.

Li'near. adj. [linearis, Lat.] Composed of lines; having the form of lines.

Where-ever it is freed from the sand stone, it is covered with linear striæ, tending towards several centres, so as to compose flat stellar figures. Woodward on Fossils.

Linea'tion. n. s. [lineatio, Lat. from linea.] Draught of a line or lines.

There are in the horney ground two white lineations, with two of a pale red. Woodward.

LI'NEN.† n. s. [linum, Latin; lınen, lınnın, Saxon; lınen peapp, linen warp. Lye.] Cloth made of hemp or flax.

Here is a basket, he may creep in; throw foul linen upon him, as if going to bucking. Shakspeare.

Unseen, unfelt, the fiery serpent skims
Between her linen and her naked limbs. Dryden, Æn.

2. Resembling linen.

Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whey-face? Shakspeare.

Linendra'per.† n. s. [linen and draper.] He who deals in linen.

Dealt with the linen-drapers. B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

Charles Cambrick, linendraper in the city of Westminster, was indicted for speaking obscenely to the lady Penelope Touchwood. Tatler, No. 259.

Li'nener.* } Li'nen-man. } n. s. [from linen.] A linen draper.

If she love good clothes or dressing, have your learned council about you every morning, your French taylor, barber, linener, &c. B. Jonson, Epicœne.

I have in a table
[illegible] curious punctuality set down
[illegible]'s breadth, how low a new-stamp'd courtier
[illegible] to a country gentleman, and, by [illegible] to his merchant, mercer, draper,
[illegible] and taylor. Massinger, Emp. of the East.

Ling.† The termination notes commonly diminution; as, kit*ling*, and is derived from klein, German, little; sometimes a quality; as, first*ling*, in which sense Skinner deduces it from langen, old Teutonick, to belong. Johnson.

When Skinner and Johnson, after puzzling about the derivation of this termination, referred it to the old Teut. langen, or Germ. klien, they never adverted, that it was immediately derived from the Sax. lınȝ, a common termination, used in the same manner, as in the old English and Scottish. See Somner and Lye. G. Chalmers.

Ling. n. s. [ling, Icelandick.]

1. Heath. This sense is retained in the northern counties; yet Bacon seems to distinguish them.

Heath, and ling, and sedges. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. [linghe, Dutch.] A kind of sea fish.

When harvest is ended take shipping, or ride,
Ling, salt fish, and herring, for Lent to provide. Tusser.

Our English bring from thence good store of fish, but especially our deepest and thickest ling, which are therefore called island lings. Abbot, Descr. of the World.

To LI'NGER. v. n. [from lenȝ, Saxon, long.]

1. To remain long in languor and pain.

Like wretches, that have linger'd long,
We'll snatch the strongest cordial of our love. Dryden.

Better to rush at once to shades below,
Than linger life away, and nourish woe. Pope, Odyss.

2. To hesitate; to be in suspense.

Perhaps thou lingerest, in deep thoughts detain'd
Of th' enterprize so hazardous and high. Milton, P. R.

3. To remain long. In an ill sense.

Let order die,
And let this world no longer be a stage
To feed contention in a lingering act. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Ye breth'ren of the lyre, and tuneful voice,
Lament his lot; but at your own rejoice.
Now live secure, and linger out your days;
The gods are pleas'd alone with Purcel's lays. Dryden.

Your very fear of death shall make ye try
To catch the shade of immortality;
Wishing on earth to linger, and to save
Part of its prey from the devouring grave. Prior.

4. To remain long without any action or determination.

We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

5. To wait long in expectation or uncertainty.

I must solicit
All his concerns as mine:
And if my eyes have power, he should not sue
In vain, nor linger with a long delay. Dryden, Cleomenes.

6. To be long in producing effect.

She doth think, she has strange ling'ring poisons. Shakspeare.

To Li'nger. v. a. To protract; to draw out to length. Out of use.

LINGUADE'NTAL.✝ adj. [lingua and dens, Latin.] Uttered by the joint action of the tongue and teeth.

Ph and Bh, (or F and V,) are labiodental; T and D are gingival; Th and Dh are linguadental.
Holder, Elem. of Speech, p. 71.

LI'NGUIST. n. s. [from lingua.] A man skilful in languages.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet, if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man, as any yeoman or tradesman competently wise in his mother dialect only. Milton on Education.

Our linguist received extraordinary rudiments towards a good education. Addison, Spect.

LI'NGWORT. n. s. An herb.

LI'NIMENT. n. s. [liniment, French; linimentum, Lat.] Ointment; balsam; unguent.

The nostrils, and the jugular arteries, ought to be anointed every morning with this liniment or balsam. Harvey.

The wise author of nature hath provided on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily pap or liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers. Ray on Creation.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. Shakspeare.

LINK. n. s. [gelencke, Germ.]

1. A single ring of a chain.

The Roman state, whose course will yet go on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong links asunder, than can ever
Appear in your impediment. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The moral of that poetical fiction, that the uppermost link of all the series of subordinate causes, is fastened to Jupiter's chair, signifies an useful truth. Hale.

Truths hang together in a chain of mutual dependance; you cannot draw one link without attracting others. Glanville.

While she does her upward flight sustain,
Touching each link of the continued chain,
At length she is oblig'd and forc'd to see
A first, a source, a life, a deity. Prior.

2. Any thing doubled and closed together.

Make a link of horse hair very strong, and fasten it to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. A chain; any thing connecting.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakspeare.

I feel
The link of nature draw me; flesh of flesh,
Bone of my bone thou art. Milton, P. L.

Fire, flood and earth, and air, by this were bound,
And love, the common link the new creation crown'd.
Dryden, Kn. Tale.

4. Any single part of a series or chain of consequences; a gradation in ratiocination; a proposition joined to a foregoing and following proposition.

The thread and train of consequences in intellective ratiocination is often long, and chained together by divers links, which cannot be done in imaginative ratiocination by some attributed to brutes. Judge Hale.

5. A series: this sense is improper. Addison has used link for chain.

Though I have here only chosen this single link of martyrs, I might find out others among those names which are still extant, that delivered down this account of our Saviour in a successive tradition. Addison on the Christian Religion.

6. [from λύχνος.] A torch made of pitch and hards.

O, thou art an everlasting bonefire light; thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fulginous link of lies. Howell.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he sails behind his link. Dryden.

One that bore a link
On a sudden clapp'd his flaming cudgel,
Like Linstock, to the horse's touch-hole. Hudibras.

7. Perhaps in the following passage it may mean lamp-black.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat. Shakspeare.

To LINK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate; as, the links of a chain.

Descending tread us down
Thus drooping; or with linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton, P. L.

Against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs;
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce
In notes, with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out. Milton, L'All

2. To unite; to conjoin in concord.

They're so link'd in friendship,
That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.
Shakspeare.

3. To join; to connect.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
Inclose whole downs in walls, 'tis all a joke. Pope.

So from the first eternal order ran,
And creature link'd to creature, man to man. Pope.

4. To join by confederacy or contract.

They make an offer of themselves into the service of that enemy, with whose servants they link themselves in so near a bond. Hooker.

Be advised for the best,
Ere thou thy daughter link in holy band
Of wedlock, to that new unknown guest. Spenser, F. Q.

Blood in princes link'd not in such sort,
As that it is of any pow'r to tye. Daniel, Civ. Wars.

5. To connect; as concomitant.

New hope to spring
Out of despair; joy, but with fear yet link'd. Milton, P. L.

God has linkt our hopes and our duty together. Decay of Chr. Piety.

So gracious hath God been to us, as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very things the instances of our obedience, which are the natural means and causes of our happiness. Tillotson.

6. To unite or concatenate in a regular series of consequences.

These things are linked, and, as it were, chained one to another: we labour to eat, and we eat to live, and we live to do good; and the good which we do is as seed sown, with reference unto a future harvest. Hooker.

Tell me which part it does necessitate?
I'll chuse the other; there I'll link th' effect;
A chain, which fools to catch themselves project! Dryden.

By which chain of ideas thus visibly linked together in train, i. e. each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between, the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

To LINK.* v. n. To be connected: with in.

All the productions of the earth link in with each other. Burke on Scarcity.

LI'NKBOY. } n. s. [link and boy.] A boy that carries
LI'NKMAN. } a torch to accommodate passengers with light.

What a ridiculous thing it was, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous disclusions of light, to prevent the officiousness of the linkboy! More.

Though thou art tempted by the linkman's call,
Yet trust him not along the lonely wall. Gay.

In the black form of cinder wench she came.
O may no linkboy interrupt their love! Gay, Trivia.

LI'NNET.† n. s. [linetpige, Saxon; believed to be from linet, flax, on the seed of which the bird feeds; linotte, French; linaria, Latin.] A small singing bird.

The swallows make use of celandine, the linnet of euphragia, for the repairing of their sight. More, Antid. against Atheism.

Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat? Pope.

LI'NSEED.† n. s. [linſæd, Saxon; semen lini, Latin.] The seed of flax, which is much used in medicine.

LI'ON. n. s. [lion, French; leo, Latin.]

1. The fiercest and most magnanimous of fourfooted beasts.

Be lion-mettled; proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are;
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The sphinx, a famous monster in Egypt, had the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peacham on Drawing.

They rejoice
Each with their kind, lion with lioness;
So fitly them in pairs thou hast combin'd. Milton, P. L.

See lion-hearted Richard,
Piously valiant, like a torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds,
Breaking away impetuous, and involves
Within its sweep trees, houses, men, he press'd,
Amidst the thickest battle. Philips.

2. A sign in the zodiack.

The lion for the honours of his skin,
The squeezing crab, and stinging scorpion shine
For aiding heaven, when giants dar'd to brave
The threatened stars. Creech, Manilius.

LI'ONESS. n. s. [feminine of lion.] A she lion.

Under which bush's shade, a lioness
Lay couching head on ground, with catlike watch
When that the sleeping man should stir. Shakspeare.

LIP. n. s. [lippe, Saxon.]

1. The outer part of the mouth, the muscles that shoot beyond the teeth, which are of so much use in speaking, that they are used for all the organs of speech.

Those happiest smiles
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

No falshood shall defile my lips with lies,
Or with a vail of truth disguise. Sandys, Paraph. on Job.

Her lips blush deeper sweets. Thomson, Spring.

2. The edge of any thing.

In many places is a ridge of mountains some distance from the sea, and a plain from their roots to the shore; which plain was formerly covered by the sea, which bounded against those hills as its first ramparts, or as the ledges or lips of its vessel. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

In wounds, the lips sink and are flaccid; a gleet followeth, and the flesh within withers. Wiseman, Surgery.

3. To make a lip. To hang the lip in sullenness and contempt.

A letter for me! It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician. Shakspeare.

To LIP. v. a. [from the noun.] To kiss. Obsolete.

A hand, that kings
Have lipt, and trembled kissing. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Oh! 'tis the fiend's arch mock,
To lip a wanton, and suppose her chaste. Shakspeare.

LIP-DEVOTION.* n. s. [lip and devotion.] Devotion uttered by the lips without concurrence of the heart.

Lip-devotion will not serve the turn; it undervalues the very thing it prays for. It is indeed the begging of a denial, and shall certainly be answered in what it begs. South, Serm. vi. 386.

LIP-GOOD.* adj. [lip and good.] Good in talk without practice.

Men are deceiv'd, who think there can be thrall
Beneath a virtuous prince. Wish'd liberty
Ne'er lovelier looks than under such a crown:
But when his grace is meerly but lip-good,
And that no longer than he airs himself
Abroad in publick, there to seem to shun
The strokes and stripes of flatterers, which within
Are lechery unto him, and so feed
His brutish sense with their afflicting sound,
As, dead to virtue, he permits himself
Be carried like a pitcher by the ears
To every act of vice: This is a case
Deserves our fear, and doth presage the nigh
And close approach of blood and tyranny.
B. Jonson, Sejanus.

LIP-LABOUR.† n. s. [lip and labour.] Action of the lips without concurrence of the mind; words without sentiments.

Christ calleth your Latyne howres idlenesse, hypocresye, moche bablynge, and lyppe-laboure. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 24. b.

LI'PPITUDE. n. s. [lippitude, French; lippitudo, Latin.] Bleeredness of eyes.

Diseases that are infectious are, such as are in the spirits and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such are pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

LI'P-WISDOM. n. s. [lip and wisdom.] Wisdom in talk without practice.

I find that all is but lip-wisdom, which wants experience; I now, woe is me, do try what love can do. Sidney.

LI'QUABLE. adj. [from liquo, Latin.] Such as may be melted.

LIQUA'TION. n. s. [from liquo, Latin.]

1. The act of melting.

2. Capacity to be melted.

The common opinion hath been, that crystal is nothing but ice and snow concreted, and by duration of time, congealed beyond liquation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To LI'QUATE. v. n. [liquo, Latin.] To melt; to liquefy.

If the salts be not drawn forth before the clay is baked, they are apt to liquate. Woodward on Fossils.

LIQUEFA'CTION. n. s. [liquefactio, Latin; liquefaction, French.] The act of melting; the state of being melted.

Heat dissolveth and melteth bodies that keep in their spirits, as in divers liquefactions; and so doth time in honey, which by age waxeth more liquid. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The burning of the earth will be a true liquefaction or dissolution of it, as to the exterior region. Burnet.

LIQUEFI'ABLE. adj. [from liquefy.] Such as may be melted.

There are three causes of fixation, the even spreading of the spirits and tangible parts, the closeness of the tangible parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits: the two first may be joined with a nature liquefiable, the last not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To LI'QUEFY. v. a. [liquefier, French; liquefacio, Latin.] To melt; to dissolve.

That degree of heat which is in lime and ashes, being a smothering heat, is the most proper, for it doth neither liquefy nor rarify; and that is true maturation. Bacon, Nat. Hist

To LI'QUEFY. v. n. To grow liquid.

The blood of St. Januarius liquefied at the approach of the saint's head. Addison on Italy.

*LIQUE'UR. n. s. [French.] A most affected and contemptible expression, much used of late for what is in fact a dram, a draught of some spirituous and high-flavoured liquid, by those whose gentility recoils at the vulgar phrase.

Know what conserves they choose to eat,
And what liqueurs to tipple. Shenstone, To the Virtuosi.

LI'QUID. adj. [liquide, French; liquidus, Latin.]

1. Not solid; not forming one continuous substance; fluid.

Gently rolls the liquid glass. Dr. Daniel.

2. Soft; clear.

Her breast, the sugared nest
Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,
Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Crashaw.

3. Pronounced without any jar or harshness.

The many liquid consonants give a pleasing sound to the words, though they are all of one syllable. Dryden, Æn.

Let Carolina smooth the tuneful lay,
Lull with Amelia's liquid name the nine,
And sweetly flow through all the royal line. Pope, Hor.

4. Dissolved, so as not to be attainable by law.

If a creditor should appeal to hinder the burial of his debtor's corpse, his appeal ought not to be received, since the business of burial requires a quick dispatch, though the debt be entirely liquid. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Li'quid. n. s. Liquid substance; liquor.

Be it thy choice, when summer heats annoy,
To sit beneath her leafy canopy,
Quaffing rich liquids. Philips.

To Li'quidate.† v. a. [from liquid.] To clear away; to lessen debts.

Li'sper.† n. s. [from lisp.] One who lisps. Huloet.

Li'spingly.* adv. [from lisping.] With a lisp; imperfectly.

Shew him that T is close; but this lets breadth; and with often trial he will hit on it, though at first it may be lispingly or imperfectly. Holder, Elem. of Speech, p. 144.

Li'ssom.* adj. [probably from leran, Sax. to loose; lırre, relaxation.] Limber; supple; relaxed; loose; free. Pegge, without any etymology, confines this word to the north of England, where it is rather leetsome, that is lightsome, I believe. Lissom, however, is common in several parts of England.

LIST.† n. s. [liste, French.]

1. A roll; a catalogue.

He was the ablest emperour of all the list. Bacon.

Some say the loadstone is poison, and therefore in the lists of poisons we find it in many authors. Brown.

Bring next the royal list of Stuarts forth,
Undaunted minds, that rul'd the rugged north. Prior.

2. [Lice, French.] Enclosed ground in which tilts are run, and combats fought.

Till now alone the mighty nations strove,
The rest, at gaze, without the lists did stand;
And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Kept idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Paris thy son, and Sparta's king advance,
In measur'd lists to toss the weighty lance;
And who his rival shall in arms subdue,
His be the dame, and his the treasure too. Pope, Iliad.

3. [lırt, Sax. the verge or border of any thing.] Bound; limit.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes in a riotous head
O'er-bears your officers. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

She within lists my ranging mind hath brought,
That now beyond myself I will not go. Davies.

4. [Lẏrtan, Saxon.] Desire; willingness; choice; pleasure. See Lust.

He saw false reynard where he lay full low;
I need not swear he had no list to crow. Dryden.

5. [lırt, Saxon, the same.] A strip of cloth.

A linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list. Shakspeare.

Instead of a list of cotton, or the like filtre, we made use of a siphon of glass. Boyle.

A list the cobler's temples ties,
To keep the hair out of his eyes. Swift.

6. A border.

They thought it better to let them stand as a list, or marginal border, unto the Old Testament. Hooker.

To List.† v. n. [lẏrtan, Saxon.]

1. To chuse; to desire; to be disposed; to incline.

To fight in field, or to defend this wall,
Point what you list, I nought refuse at all. Spenser, F. Q.

Unto them that add to the word of God what them listeth, and make God's will submit unto their will, and break God's commandments for their own tradition's sake, unto them it seemeth not good. Hooker.

They imagine, that laws which permit them not to do as they would, will endure them to speak as they list. Hooker.

Let other men think of your devices as they list, in my judgement they be mere fansies. Whitgift.

Now by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be moon, or star, or what I list. Shakspeare.

Kings, lords of times, and of occasions, may Take their advantage when, and how, they list. Daniel.

When they list, into the womb
That bred them they return; and howl, and gnaw
My bowels, their repast. Milton, P. L.

2. Used as an impersonal verb; it pleased. Frequent in our old writers.

When him list the prouder looks subdew,
He would them gazing blind, or turn to other hew.
Spenser, F. Q.

To LIST. v. a. [from list, a roll.]

1. To enlist; to enrol or register.

For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to list himself a martyr, and to bid farewel not only to the pleasures, but also to the hopes of this life. South.

They list with women each degen'rate name
Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryden, Æn.

2. To retain and enrol soldiers; to enlist.

The lords would, by listing their own servants, persuade the gentlemen in the town to do the like. Clarendon.

The king who raised this wall appointed a million of soldiers, who were listed and paid for the defence of it against the Tartars. Temple.

Two hundred horse he shall command;
Though few, a warlike and well-chosen band,
These in my name are listed. Dryden.

3. [from list; enclosed ground.] To enclose for combats.

How dares your pride presume against my laws,
As in a listed field to fight your cause?
Unask'd the royal grant. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

4. [from list, a shred or border.] To sew together, in such a sort as to make a particoloured shew.

Some may wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidering or listing of one favour upon another.
Wotton, Life of Buckingham.

5. [Contracted from listen.] To hearken to; to listen; to attend.

Then weigh, what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs;
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I, this sound I better know;
List! I would I could hear mo. B. Jonson.

LI'STED. adj. Striped; particoloured in long streaks.

Over his head beholds
A dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow
Conspicuous, with three listed colours gay,
Betokening peace from God, and cov'nant new. Milton, P. L.

As the show'ry arch
With listed colours gay, or, azure, gules,
Delights, and puzzles the beholder's eyes. Philips.

To LI'STEN.† v. a. [hlyſtan, and lyſtan, Sax.] To hear; to attend. Obsolete.

Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say. Shakspeare.

One cried, God bless us! and, amen! the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands,
Listening their fear I could not say, amen. Shakspeare.

He, that no more must say, is listened more
Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose.
Shakspeare.

The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
And fill'd the air with barbarous dissonance,
At which I ceas'd and listen'd them a while. Milton, Comus.

To LI'STEN. v. n. To hearken; to give attention.

Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
I'll tell you news. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

I shal rehearse, so as I can, a lite. Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf.

LI'TERAL. adj. [literal, French; litera, Lat.]

1. According to the primitive meaning, not figurative.

Through all the writings of the antient fathers, we see that the words, which were, do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the latter, is accomplished in the truth. Hooker.

A foundation, being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building, nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence. Hammond.

2. Following the letter, or exact words.

The fittest for publick audience are such as, following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrasts, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning. Hooker.

3. Consisting of letters; as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.

Li'teral. n. s. Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Li'teralism.* n. s. [from literal.] What accords with the letter or exact word.

If none of these considerations, with all their weight and gravity, can avail to the dispossessing him of his precious literalism, let some one or other entreat him but to read on. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 18.

Li'teralist.* n. s. [from literal.] One who adheres to the letter or exact word.

Let the extreme literalist sit down now, and revolve whether this in all necessity be not the due result of our Saviour's words; or, if he persist to be otherwise opinioned, let him well advise, lest, thinking to gripe fast the Gospel, he be found instead with the canon law in his fist. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 20.

Litera'lity. n. s. [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true deuteroscopy and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not sometimes persuaded beyond their literalities. Brown.

Li'terally. adv. [from literal.]

1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.

That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible. Swift.

2. With close adherence to words; word by word.

Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Mezentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness. Dryden.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

Li'terary.† adj. [literarius, Lat.] Respecting letters; appertaining to literature; regarding learning. Literary history is an account of the state of learning, and of the lives of learned men. Literary conversation is talk about questions of learning. Literary is not properly used of missive letters. It may be said, this epistolary correspondence was political oftener than literary.

He has long outlived his century, the term commonly fixed as the test of literary merit. Johnson, Pref. to Shakspeare.

The former of these appears with too much distinction in the literary as well as fashionable world, to make it necessary I should enlarge upon this subject. Mason, Life of Gray.

Soon after his [Dr. Johnson's] return to London, which was in February, 1764, was founded that club which existed long without a name, but at Mr. Garrick's funeral became distinguished by the title of the literary club. Sir Joshua Reynolds had the merit of being the first proposer of it, to which Johnson acceded; and the original members were Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dr. Johnson, Mr. Edmund Burke, Dr. Nugent, Mr. Beauclerk, Mr. Langton, Dr. Goldsmith, Mr. Chamier, and Sir John Hawkins. Boswell, Life of Johnson.

Li'terate.* adj. [literatus, Latin.] Learned. Cockeram.

This is the proper function of literate elegancy; to figure virtue in so fresh and lively colours, that our imagination may be so taken with the beauty of virtue, as it may invite our minds to make love to her in solitude. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. 1. (1648,) p. 348.

In literate nations, though the pronunciation, and sometimes the words of common speech, may differ, as now in England, compared with the south of Scotland, yet there is a written diction, which pervades all dialects, and is understood in every province: But where the whole language is colloquial, he that has only one part, never gets the rest, as he cannot get it but by change of residence. Johnson, Journ. Western Isles.

LITERA'TI. n. s. [Italian.] The learned.

I shall consult some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the longitude. Spectator.

Li'terator.* n. s. [literator, Lat.] A petty schoolmaster.

In this age of light, they teach the people, that preceptors ought to be in the place of gallants. They systematically corrupt a very corruptible race, (for some time a growing nuisance amongst you,) a set of pert petulant literators, to whom, instead of their proper but severe unostentatious duties, they assign the brilliant parts of men of wit and pleasure, of gay, young, military sparks, and danglers at toilets. Burke, Lett. to a Member of the Fr. Nat. Assembly.

Li'terature. n. s. [literatura, Lat.] Learning; skill in letters.

This kingdom hath been famous for good literature; and if preferment attend deservers, there will not want supplies. Bacon.

When men of learning are acted by a knowledge of the world, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness. Addison, Freeholder.

Lith.* n. s. [lıð, Sax. lithus, Gothick.] A joint; a limb. Obsolete.

Chaunteclere, loken in every lith. Chaucer, N. Pr. Tale.

Li'tharge. n. s. [litharge, French; lithargyrum, Lat.] Litharge is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recrement is of two kinds, litharge of gold, and litharge of silver. It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The litharge sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. Hill, Materia Medica.

I have seen some parcels of glass adhering to the test or cupel as well as the gold or litharge. Boyle.

If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call litharge of silver. Boyle.

LITHE.† adj. [lıðe, Saxon; from lıð, a joint. See Lith.] Limber; flexible; soft; pliant; easily bent.

To makin lithe that erst was hard. Chaucer, House of Fame, B. 1.

1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.

Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb,
When living day should kiss it? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To save the living and revenge the dead,
Against one warrior's arms all Troy they led. Dryden.

2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits; good or ill, happiness or misery.

O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest! Ecclus. xli. 1.

Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Hayward.

The condition required of us is a conjuncture of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully lived and died in. Hammond.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Addison, Spect.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, and pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakspeare.

See the minutes how they run;
How many makes the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakspeare.

The way to live long must be, to use our bodies so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Ray on the Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.

What greater curse could envious fortune give,
Than just to die when I began to live? Dryden.

Now three-and-thirty rolling years are fled
Since I began, nor yet begin to live. Brown.

Live while you live, the epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day;
Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies:
Lord, in my views let both united be;
I live in pleasure, when I live to thee.
Doddridge, in Orton's Life of him.

5. To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.

My statutes and judgements, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.

6. To remain undestroyed.

It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burnet.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
And what collected night involves the skies!
Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

How a vessel, formed according to the description given of the structure of the ark, could live, as the seaman's phrase is, in such a tempest of waters. Biblioth. Biblica, Oxf. i. 230.

7. To continue; not to be lost.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Sounds which address the ear are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye
Lives long upon the mind; the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace.
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit; followed by with.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing,
For thy delight each May morning.
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love. Shakspeare.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a livelihood where they can find it. Addison, Spect.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow-subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest livelihood: the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Living form; appearance of life. Spenser writes it lively-head.

If in that picture dead
Such life ye read, and virtue in vaine shew:
What mote ye weene, if the trew lively-head
Of that most glorious visage ye did vew.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 3.

The tyranny of her sorrow takes all livelihood from her cheek. Shakespeare, All's Well.

Li'velily.* adv. See Lively.

Li'veliness.† n. s. [from lively.]

1. Appearance of life.

What hinders while we are living, and among the living, but that we may study to adorn our looks, so as may be most remote from a deathfulness, and most agreeable by their liveliness to those with whom we live. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 70.

That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. Vivacity; sprightliness.

Give me that wit, whom praise excites, glory puts on, or disgrace grieves: he is to be nourished with ambition, pricked forward with honour, checked with reprehension, and never to be suspected of sloth: though he be given to play, it is a sign of spirit and liveliness. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and so make able and great men; but tame and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke on Education.

Li'velode.† n. s. [live and lode, from lead; the means of leading life. Kelham places livelode among his old French words.] Maintenance; support; livelihood.

She gave like blessing to each creature
As well of worldly livelode as of life,
That there might be no difference nor strife.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Temporal goods they had, more than them needed reasonablie to their necessary livelode.
Fox, Acts and Mon. of W. Thorpe.

Li'velong. adj. [live and long.]

1. Tedious; long in passing.

Many a time, and oft,
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
Your infants in your arms; and there have sate
The livelong day, with patient expectation
To see great Pompey pass. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The obscure bird clamour'd the livelong night. Shakspeare.

Young and old come forth to play,
On a sun-shine holiday,
Till the livelong day light fail. Milton, L'All.

Seek for pleasure to destroy
The sorrows of this livelong night. Prior.

How could she sit the livelong day,
Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

2. Lasting; durable. Not used.

Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,
Hast built thyself a livelong monument.
Milton, Ess. on Shakspeare.

Li'vely.† adj. [live and like. Sax. lıflıc.]

1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious.

But wherefore comes old Manoah in such haste,
With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while
He seems; supposing here to find his son,
Or of him bringing to us some glad news? Milton, S. A.

2. Gay; airy.

Dulness delighted, ey'd the lively dunce,
Remembering she herself was pertness once. Pope.

Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. Representing life.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. Strong energetick.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be brightened and stirred up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense, and lively, than those of natural bodies. Newton, Opticks.

Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state. Atterbury.

Li'velily.† } adv.
Li'vely. }

1. Briskly; vigorously.

They brought their men to the slough, who discharging lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them. Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life.

That part of poetry must needs be best, which describes most lively our actions and passions, our virtues and our vices. Dryden, Pref. to his St. of Innocence.

In which time of remission of the higher powers, the lower may advance, and more livelily display themselves. Glanville, Pre-exist. p. 115.

This sacrament of the eucharist so livelily resembles, and so happily falls in with it, that it is indeed itself a supper, and is called a supper. South, Serm. ii. 276.

Li'ver. n. s. [from live.]

1. One who lives.

Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear,
Guided to what may great or good appear,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

2. One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness or misery.

If any loose liver have any goods of his own, the sheriff is to seize thereupon. Spenser on Ireland.

The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian livers over the whole world. Hammond.

Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented. Atterbury.

LI'VER. n. s. [lıfep, Saxon.] One of the entrails.

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come:
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakspeare.

Reason and respect
Make livers pale, and lustihood dejected. Shakspeare.

Li'vercolour. adj. [liver and colour.] Dark red.

The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, livercolour. Woodward.

Li'vered.* adj. Having a liver; as, "white-livered." Sherwood. "Lilly-livered." Shakspeare. Both these expressions were used to denote faint-hearted, cowardly, mean, dastardly, unmanly.

Li'vergrown. adj. [liver and grown.] Having a great liver.

I enquired what other casualties was most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest. Graunt.

Li'verwort. n. s. [liver and wort; lichen.] A plant.

That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is short, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour. Miller.

LI'VERY.† n. s. [from livrer, French.]

1. The act of giving possession. Livery and seisen is delivery and possession.

She gladly did of that same babe accept,
As of her owne by livercy and seisin. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 37.

You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,
Call in his letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys general to sue
His livery, and deny his offered homage. Shakspeare.

2. Release from wardship.

Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgement. King Charles.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

4. The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is allowance of horse-meat, as they commonly use the word in stabling; as, to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly food. So in great houses, the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink; and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, as I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. So it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant horse-meat. Spenser on Ireland.

5. The clothes given to servants; from the scarfs or ribbands, of chosen colours, given by the ladies of old to knights. "To such [knights] as were victorious, prizes were awarded by the judges, and presented by the hands of the ladies — with ribbands, or scarfs, of chosen colours, called liveries. Those liveries are the ladies' favours spoken of in romance; and appear to have been the origin of the ribbands, which still distinguish so many orders of knighthood." Brydson's Summary View of Heraldry. From the old cavaliers wearing the livery of their mistresses, the custom of people of quality making their servants wear a livery, to denote service, is supposed to be derived. Livery, in former days, thus seems also to have been used for a cockade.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of Scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats affordeth. Hooker.

I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,
That see I by our faces. Shakspeare, Timon.

Ev'ry lady cloath'd in white,
And crown'd with oak and laurel every knight,
Are servants to the leaf, by liveries known
Of innocence. Dryden, Fl. and Leaf.

On others int'rest her gay livery flings,
Int'rest that waves on party-colour'd wings;
Turn'd to the sun she casts a thousand dyes,
And as she turns the colours fall or rise. Pope, Dunciad.

If your dinner miscarries, you were teized by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladleful of broth on one or two of their liveries. Swift.

6. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green,
Proudly bedeck'd in April's livery. Sidney.

Mistake me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Shakspeare.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans,
For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,
In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride,
With spots of gold and purple, azure, green. Milton, P. L.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey
Had in her sober livery all things clad. Milton, P. L.

It is very proper and humane to put ourselves, as it were, in their livery after their decease, and wear a habit unsuitable to prosperity, while those we loved and honoured are mouldering in the grave. Tatler, No. 184.

7. [In London.] The collective body of liverymen.

To LI'VERY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To clothe in a livery; to dress in a garment betokening any thing.

His rudeness —
Did livery falseness in a pride of truth. Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

A thousand liveried angels lackey her. Milton, Comus.

Our youth, all liveried o'er with foreign gold,
Before her danc'd. Pope, Epil. to Sat.

The pair arrive; the liveried servants wait;
Their lord receives them at the pompous gate. Parnell, Hermit.

LI'VERYMAN. n. s. [livery and man.]

1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferiour kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liverymen frequently railing at their mistress. Arbuthnot.

2. [In London.] A freeman of a company.

LIVES. n. s. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant strives,
In a farm house or field, to have three lives. Donne.

LI'VID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide, French.] Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mass of the blood not being tainted. Bacon.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

LIVI'DITY. n. s. [lividité, French; from livid.] Discolouration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LI'VIDNESS.* n. s. [from livid.] The state of being livid. Scott.

LI'VING. participial adj.

1. Vigorous; active: as, a living faith.

2. Being in motion; having some natural energy, or principle of action: as, the living green, the living springs.

LI'VING. n. s. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place, having no succour but in their hands; the Helots, as in their own place, fighting for their livings, wives, and children. Sidney.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living. St. Mark.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting some body or other, in some cases. L'Estrange.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Then may I set the world on wheels; when she can spin for her living. Shakspeare.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,
Or shortly you'll dig for your living. Denham.

Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs. Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections. Arbuthnot.

Li'vingly. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

LIVRE. n. s. [Fr.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our ten-pence.

Lixi'vial. adj. [from lixivium, Lat.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine. Arbuthnot.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Helmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alcalizate form. Boyle.

Lixi'viate. } adj. [lixivieux, French; from lixivium.]
Lixi'viated. } Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixiviated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder. Brown.

Lixiviate salts to which pot-ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, dispose them to part readily with their tincture. Boyle.

LIXI'VIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Lye; water impregnated with alkaline salt, produced from the ashes of vegetables; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants. Boyle.

Li'zard. n. s. [lisarde, French; lacertus, Lat.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten in Arabia and Judæa, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures. Calmet.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venomous toads, or lizards' dreadful stings. Shakspeare.

Adder's fork, and blind worms' sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Li'zardtail. n. s. A plant.

Li'zardstone. n. s. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

LL.D. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo.† interject. [la, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — The imperative of look. So the common people say corruptly, "lo' you there now; la' you there." Where we now employ sometimes lo, with discrimination, our old English writers used indifferently lo, loke, loketh, for this imperative. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 478.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakspeare.

Now must the world point at poor Catherine,
And say, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife. Shakspeare.

Lo! I have a weapon,
A better never did itself sustain,
Upon a soldier's thigh. Shakspeare, Othello.

Thou didst utter,
I am yours for ever.
— Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice. Shakspeare.

For lo! he sung the world's stupendous birth. Roscommon.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine
To blast our bold design. Dryden, Albion.

Loach. n. s. [loche, Fr.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattles like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots: his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gesner, and other physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a small worm, at the bottom, for he seldom rises above the gravel. Walton, Angler.

LOAD. n. s. [hlað, Saxon; hlaðan, to load.]

1. A burthen; a freight; lading.

Fair plant with fruit surcharg'd,
Deigns none to ease thy load, and taste thy sweet? Milton, P. L.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,
And sought his wonted shelter. Dryden, Nun's Tale.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the balmy tree;
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which these trees adorn. Pope.

2. Weight; pressure; encumbrance.

Jove lighten'd of its load
The enormous mass, the labour of a God. Pope.

3. Weight, or violence of blows.

Like lion mov'd they laid on load,
And made a cruel fight. Chevy Chase.

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
From my prevailing arm. Milton, P. L.

And Mnestheus laid hard load upon his helm. Dryden.

4. Any thing that depresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant. Ray on Creation.

5. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. L'Estrange.

The thundering god,
Ev'n he withdrew to rest, and had his load. Dryden.

To Load. v. a. preterite, loaded; par. loaden or laden. [hlaðan, Sax.]

1. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shakspeare.

Your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the beast. Isa. xlvi. 1.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others. Locke.

3. To charge a gun.

A mariner having discharged his gun and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wiseman.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, loaden with death, still sounds
In my stunn'd ears. Addison, Cato.

LOAD. n. s. [more properly lode, as it was anciently written from læban, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Their manner of working in the lead mines, is to follow the load as it lieth. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

LO'ADER.† n. s. [from load.] He who loads.

Every vice is a loader, but that's a ten. Dryden, Arg. to Juv. Sat. 6.

LO'ADMANAGE.* n. s. [labman, Sax. a pilot or guide; and age, the French termination of nouns: it would have been more English, as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, to say lodemanship; as, seamanship, horsemanship, &c.] In the statute 3 Geo. I. c. 13. loadmanage is repeatedly used in the sense of pilotage. Chaucer describes his shipman's lodemanage, which the Glossary to Urry's edition of the poet calls "the skill or art of navigation."

LO'ADSMAN.† n. s. [lode and man; from to lead. Sax. labman. See LOADSTAR.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

Asking them anon,
If they were brokin, or aught wo-begon,
Or had nede of lodemen. Chaucer, Leg. of Hyp. and Medea.
Lodismen and maryneris, in all thing redy.
March. Sec. Tale, or Hist. of Beryn.

LO'ADSTAR. n. s. [more properly, as it is in Maundeville, lodestar, from læban, to lead.] The polestar; the cynosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes; she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow. Sidney.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life. Spenser.

O happy fair!
Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air!
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear. Shakspeare.

That clear majesty
Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,
Lodestone to hearts, and lodestar to all eyes. Davies.

LO'ADSTONE. n. s. [properly lodestone or lædingstone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariner's compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour: it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal. Hill, Mat. Medica.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Swift.

LOAF.† n. s. [from hlap or lap, Sax. Dr. Johnson. — So the M. Goth. hlaibs, hlaifs; Su. Goth. lef, as noticed by Serenius: to which Dr. Jamieson adds the Germ. leib; Iceland. hleif, lef; Fenn. leipa; Lappon. leab; Fris. leef, leaf; low Lat. leibo; Lat. libum. Mr. H. Tooke contends, that loaf is the past participle of the Sax. hlipian, to raise; and means merely raised; as the M. Goth. hlaibs is the same participle of hleibjan, to raise or lift up. Dr. Jamieson refers the word to the Germ. leib, and the cognate terms denoting life; bread being almost universally considered as "the staff of life;" but at the same time admits the ingenuity of Mr. Tooke's theory as far as it applies to loaf, viz. "After the bread has been wetted, by which it becomes dough; then comes the leaven, which in the Sax. is termed hæp and hæpen; by which it becomes loaf." Div. of Purl. ii. 157. — Lye considers the Goth hleibjan, which strictly means to sustain, as derived from hlaibs, bread. And Leigh speaks of the Sax. laef, to sustain. See LORD.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive we know. Shakspeare.

The bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a day. Hayward.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Digby.

2. Any thick mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle. Mortimer.

LOAM.† n. s. [lim, laam, Saxon; limus, Latin; from λίμνη, a fen. Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious earth; marl.

The purest treasure
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam or painted clay. Shakspeare.

Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

We wash a wall of loam; we labour in vain. Hooker on Justification, § 19.

To LOAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

The joist ends, and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

LO'AMY.† adj. [from loam.]

1. Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, if it be not loamy and binding. Bacon.

Auricula seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded. Evelyn, Kal.

2. Smeared with loam.

Fetters of gold are but fetters; and the peasant that from his loamy cottage is carried prisoner to a stately castle, though for his homely stall he hath the exchange of a princely building, yet he changes his golden liberty for iron shackles. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 195.

LOAN.† n. s. [hlæn, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Su. Goth. laen; vox usitatissima. Serenius. Icel. the same. M. Goth. laun, merces, remuneratio; leiguan, to lend; whence laena, Su. Goth. leenen, Dutch, and lænan, Sax. to lend; of which last Mr. H. Tooke pronounces loan to be the past participle.] Any thing lent; any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues shall be paid, the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteens, and loans. Bacon.

You're on the fret,
Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,
Thy friend and old acquaintance dares disown
The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan. Dryden.

To LOAN.* v. a. [lænan, Sax.] To lend. Not now in use. "Loned, mutuus, lent." Huloet.

LOATH.† adj. [lað, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Almost all the citations, given by Dr. Johnson, have loth; yet loath is certainly preferable for the sake of preserving the analogy between it and to loathe, unless it be thought better to write that word lothe. The original Sax. lað leaves this matter uncertain. Nares, Elem. of Orthoepy, p. 298.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready; not inclined.

These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loth to leave the company of so many things united in perfection! Sidney.

With lofty eyes, half loth to look so low,
She thanked them in her disdainful wise,
Ne other grace vouchsafed them to show
Of princess worthy. Spenser, F. Q.

When he heard her answers loth, he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distrain. Spenser, F. Q.

To speak so indirectly, I am loth;
I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Long doth she stay, as loth to leave the land,
From whose soft side she first did issue make,
She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,
Her flowery banks unwilling to forsake. Davies.

Then wilt thou not be loth
To leave this paradise, but shalt possess
A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton, P. L.

To pardon willing, and to punish loth;
You strike with one hand, but you heal with both:
Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live. Waller.

When Æneus is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shews him compassionate, and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,
First views the torrent he would venture o'er;
And then his inn upon the farther ground,
Loth to wade through, and lother to go round:
Then dipping in his staff does trial make
How deep it is; and, sighing, pulls it back. Dryden.

I know you shy to be oblig'd;
And still more loath to be oblig'd by me. Southern.

To LOATHE.† v. a. [laðian, Sax. to detest.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.

Parthenia had learned both liking and misliking, loving and loathing. Sidney.

They with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness. Spenser.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,
Not to reveal the secret which I loath. Waller.

For thee the lion loathes the taste of blood,
And roaring hunts his female through the wood. Dryden.

Now his exalted spirit loaths
Incumbrances of food and cloaths. Swift.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety.

Loathing the honey'd cakes, I long for bread. Cowley.

Our appetite is extinguished with the satisfaction, and is succeeded by loathing and satiety. Rogers.

3. To see food with dislike.

Loathing is a symptom known to attend disorders of the stomach; the cure must have regard to the cause. Quincy.

To LOATHE.† v. n.

1. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, citing a corrupted passage from Spenser, viz. "And loathing paddocks," where the true reading is, "And loathed paddocks," i. e. detested paddocks, not paddocks creating disgust. See the edition of Spenser's Works in 1805, vol. i. p. 199.

2. To feel abhorrence or disgust.

The fish in the river shall die, and the river stink; and the Egyptians shall loathe to drink of the water. Exodus.

Why do I stay within this hated place,
Where every object shocks my loathing eyes? Rowe.

LO'ATHER.† n. s. [from loath.] One that loaths. Sherwood.

LO'ATHFUL. adj. [loath and full.]

He would no more endure. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

2. Abhorred; hated.

Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect, through cowardly distrust
Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven flie. Spenser.

LO'ATHING.* n. s. [from loath.] Disgust; disinclination; unwillingness; aversion to.

A loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold. Spenser on Ireland.

I can give no reason,
More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing,
I bear Antonio. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

In nuptial cinders this revives the fire,
And turns their mutual loathings to desire. Congreve, Juv. Sat. 11.

LO'ATHINGLY. adv. [from loath.] In a fastidious manner.

LO'ATHLINESS.* n. s. [from loathly.] What excites hatred or abhorrence.

The lesson [of matters historical] is as it were the mirrour of man's life, expressing actually (and as it were at the eyen) the beautie of virtue, and the deformitie and loathlynesse of vice. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 206. b.

The more ill savour and loathliness we can find in our bosom sins, the nearer we come to the purity of that Holy One of Israel, our Blessed Redeemer. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 188.

LO'ATHLY.† adj. [laðlic, Sax.] Hateful; abhorred; exciting hatred.

Thou art so lothly, and so old also. Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

An huge great dragon, horrible in sight,
Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,
With murd'rous ravin. Spenser, F. Q.

The people fear me; for they do observe
Unfather'd heirs, and loathly birds of nature. Shakspeare.

Sour-ey'd disdain, and discord shall bestow
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it. Shakspeare, Tempest.

LO'ATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though lothly, must needs give place unto them. Sidney.

Lothly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

This shews that you from nature lothly stray,
That suffer not an artificial day. Donne.

LO'ATHNESS. n. s. [from loath.] Unwillingness.

The fair soul herself
Weigh'd between lothness and obedience,
Which end the beam should bow. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Should we be taking leave,
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The lothness to depart would grow. Shakspeare, Cymb.

After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and lothness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Bacon.

LO'ATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]

1. Abhorred; detestable.

The fresh young fly
Did much disdain to subject his desire
To loathsome sloth, or hours in ease to waste. Spenser.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness. Milton, P. L.

If we consider man in such a loathsome and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being? South.

2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.

The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakspeare.

LO'ATHSOMELY.* adv. [from loathsome.] So as to excite hatred or disgust.

What need I tell you how loathsomely deformed these fashions of the world make us to appear in the sight of God?
Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

Neither disdaineth he to enter into the poorest cottage, though he even creep into it, and though it smell never so lothsomely. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 14.

LO'ATHSOMENESS.† n. s. [from loathsome.] Quality of raising hatred, disgust, or abhorrence.

The loathsomeness of them [rags] offends me more than the stripes I have received. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Take her skin from her face, and thou shalt see all loathsomeness under it. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 566.

The catacombs must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open nitches. Addison.

LOAVES, plural of loaf.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past. Bacon.

LOB.† n. s. [perhaps of the same origin as looby. See LOOBY.]

1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish.

Find Esau such a lout or lob.
Interlude of Jacob and Esau, (1568.)

Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll be gone,
Our queen and all her elves come here anon. Shakspeare.

2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers or sturdy beggars.

Crowdero, whom in irons bound,
Thou basely threw'st into lob's pound. Hudibras.

If he can once compass him, and get him in lobs-pound, he'll make nothing of him, but speak a few hard words to him, and perhaps bind him over to his good behaviour for a thousand years! Addison, Drummer.

3. A big worm.

For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the brandling are the chief. Walton, Angler.

To LOB. v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,—
——— and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

LO'BBY. n. s. [laube, German.] An opening before a room.

His lobbies fill with 'tendance,
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakspeare, Timon.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Wotton.

Try your back stairs, and let the lobby wait,
A stratagem in war is no deceit. King.

LO'BCOCK.* n. s. [from lob.] A word of contempt for a sluggish, stupid, inactive person; a lob. It is still a northern word. Sherwood.

Now next, my gallant youths, farewell;
My lads that oft have cheer'd my heart!
My grief of mind no tongue can tell,
To think that I from you must part:
I now must leave you all, alas,
And live with some old lobcock ass!
Breton, Works of a Young Wit, (1577.)

LOBE. n. s. [lobe, French; λοβὸς.] A division; a distinct part; used commonly for a part of the lungs.

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass for their eternal meal. Dryden.

Air-bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

From whence the quick reciprocating breath,
The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death. Sewel.

LO'BLOLLY.* n. s. A kind of seafaring dish. Chambers. An odd mixture of spoon-meat. Exmore dialect. On board the ships of war, water-gruel is called loblolly, and the surgeon's servant or mate the loblolly-boy. Grose.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, and craw-fish. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It happeneth often that the lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other. Brown, Vulg. Err.

LO'BULE.* n. s. A little lobe. Chambers.

LO'CAL. adj. [local, French; locus, Latin.]

1. Having the properties of place.

By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hooker.

A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
Leaving material world, and local skies. Prior.

2. Relating to place.

The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other. Hooker.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped supposing that circumstance changed. Stillingfleet.

3. Being in a particular place.

Dream not of their fight,
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head, or heel. Milton, P. L.

How is the change of being sometimes here, sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum, without a change in the body moved? Digby on Bodies.

LOCA'LITY.† n. s. [from local.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension; and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned. Glanville.

Fond Fancy's eye,
That inly gives locality and form
To what she prizes best. Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 3.

These factions — weakened and distracted the locality of patriotism. Burke, Thoughts on French Affairs.

LO'CALLY.† adv. [from local.] With respect to place.

Being ascended into heaven, he is locally there.
Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) E. iii. b.

O Saviour, whiles thou now sittest gloriously in heaven, thou dost no less impart thyself unto us, than if thou stoodst visibly by us, than if we stood locally by thee.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Whether things, in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers.
Glanville.

To LO'CATE.* v. a. [loco, locatus, Lat.] To place.

Under this roof the biographer of Johnson, and the pleasant tourist to Corsica and the Hebrides, passed many jovial joyous hours; here he has located some of the liveliest scenes, and most brilliant passages, in his entertaining anecdotes of his friend Samuel Johnson. Cumberland, Memoirs of himself.

LOCA'TION.† n. s. [location, old Fr. locatio, Lat.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.

Any determinate location or position of the body.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

Loch.† n. s. [Gael. loch; Irish, lough; Welsh, llugh; Sax. luh; Lat. lacus.] A lake. Scottish. See Lough.

A lake or loch that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

Loch.* n. s. [loch, French; but the word is originally Arabick.]

Fotherby, Athcom. (1622,) p. 193.

Lo'cky.* adj. [from lock.] Having locks or tufts. Not in use. Sherwood.

Locomo'tion.† n. s. [locus and motus, Lat.] Power of changing place.

All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Many in the set locomotions and movements of their days have measured the circuit of it, [the earth.]
Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 33.

An excursion to London, upon the footing that locomotion then was, when an hundred miles were a journey of three days, was a matter of some importance.
Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone.

LO'COMOTIVE. adj. [locus and moveo, Latin.] Changing place; having the power of removing or changing place.

I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals. Derham, Phys. Theol.

In the night too, oft he kicks,
Or shews his locomotive tricks. Prior.

An animal cannot well be defined from any particular organical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Locomoti'vity.* n. s. [from locomotive.] Power of changing place.

The most superb edifice that ever was conceived or constructed, would not equal the smallest insect, blest with sight, feeling, and locomotivity. Bryant.

Lo'cust. n. s. [locusta, Latin.] A devouring insect.

The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark that locusts are very numerous in Africk, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with. Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine and the neighbouring countries. Calmet.

To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coasts. Exodus.

Air replete with the steams of animals, rotting, has produced pestilential fevers, such hath likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts. Arbuthnot on Air.

Lo'cust-tree. n. s.

The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an unicapsular hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungous stringy substance. Miller.

More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing
I bear Antonio. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

5. To place in the memory.

This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodged it, and noted it, in some particulars. Bacon, Hen. VII.

6. To harbour or cover.

The deer is lodg'd, I've track'd her to her covert;
Rush in at once. Addison, Cato.

7. To afford place to.

The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

8. To lay flat.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders heads. Shakspeare.

We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land. Shakspeare.

To Lodge. v. n.

1. To reside; to keep residence.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye,
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie. Shakspeare.

Something holy lodges in that breast,
And with these raptures moves the vocal air
To testify his hidden residence. Milton, Comus.

And dwells such rage in softest bosoms then?
And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.

2. To take a temporary habitation.

Why commands the king,
That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
While he himself keepeth in the cold field? Shakspeare.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakspeare, Othello.

Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people. Samuel.

3. To take up residence at night.

My lords
And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night. Shakspeare.

Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people! Jeremiah.

Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way. Bp. Taylor.

4. To lie flat.

Long cone wheat they reckon in Oxfordshire best for rank clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildewed. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Lodge.† n. s. [logis, French; lodge, Dan. a hut, a shed; log, Celt. a place.]

1. A small house in a park or forest.

He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he calleth his desert, wherein he hath built two fine lodges. Sidney.

I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shakspeare.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chace. Shakspeare.

Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both stood,
Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd
The God that made both sky, air, earth. Milton, P. L.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited family. Swift.

2. Any small house appendant to a greater; as, the porter's lodge.

Lo'dgeable.* adj. [from lodge; Fr. logeable.] Capable of affording a temporary dwelling. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

The nest of love, the lodging of delight,
The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure,
The sacred harbour of that heavenly spright. Spenser.

3. Harbour; covert.

The hounds were uncoupled; and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

4. Convenience to sleep on.

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging. Ray on Creation.

To Loffe.* v. n. To laugh. See To Laugh.

The whole quire hold their hips, and loffe. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

LOFT.† n. s. [lloft, Welsh; or from lift. Dr. Johnson. — Loft, Goth. cubile in supremâ contignatione: loefta, Su. evehere, sursum tollere. Serenius. — The past participle of hlıꝼıan, Sax. to raise, to elevate. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A floor.

Eutychus fell down from the third loft. Acts.

There is a traverse placed in a loft above. Bacon.

2. The highest floor.

To lull him in his slumber soft,
A trickling stream from high rock tumbling down,
And ever drizzling rain upon the loft,
Mixt with a murmuring wind. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Rooms on high.

Passing through the spheres of watchful fire,
And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder. Milton, Vac. Ex.

A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn loft, through a chink. Pope.

4. On Loft. See Aloft.

Lo'ftily. adv. [from lofty.]

1. On high; in an elevated place.

2. Proudly; haughtily.

They speak wickedly concerning oppression; they speak loftily. Psal. lxxiii. 8.

3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely.

My lowly verse may loftily arise,
And lift itself unto the highest skies. Spenser, F. Q.

Lo'ftiness. n. s. [from lofty.]

1. Height; local elevation.

2. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment.

Three poets in three distant ages born;
The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
The next in majesty; in both the last. Dryden.

3. Pride; haughtiness.

Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure. Collier.

Lo'fty. adj. [from loft, or lift.]

1. High; hovering; elevated in place.

Cities of men with lofty gates and towers. Milton, P. L.

See lofty Lebanon his head advance,
See nodding forests on the mountains dance. Pope, Messiah.

2. Elevated in condition or character.

Thus saith the high and lofty One. Isaiah.

3. Sublime; elevated in sentiment.

He knew
Himself to sing and build the lofty rhime. Milton, Lycidas.

4. Proud; haughty.

The eyes of the lofty shall be humbled. Isaiah.

Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that sought him, sweet as Summer. Shakspeare.

Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
A lowly servant, but a lofty mate. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

LOG.† n. s. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from lıȝȝan, Saxon, to lie; Junius from logge, Dutch, sluggish; perhaps the Lat. lignum, is the true original. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Sax. lecȝan, ponere, to lay. Laȝ, (a broad, and retaining the sound of the ȝ,) log, from the Saxon, corresponds with post from the Latin. We say, indifferently, "to stand like a post," or "to stand like a log," in our way. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 167.]

1. A shapeless bulky piece of wood.

Would the lightning had
Burnt up those logs that thou'rt injoin'd to pile. Shakspeare.

The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

2. A piece of wood, about seven or eight inches long, which, with its line, serves to measure the course of a ship at sea.

Log is a machine used to measure the ship's head way, or the rate of her velocity as she advances through the sea. It is composed by a reel and line, to which is fixed a small piece of wood forming the quadrant of a circle. Hawkesworth, Voyages.

3. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin. Calmet.

A meat offering mingled with oil, and one log of oil. Leviticus.

Log-board.* n. s. A table divided into five columns, containing an account of a ship's way measured by the log.

Log-book.* n. s. A register of a ship's way and other naval incidents.

Log-line.* n. s. See the second sense of Log.

To Log. v. n. In the language of the vulgar, to move to and fro. Used in Cornwall and Devon. Polwhele.

Logari'thmical.* } adj. [Fr. logarithmique.] Relat-
Logari'thmick. } ing to logarithms.

Mr. Walter Warner made an inverted logarithmical table, whereas Brigg's table fills his margin with numbers, encreasing by units, and over against them sets their logarithms, which because of incommensurability must needs be either abundant or deficient. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 579.

LO'GARITHMS. n. s. [logarithme, Fr. λόγος and ἀριθμος.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier Lord Merchison, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers, contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one: for instance,

0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128	256	512

Where the numbers above beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dissecting the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and trisecting them for the cube, and so on. Harris.

Lo'ggats.† n. s.

Loggats is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the same which is now called kettle-pins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. Hanmer.

This is a game played in several parts of England even at this time. A stake is fixed into the ground; those, who play, throw loggats at it; and he, that is nearest the stake, wins. I have seen it played in different counties at their sheep-shearing feasts. Steevens.

It is probably from the word log: the game was so called from the loggets or wooden pins made use of in the play. Whalley.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

LO'GGERHEAD. n. s. [logge, Dutch, stupid, and head; or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt; a blockhead; a thickscul.

Where hast been, Hal?—
With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other people's fires. L'Estrange.

To fall to Loggerheads. } To scuffle; to fight with-
To go to Loggerheads. } out weapons.

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his master.

Lo'ggerheaded. adj. [from loggerhead.] Dull; stupid; doltish.

You loggerheaded and unpolish'd groom, what! no attendance? Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

LO'GICK. n. s. [logique, French; logica, Latin, from λόγος.] The art of reasoning. One of the seven sciences.

Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. Watts, Logick.

Talk logick with acquaintance,
And practise rhetorick in your common talk. Shakspeare.

By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. Clarendon.

Here foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound,
There stript fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground. Pope.

Lo'gical. adj. [from logick.]

1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.

The heretick complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. Hooker.

Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. Dryden, Pref. to Ann. Mir.

We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtile rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them. Baker.

2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick.

A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head. Addison, Spect.

Lo'gically. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logick.

How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?
From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either. Prior.

Logi'cian. n. s. [logicien, French; logicus, Latin.] A teacher or professor of logick; a man versed in logick.

If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgement as invention, he may do great matters. Bacon.

If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. Addison.

Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,
Came whip and spur. Pope, Dunciad.

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception. Swift.

The Arabian physicians were subtile men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author. Baker.

Lo'gman. n. s. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.

For your sake
Am I this patient logman? Shakspeare, Tempest.

Lo'gogriphe.* n. s. [λόγος, discourse, and γρῖφος, an enigma, from γρῖπος, a net, Gr.] A sort of riddle.

Had I compil'd from Amadis de Gaul,—
Or spun out riddles, and weav'd fifty tomes
Of logogriphes, and curious palindromes,—
Thou then hadst had some colour for thy flames
On such my serious follies. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Lo'gomachy.† n. s. [λογομαχία, Gr. logomachie, Fr.] A contention in words; a contention about words.

Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities; and so transformed her to a meer kind of sophistry and logomachy. Howell.

The contentions of the eastern and western churches about this subject, are but a mere logomachy, or strife about words. Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, p. 403.

I shall not enter into a mere logomachy, or strife about sounds and phrases. Trapp, Popery truly stated, P. ii. § 1.

LO'GWOOD. n. s.

Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy. Hill, Mat. Med.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water. Peacham on Drawing.

LO'HOCK. n. s.

Lohock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called eclegmas, lambatives, or linctuses. Quincy.

Lohocks and pectorals were prescribed, and venesection repeated. Wiseman, Surgery.

LOIN.† n. s. [llwyn, Welsh. Dr. Johnson. — Our word was originally lend; lends being the loins. See LENDS. Callander derives the Sax. and Germ. lendenu, and lenden, from leinga "to extend, the loins being the length of the trunk of the body."]

1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.

So have I seen in larder dark
Of veal a lucid loin,
Replete with many a brilliant spark,
As wise philosophers remark,
At once both stink and shine. Ld. Dorset.

2. Loins; the reins.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins! Shakspeare, Rich. III.
Virgin mother, hail!
High in the love of Heaven! yet from my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son
Of God Most High. Milton, P. L.
A multitude, like which the populous north
Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass
Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the south. Milton, P. L.

To LO'ITER.† v. n. [leuteren, loteren, Teut. to linger; lata, Gothick, tardy, slow.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.

Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. Shakspeare.

Whence this long delay?
You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away. Dryden.

If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity. Rogers.

To LO'ITER.* v. a. To consume in trifles; to waste carelessly.

Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away. Locke.

What have we found,
In life's austerer hours, delectable
As the long day so loiter'd? Hurdis, Village Curate.

LO'ITERER. n. s. [from loiter.] A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a largess to cry,
And daily to loiterers have a good eye. Tusser, Husb.

The poor, by idleness or unthriftiness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers. Hayward.

Where hast thou been, thou loiterer?
Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd
To search if thou wert come. Otway.

Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we live not like idle loiterers and truants. More.

Ever listless loiterers, that attend
No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend. Pope.

To LOLL.† v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the Reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius, with great probability, cites the Iceland. lolla, to be slowly moved, loll, a slow step, as the origin of our word.]

1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.

So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me: so shakes and pulls me. Shakspeare, Othello.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
Close by a softly murmuring stream,
Where lovers us'd to loll and dream. Hudibras.
To loll on couches, rich with cytron steds,
And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds. Dryden.
Void of care he lolls supine in state,
And leaves his business to be done by fate. Dryden.
But wanton now, and lolling at our ease,
We suffer all the inveterate ills of peace. Dryden.
A lazy lolling sort
Of ever listless loiterers. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To hang out. Used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet. Dryden.
With harmless play amidst the bowls he pass'd,
And with his lolling tongue assay'd the taste. Dryden.

To LOLL. v. a. To put out. Used of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defects are blind,
Hadst thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
To see the people, when splay mouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot. Dryden, Pers.
By Strymon's freezing streams he sat alone,
Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,
Fierce tigers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. Dryden, Virg.

LO'LLARD.* } LO'LLER. } n. s. [lollaerd, Teut. lollardus, low Latin. Some pretend, that this word was derived from Walter Lolhard, a German, who began to dogmatize at the beginning of the fourteenth century; others from the Germ. loben, to praise, and herr, Lord, because the lollards travelled about from place to place singing holy hymns; Chaucer, from lolium, cockle or tares, as if these persons were the tares sown in Christ's vineyard; and others from the old Germ. lullen or lollen, to sing, and the termination hard, with which many of the high Dutch words end; from the manner, as already stated, of their singing hymns, or, as some think, from their custom also of chanting requiems to the souls of the dead. Du Cange believes the word to be of German origin; and agrees with Killian's lollaerd, (mussitator,) a mumbler of prayers, lollen, signifying also to mumble, to hum.] A name given to the first reformers of the Roman Catholick religion in England; a reproachful appellation of the followers of Wicliffe. See LOLLARDY.

I smell a loller in the wind, quoth he: —
He shal no gospel glosen here ne teche: —
He wolde sowen som difficultee,

Or springen cockle in our clene corne:
And therfore, hoste, I warne thee beforne.
Chaucer, Shipm. Prol.

They are of him [the pope] cursed with booke, bell, and candle, out of his heaven, as Pasquin calleth, and this natural life, as lollords and heretikes not worthy the benefite of temporall quiet. Anderson, Expos. on Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 59.

In his lectures he [H. Crompe] called the heretikes lollards. Fox, Acts and Mon. of Wicliffe.

Dr. Wiclif dying at Lutterworth Dec. 31. 1384, his followers were soon after distinguished, or rather reproached, by the nickname of lollards. Lewis, Life of Bp. Pecock, p. 10.

LO'LLARDY.* n. s. [from lollard.] The doctrine of lollards; a name given to what, before the Reformation, was deemed heresy.

Beware that thou be not oppressed
With antichriste's lollardie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

The spirit of popery, not Christianity, was to be seen in the zeal of the enemies to lollardy.
Young on Idolat. Corruptions, ii. 331.

LOMBA'RDICK.* adj. [from the Lombards.] Applied to one of the ancient alphabets derived from the Roman, and relating to the manuscripts of Italy.

Writing in Italy was uniform until the irruption of the Goths, when it was disfigured by the taste of that barbarous people. In 569, the Lombards having possessed themselves of all that part of the empire, except Rome and Ravenna, introduced another form of writing, which is termed Lombardic. As the popes used the Lombardic manner in their bulls, the appellation of Roman was sometimes given to it in the eleventh century. Though the dominion of the Lombards continued no longer than about two hundred and six years, the name of their writing was still current beyond the Alps, from the seventh century to the beginning of the thirteenth, and then ceased. Astle.

As to the Lombardic character, we have not a book that I know of, written in it, I mean agreeable to the specimens of it in Mabillon de Re diplomatica; nor did I ever see any in any other place. In Sir J. Cotton's (I perceive by your catalogue) there be several. — Several of our MSS. are said by Dr. Langbain to be written in Lombardic letters; but they are the common text or square hand, about 400 years old, vastly different from Mabillon, as I suppose yours are also.
Humph. Wanley to Dr. Smith, (1697,) Aubrey's Anec. i. 85.

LOMP. n. s. A kind of roundish fish.

LO'NDONER.* n. s. [from London.] A native of London; an inhabitant of London.

What was the speech amongst the Londoners
Concerning the French journey. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The felicity of Queen Elizabeth may be much imputed to the rare temper and moderation of men's minds in those days; for the purse of the common people, and Londoners, did beat nothing so high as it did afterwards, when they grew pampered with so long peace and plenty. Howell, Lett. iv. 12.

Some Londoners, whom they extolled to the skies for their wit, I knew, passed in town for silly fellows.
Addison, Freehold. No. 22.

LO'NDONISM.* n. s. A mode of expression said to be peculiar to London.

The subject is, to shew, that the humble and accepted dialect of London, the Londonisms, as I may call them, are far from being reproachable in themselves, however they may appear to us not born within the sound of Bow-bell.
Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Language.

LONE.† adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

Here the lone hour a blank of life displays. Savage.

Thus vanish sceptres, coronets, and balls,
And leave you in lone woods, or empty walls. Pope.

2. Single; not conjoined or neighbouring to others.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court. Pope.

3. Formerly denoting single, unmarried; or in widowhood.

Moreover this Glycerie is a lone woman.
Kyffin, Transl. of Terence, (1588.)

A hundred mark is a long loan for a poor lone woman to bear. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

Queen Elizabeth being a lone woman, and having few friends, refusing to marry.
Title to a Collect. of Records, (1642.)

LONE.* } LO'NNIN. } n. s. Our northern words for a lane.

LO'NELINESS. n. s. [from lonely.]

1. Solitude; want of company.

The huge and sportful assembly grew to him a tedious loneliness, esteeming nobody since Daiphantus was lost. Sidney.

2. Disposition to solitude.

I see
The mystery of your loneliness, and find
Your salt tears' head. Shakspeare.

LO'NELY. adj. [from lone.]

1. Solitary.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon; that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shakspeare.

Why thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton, Comus.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell. Dryden, Æn.

2. Addicted to solitude.

When, fairest princess,
You lonely thus from the full court retire,
Love and the graces follow to your solitude. Rowe.

LO'NENESS.† n. s. [from lone.] Solitude; dislike of company.

One that doth wear away himself in loneness.
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

Those that would make loneness acceptable, by advising men, as through a prospective, to behold the greatness of structures and bravery of courts, through the humility of a cottage.
Sir R. Tempest on Solitariness, p. 95.

I can love both fair and brown, —
Her who loves loneness best. Donne, Poems, p. 7.

If of court-life you knew the good,
You would leave loneness. Ibid. p. 131.

LO'NESOME.† adj. [from lone.] Solitary; dismal.

They dance as they were wood,
Around an huge black goat, in lonesome wood,
By shady night, far from or house or town.
More, Pre-exist. of the Soul, st. 49.

You either must the earth from rest disturb,
Or roll around the heavens the solar orb;
Else what a dreadful face will nature wear!
How horrid will these lonesome seats appear! Blackmore.

LO'NESOMELY.* adv. [from lonesome.] In a dismal or solitary manner.

LO'NESOMENESS.* n. s. [from lonesome.] State or quality of being lonesome.

The darkness and lonesomenes of the night, is no improper similitude; 'tis a pretty emblem of our mortality.
Killingbeck, Serm. p. 96.

LONG.† adj. [long, French; longus, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of the Sax. lenȝian, extendere, producere. Nor can any other derivation be found for the Latin longus. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 374. — Mr. Tooke has omitted to notice the M. Goth. lagg, logg, of which the first g is pronounced like our n; and from which long should seem to be immediately derived.]

1. Not short: used of time.

He talked a long while, even till break of day. Acts, xx.
He was desirous to see him of a long season. St. Luke, xxiii.

2. Not short; used of space.
Empress, the way is ready, and not long. Milton, P. L.

3. Having one of its geometrical dimensions in a greater degree than either of the other.
His branches became long because of the waters. Ezek.
We made the trial in a long necked phial left open at the top. Boyle.

4. Of any certain measure in length.
Women eat their children of a span long. Lam. ii. 20.
These, as a line, their long dimensions drew,
Streaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milton, P. L.
The fig-tree spreads her arms,
Branching so broad and long. Milton, P. L.
A ponderous mace,
Full twenty cubits long, he swings around. Pope.

5. Not soon ceasing, or at an end.
Man goeth to his long home. Ecclus. xii. 5.
Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land. Exodus, xx. 12.
They open to themselves at length a way
Up hither, under long obedience tried. Milton, P. L.
Him after long debate of thoughts revolv'd
Irresolute, his final sentence chose. Milton, P. L.
Long and ceaseless hiss. Milton, P. L.

6. Dilatory.
Death will not be long in coming, and the covenant of the grave is not shewed unto thee. Ecclus. xiv. 12.

7. Tedious in narration.
Chief mastery to dissect,
With long and tedious havock, fabled knights. Milton, P. L.
Reduce, my muse, the wandering song,
A tale should never be too long. Prior.

8. Continued by succession to a great series.
But first a long succession must ensue. Milton, P. L.

9. [From the verb, To long.] Longing; desirous; or perhaps, long continued, from the disposition to continue looking at any thing desired.
Praying for him, and casting a long look that way, he saw the galley leave the pursuit. Sidney.
By every circumstance I know he loves;
Yet he but doubts, and parlies, and casts out
Many a long look for succour. Dryden.

10. [In musick and pronunciation.] Protracted: as a long note; a long syllable.

11. Affectedly deliberate: rather an expression of contempt.
There is nothing to be done, according to them, in the common way; and let the matter in hand be what it will, it must be carried with an air of importance, and transacted, if we may so speak, with an ostentatious secrecy. These are your persons of long heads, who would fain make the world believe their thoughts and ideas very much superiour to their neighbours! Tatler, No. 191.

LONG.† adv.

1. To a great length in space.
The marble brought, erects the spacious dome,
Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,
On which the planted grove and pensile garden grows. Prior.

2. Not for a short time.
With mighty barres of long-enduring brass. Fairfax.
When the trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount. Exod. xix. 13.
The martial Ancus
Furbish'd the rusty sword again,
Resum'd the long-forgotten shield. Dryden.
One of these advantages, which Corneille has laid down, is the making choice of some signal and long-expected day, whereon the action of the play is to depend. Dryden.
So stood the pious prince unmov'd, and long
Sustain'd the madness of the noisy throng. Dryden, Æn.
The muse resumes her long-forgotten lays,
And love, restor'd, his ancient realm surveys. Dryden.

No man has complained that you have discoursed too long on any subject, for you leave us in an eagerness of learning more. Dryden.
Persia left for you
The realm of Candahar for dower I bought,
That long-contended prize for which you fought. Dryden.
It may help to put an end to that long-agitated and unreasonable question, whether man's will be free or no? Locke.

6. [For along; au long, Fr.] All along; throughout: of time.
Them among
There sat a man of ripe and perfect age,
Who did them meditate all his life long. Spenser, F. Q.
Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long,
And then they say no spirit walks abroad,
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, no witch hath power to charm,
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
He fed me all my life long to this day. Gen. xlviii. 15.
Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psalms.

7. Owing to; in consequence of: an abbreviation of along; not from the Sax. ʒelanʒ, a fault, as Dr. Johnson has hastily asserted, but from ʒe-lanʒ, long of; not meaning by the fault, by the failure, as he has further mistated it; and not a substantive, as he makes it. See the seventh sense of ALONG.
But if it is alonge on me,
Of that ye unavanced be,
Or els if it be longe on you,
The soth shall be preved nowe. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.
Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pains and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good. Hooker.
Maine, Bloys, Poictiers, and Tours are won away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Mistress, all this coil is long of you. Shakspeare.

Loon. n. s. [This word, which is now used only in Scotland, is the English word lown. See Lown.] A sorry fellow; a scoundrel; a rascal.

Thou cream-fac'd loon!
Where got'st thou that goose look? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The false loon, who could not work his will
By open force, employ'd his flattering skill:
I hope, my lord, said he, I not offend;
Are you afraid of me that are your friend? Dryden.

This young lord had an old cunning rogue, or, as the Scots call it, a false loon of a grandfather, that one might call a Jack of all trades. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

LOOP.† n. s. [from loopen, Dutch, to run. Dr. Johnson. — Hibern. lup, amentum; Icel. lopr, pensum lanificii, lippa, filum digitis ducere. Serenius.]

1. A double through which a string or lace is drawn; an ornamental double or fringe.

Nor any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this, so curious network, to compare. Spenser.

Make me to see't, or at least to prove it,
That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on. Shakspeare, Othello.

Bind our crooked legs in hoops
Made of shells, with silver loops. B. Jonson.

An old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his clothes with great integrity, while all the rest of the world are degenerated into buttons, pockets, and loops. Addison.

2. A small aperture, in ancient castles, to spy the enemy, or to fire ordnance from, or to admit light.

This uneasy loophol'd gaol,
In which y' are hamper'd by the fetlock,
Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock. Hudibras.

Loord.† n. s. [loerd, Dutch; lourdaut, French; lurdan, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow.

D. Trevoux derives lourdaut from lorde or lourde, a village in Gascoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascoigns are so far removed, that they are aukward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortuned a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppressed, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dulness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean. — Dr. Johnson might have added to the remark of Macbean, that stupidity was a principal feature in the lurdane's character:

" In every house lord Dane did then rule all;
" Whence laysie lozels LURDANES now we call."
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 588.

Loord indeed is no other than the Teutonick word luyaerd, or loer, loerd, an idle, slothful fellow; hence the Fr. lourd, stupid, blockish; Ital. lordo, foul, filthy, lordone, a " lubberly, slovenly, filthy fellow," Florio, 1598. Serenius makes the Goth. lort, filth, the origin. See also LURDAN.] A drone.

Siker, thou's but a lazy loord,
And rekes much of thy swinke,
That with fond terms and witless words
To blear mine eyes dost think. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

LOOS.* n. s. [los, old Fr. Lacombe; laus, Latin. Mr. H. Tooke, however, considers this word as the past participle of the Sax. hlyan, to celebrate, and as the origin of the Lat. laus.] Praise; renown. Obsolete.

Hercules that had the grete loos. Chaucer.

That much he feared, least reprochfull blame
With foule dishonour him mote blot therefore;

3. Apt to blab; not secret.

Loqua'ciousness.* n. s. [from loquacious.] Loquacity; too much talk.

Loqua'city.† n. s. [loquacité, Fr. Cotgrave; loquacitas, Latin.] Too much talk.

Why loquacity is to be avoided, the wise man gives sufficient reason, for in the multitude of words there wanteth not sin. Ray on Creation.

Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity by fits. Arbuthnot.

LORD.† n. s. [hlaford, Sax. Dr. Johnson.—" lavardur, Icel. herus, dominus; à laefe, lave, area, horreum; à lad, terra, et warda; alii, nec incommodé." Serenius. Thus Verelius derives lavardur, from lad, land, and vard, a guardian; and the G. Andr. considers the word quasi lavagardr, horrei oeconomus, from lave, a barn, a storehouse. Others view loaf as the origin of this word. See Lady. Junius thus deduces it from hlaf, and ord, initium, origo, q. d. he who administers bread; Stiernhielm, from hlaf, and waerd, an host. Mr. H. Tooke, observing that hlaf is the past participle of the Sax. hlifian, to raise, says that hlaford is a compound word of hlaf, raised or elevated, and ord, (ortus,) source, origin, birth. Lord therefore means high-born, or of an exalted origin. Div. of Purl. ii. 158. A learned commentator of elder times has made the following remark on lord: " Adonai, lord, is of the former word Eden, a base or pillar which sustaineth any thing: this title sheweth, that the Lord, who created all things, doth also sustain and preserve them. Our English word lord hath much like force, being contracted of the old Saxon laford, which cometh of laef, to sustain." Leigh's Critica Sacra, edit. 1650. p. 4. col. 1.]

1. Monarch; ruler; governour.

Man over man
He made not lord. Milton, P. L.

Of Athens he was lord. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

We have our author's only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.

They call'd their lord Actæon to the game,
He shook his head in answer to the name. Addison.

O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain,
Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain. Vanity of Human Wishes.

2. Master; supreme person.

But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours, my lord. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. A tyrant; an oppressive ruler.

Now being assembled into one company, rather without a lord than at liberty to accomplish their misery, they fall to division. Hayward.

'Tis death to fight, but kingly to control
Lord like at ease, with arbitrary power,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour. Dryden.

4. A husband.

I oft in bitterness of soul deplor'd
My absent daughter, and my dearer lord. Pope, Odyss.

5. One who is at the head of any business; an overseer.

Grant harvest lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to doo. Tusser, Husb.

6. A nobleman.

Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord. Shakspeare.

7. A general name for a peer of England.

Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords. King Charles.

8. A baron, as distinguished from those of higher title.

9. An honorary title applied to officers; as, lord chief justice, lord mayor, lord chief baron.

10. A ludicrous title, given by the vulgar to a hump-backed person; traced, however, to the Greek λορδὸς, crooked. See Du Cange in V. LURDUS. And Whiter's Etym. Magn. p. 338.

To LORD. v. n. To domineer; to rule despotically: with over before the subject of power.

Unrighteous lord of love! what law is this,
That me thou makest thus tormented be?
The whiles she lordeth in licentious bliss
Of her free will, scorning both thee and me. Spenser.

I see them lording it in London streets. Shakspeare.

Those huge tracks of ground they lorded over, begat wealth, wealth ushered in pride. Howell, Voc. Forest.

They had by this possess'd the towers of Gath,
And lorded over them whom now they serve. Milton, S. A.

I should choose rather to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord, than by a denial of truths, through blood and perjury, wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.

But if thy passions lord it in thy breast,
Art thou not still a slave? Dryden, Pers.

The valour of one man the afflicted throne
Imperial, that once lorded o'er the world,
Sustain'd. Philips.

The civilizers! the disturbers say,
'The robbers, the corrupters of mankind!
Proud vagabonds! who make the world your home,
And lord it where you have no right. Philips, Briton.

To LORD.* v. a. To invest with the dignity and privileges of a lord.

He being thus lorded,
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact, — like one,
Who having, unto truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie, — he did believe
He was the duke. Shakspeare, Tempest.

LO'RDING.† n. s. [from lord.]

1. Sir; master; an ancient mode of address.

Now, lordinges, trewely,
Ye ben to me welcome right hertily. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

Listen, lordings, if ye list to weet
The cause. Spenser, F. Q.

He call'd the worthies then, and spake them so:
Lordings, you know I yielded to your will. Fairfax, Tasso.

2. A little lord; a lord in contempt or ridicule.

I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys.
You were pretty lordings then! Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

As if they would turn the world upside down, and put the steeple into the bell, and bell into the clapper, beggars on horseback, and lordings lackey.
Favour, Antiq. over Novelty, (1619,) p. 514.

To lordings proud I tune my lay,
Who feast in bower or hall;
Though dukes they be, to dukes I say,
That pride will have a fall. Swift.

LO'RDLIKE.* adj. [lord and like.]

1. Befitting a lord.

Feare to lose the lordlyke lyvynges of thys worlde.
Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) D. v. b.

2. Haughty; proud; insolent.

Lordlike at ease, with arbitrary power,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour. Dryden, Iliad.

LO'RDLING. n. s. A diminutive lord.

Traulus, of amphibious breed,
By the dam from lordlings sprung,
By the sire exhal'd from dung. Swift.

LO'RDLINESS.† n. s. [from lordly.]

1. Dignity; high station.

Thou vouchsafest here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so weak. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. Pride; haughtiness.

Balaam being also the false prophet, and set here for the pope and his clergy, agrees excellently well with the lordliness of him in this Pergamenian period, wherein he trode upon the necks of emperours, and kicked their crowns off with his feet. More, on the Seven Churches, Pref.

LO'RDLY. adj. [from lord.]

1. Befitting a lord.

Lordly sins require lordly estates to support them. South.

2. Proud; haughty; imperious; insolent.

Bad, as yourself, my lord;
An't like your lordly, lord protectorship! Shakspeare.

Of me as of a common enemy,
So dreaded once, may now exasperate them,
I know not: lords are lordliest in their wine. Milton, S. A.

Expect another message more imperious,
More lordly thundering than thou well wilt bear. Milton. S. A.

Every rich and lordly swain,
With pride wou'd drag about her chain. Swift.

LO'RDLY. adv. Imperiously; despotically; proudly.

So when a tiger sucks the bullock's blood,
A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
Roars lordly fierce, and challenges the food. Dryden.

LO'RDSHIP. n. s. [from lord.]

1. Dominion; power.

Let me never know that any base affection should get any lordship in your thoughts. Sidney.

It being set upon such an insensible rising of the ground, it gives the eye lordship over a good large circuit. Sidney.

They which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them. St. Mark, x. 42.

Needs must the lordship there from virtue slide. Fairfax.

2. Seigniory; domain.

How can those grants of the king be avoided, without wronging of those lords which had those lands and lordships given them. Spenser on Ireland.

There is lordship of the fee, wherein the master doth much joy, when he walketh about his own possessions. Wotton.

What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quandam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

3. Title of honour used to a nobleman not a duke.

I assure your lordship,
The extreme horrour of it almost turn'd me
To air, when first I heard it. B. Jonson, Catiline.

I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best husband now living. Dryden.

4. Titulary compellation of judges, and some other persons in authority and office.

LORE.† n. s. [lone, learning, Sax. from læpan, to learn.]

1. Lesson; doctrine; instruction.

And, for the modest lore of maidenhood
Bids me not sojourn with these armed men.
Oh whither shall I fly? Fairfax.

The law of nations, or the lore of war. Fairfax.

Calm region once,
And full of peace: now tost, and turbulent!
For understanding rul'd not; and the will Heard not her lore! but in subjection now
To sensual appetite. Milton, P. L.

The subtile fiend his lore
Soon learn'd, now milder, and thus answer'd smooth. Milton, P. L.

Lo! Rome herself, proud mistress now no more
Of arts, but thund'ring against heathen lore. Pope.

2. Workmanship.

In her right hand a rod of peace she bore,
About the which two serpents weren wound,
Entrayled mutually in lovely lore. Spenser, F. Q. iv

LORE.† pret. and part. [lopen, foplope leopan, Sax.] Lost; left. Obsolete. or lore." Plowman's Tale.

Neither of them she found where she them lore.
Spenser, F. Q.

Lo'rel.† n. s. [from leoꞃan, Sax.] An abandoned scoundrel. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Cornish term for a vagrant. Sometimes it is, in our lexicography, explained by losel; both indeed originally meaning what we now call "a lost man;" and is rendered into the Latin perditus, perditissimus. See Losel.

Every lorell shapeth hym to finde newe fraudes.
Chaucer, Boeth.

Siker thou speak'st like a lewd lorell
Of heaven to deemen so:
How be I am but rude and borrell,
Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Her wisdome did admire, and hearkned to her loring.
Spenser, F. Q. v. vii. 42.

Lo'riot.† n. s. [loriot, Fr.] The bird called a witwal. [galgulus.] Cotgrave.

Lorn.† pret. pass. and part. [loꞃen, Sax. from leoꞃan.] Left; forsaken; lost.

I curse the stound
That ever I cast to have lorne this ground.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

Who after that he had fair Una lorn,
Through light misdeeming of her loyalty. Spenser, F. Q.

But thou, lorn stream, whose sullen tide,
No sedge-crown'd sisters now attend,
Now waft me from the green hill's side,
Whose cold turf hides the buried friend.
Collins on the Death of Thomson.

To LOSE.† v. a. pret. and part. lost. [Gothick, liusan; Sax. leoꞃan, loꞃan.]

1. To forfeit by unsuccessful contest: the contrary to win.

I fought the battle bravely which I lost,
And lost it but to Macedonians. Dryden.

The lighten'd coursers ran;
They rush'd, and won by turns, and lost the day. Dryden.

2. To forfeit as a penalty. In this sense is Paradise lost.

Fame — few, alas! the casual blessing boast,
So hard to gain, so easy to be lost! Pope.

3. To be deprived of.

Lo... He lost his right hand with a shot, and, instead thereof, city after used a hand of iron. Knolles, Hist.

...tas, Latin.] ...tion of.

If salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted?
St. Matthew.

5. To possess no longer: contrary to keep.

They have lost their trade of woollen drapery. Graunt.

No youth shall equal hopes of glory give,
The Trojan honour and the Roman boast,
Admir'd when living, and ador'd when lost. Dryden.

We should never lose sight of the country, though sometimes entertained with a distant prospect of it. Addison.

6. To miss, so as not to find.

Venus wept the sad disaster
Of having lost her favourite dove. Prior.

7. To separate or alienate. It is perhaps in this sense always used passively, with to before that from which the separation is made.

But if to honour lost 'tis still decreed
For you my bowl shall flow, my flocks shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove. Pope, Odyss.

When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it hard, if their memory be reproached. Swift.

8. To ruin; to send to perdition.

In spite of all the virtue we can boast,
The woman that deliberates is lost. Addison.

9. To bewilder, so as that the way is no longer known.

I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city. Shakspeare.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetition of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept best by number from running into a confused heap, wherein the mind loses itself. Locke.

But rebel wit deserts thee oft in vain,
Lost in the maze of words he turns again. Pope.

10. To deprive of.

How should you go about to lose him a wife he loves with so much passion. Temple.

11. Not to employ; not to enjoy.

The happy have whole days, and those they use,
The unhappy have but hours, and these they lose. Dryden.

To lose these years which worthier thoughts require,
To lose that health which should those thoughts inspire.
Savage.

12. To squander, to throw away.

I no more complain,
Time, health, and fortune are not lost in vain. Pope.

13. To suffer to vanish from view.

Like following life in creatures we dissect,
We lose it in the moment we detect. Pope.

Oft in the passions' wild rotation tost,
Our spring of action to ourselves is lost. Pope.

16. To miss; to part with, so as not to recover.

These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire. Clarendon.

17. To be freed from; as, to lose a fever.

His seely back the bunch has got Which Edwin lost before. Parnel.

To Lose. v. n.

1. Not to win.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakspeare.

2. To decline; to fail.

Wisdom in discourse with her
Loses discountenanc'd, and like folly shews. Milton, P. L.

LO'SEABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.

Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it, be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general, and not loseable by them. Boyle.

LO'SEL.† n. s. [from the Sax. loꞅian, to perish, to be lost. What occasion is there for pronouncing this a corruption of lorel, when the derivation is so clear? Mr. Douce supposes the similarity of the letters r and z, in ancient manuscripts, to have occasioned the two words lorel, and losel, or lozel.] A scoundrel; a sorry worthless fellow. A word now obsolete.

Such losels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser on Ireland.

A losel wandering by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Spenser, F. Q.

Be not with work of losels' wit defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whose losses by lossels doth shew
More heere then is needful to tell. Tusser, Husb.

A gross hag!
And, losel, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The rude hand of many an idle lozel, that dares adventure to pourtray that sacred beautie. Loe, Bl. of Br. Beauty, (1614,) p. 51.

LO'SENGER.* n. s. [from the Sax. leaꞅunᵹe, lying; lozengier, Fr. a beguiler, Cotgrave.] A deceiver; a flatterer. Obsolete. Cockeram.

Alas! ye lordes, many a false flatour
Is in your court, and many a lozengeour.
Chaucer, Non. Pr. Tale.

LO'SER. n. s. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope: the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shakspeare.

No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

It cannot last, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.

A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief,
A sword and helm shall chear the loser's grief. Dryden.

Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South.

LO'SING.* n. s. [loꞅinᵹ, Saxon.] Loss; diminution.

The fear of the Lord goeth before the obtaining of authority: but roughness and pride is the losing thereof. Ecclus. x. 21.

LOSS.† n. s. [loꞅ, Sax. from the verb leoꞅan, to lose.]

1. Detriment; privation; diminution of good: the contrary to gain.

The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others. Hooker.

An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begat him; and a foolish daughter is born to his loss. Ecclus.

The abatement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear loss. Locke.

2. Miss; privation.

If he were dead, what would betide of me?
— No other harm but loss of such a lord.
— The loss of such a lord includes all harms. Shakspeare.

3. Deprivation; forfeiture.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man
Restore it, and regain. Milton, P. L.

4. Destruction.

Her fellow ships from far her loss descried;
But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside. Dryden.

There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the loss but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

5. Fault; puzzle: used only in the following phrase.

Not the least transaction of sense and motion in man, but philosophers are at a loss to comprehend. South, Serm.

Reason is always striving, and always at a loss, while it is exercised about that which is not its proper object. Dryden.

A man may sometimes be at a loss which side to close with. Baker on Learning.

6. Useless application.

It would be loss of time to explain any farther our superiority to the enemy in numbers of men and horse. Addison.

LO'SSFUL.* adj. [loss and full.] Detrimental; noxious.

Aught that might be lossful or prejudicial to us.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 277.

LO'SSLESS.* adj. [loss and less.] Exempt from loss.

Rebellion rages in our Irish province; but, with miraculous and lossless victories of few against many, is daily discomfited and broken. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

LOST. participial adj. [from lose.] No longer perceptible.

In seventeen days appear'd your pleasing coast,
And woody mountains, half in vapours lost. Pope, Odyss.

LOT.† n. s. [hlaut, Gothick; hlot, Saxon; lot, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of the Sax. hliban, to cover. Mr. H. Tooke. — "The English word lot cometh of the Hebrew laat, to hide or cover, or to lie hid; because a lot is of obscure and doubtfull things." Leigh, Critica Sacra, 1650, p. 119. col. 1.]

1. Fortune; state assigned.

Kala, at length conclude my lingering lot:
Disdain me not, although I be not fair,
Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn. Sidney.

Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not, we lose what we have already. L'Estrange.

Prepar'd I stand; he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope, Odyss.

2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.

Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat. Lev. xvi. 8.

Their tasks in equal portions she divides,
And where unequal, there by lots decides. Dryden, Virg.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to shew, that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger. Broome.

3. A chance. See LOTTERY.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius.
Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as, what lot of silks had you at the sale?

5. Proportion of taxes; as, to pay scot and lot.

Anone cometh another —
And wyth her doth bryng
Mele, salt, or other thing,
Her harnest girdle, her wedding ring,
To pay for hir scot,
As cometh to her lot. Skelton, Poems, p. 131.

To LOT.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To assign; to set apart.

A just reward, such as all times before
Have ever lotted to those wretched folks. Sackville, Gorboduc.

They appoint no time for their release, but patiently abide his lotted leisure.
Anderson, Expos. on Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 54. b.

2. To distribute into lots; to catalogue: as, the goods are lotted.

3. To portion.

Some sense, and more estate, kind Heaven
To this well lotted peer hath given. Prior.

LOTE tree or Nettle tree.† n. s. [lote, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. A plant. See LOTOS.

The leaves of the lote tree are like those of the nettle. The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments: the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.

Next comes the Lote-tree, in whose dusky hue,
Her black and sun-burnt country you might view.
Tate's Cowley.

2. A little muddy fish, like an eel; an eelpout: also a small scaled fish. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

LOTH.* See LOATH.

LO'TOS.† n. s. [Latin.] See LOTE.

The trees around them all their food produce,
Lotos, the name divine, nectareous juice. Pope, Odyss.

There appear to have been two distinct species of lotus designed by the term, [lotos;] because Herodotus and Pliny, in particular, describe a marked difference between them: the one being an aquatic plant, whose root and seeds were eaten, in Egypt; the other, the fruit of a shrub or small tree, on the sandy coast of Lybia. Rennel on the Geograph. of Herodotus.

LO'TION. n. s. [lotio, Latin; lotion, French.]

A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with.
Quincy.

In lotions in women's cases, he orders two portions of hellebore macerated in two cotylæ of water. Arbuthnot on Coins.

LO'TTERY.† n. s. [lotterie, Fr. from lot.]

1. A game of chance; a sortilege; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.

Let high sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Fortune, that with malicious joy
Does man, her slave, oppress,
Still various and unconstant still,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
And makes a lottery of life. Dryden, Hor.

Every warriour may be said to be a soldier of fortune, and the best commanders to have a lottery for their work. South.

2. Allottery; allotment. Not now in use.

If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Fainting under Fortune's false lottery. Beaum. and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

LO'VAGE. n s. [levisticum, Latin.] A plant.

LOUD.† adj. [hluδ, Sax. the past participle of the verb to low, or to bellow; hlopan, behlopan, lowed, low'd. What we now write loud, was formerly, and more properly, written low'd. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 39.]

1. Noisy; striking the ear with great force.

They were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. St. Luke, xxiii. 23.

The numbers soft and clear,
Gently steal upon the ear;
Now louder, and yet louder rise,
And fill with spreading sounds the skies. Pope, St. Cecilia.

2. Clamorous; turbulent.

She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house.
Proverbs.

LOUD.* adv. Noisily; so as to strike the ear with great force.

The guests loud laughing, who can then be heard?
Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign. V. 2.

Contending on the Lesbian shore,
His prowess Philomelides confess'd,
And loud acclaiming Greeks the victor bless'd. Pope.

LO'UDLY. adv. [from loud.]

1. Noisily; so as to be heard far.

The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.

2. Clamorously; with violence of voice.

I read above fifty pamphlets, written by as many presbyterian divines, loudly disclaiming toleration. Swift.

LO'UDNESS. n. s. Noise; force of sound; turbulence; vehemence or furiousness of clamour.

Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have sallied out into complaint or loudness.
South.

To LOVE. v. a. [lupian, Sax.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love. —
—It is to be made all of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service;
It is to be all made of fantasy,
All made of passion, and all made of wishes;
All adoration, duty, and obedience;
All humbleness, all patience, all impatience,
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakspeare.

I could not love I'm sure
One who in love were wise. Cowley.

The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts. Addison.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.

None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew,
Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me,
And much above myself I lov'd them too. Cowley.

3. To regard with parental tenderness.

He that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. St. John.

4. To be pleased with; to delight in.

Wit, eloquence, and poetry,
Arts which I lov'd. Cowley.

He lov'd my worthless rhimes, and, like a friend,
Would find out something to commend. Cowley.

5. To regard with reverent unwillingness to offend.

Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart. Deut. vi. 5.

To LOVE.* v. n. To delight; to take pleasure.

Fish used to salt water delight more in fresh: we see that salmons and smelts love to get into rivers, though against the stream. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so. Jerem. v. 31.

LOVE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The passion between the sexes.

Hearken to the birds love-learned song,
The dewie leaves among! Spenser, Epithalam.

While idly I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness. Shakspeare.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shakspeare.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakspeare.

What need a vermeil-tinctur'd lip for that,
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn? Milton, Comus.

Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end,
Not wedlock treachery, endang'ring life. Milton, S. A.

A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier on Popularity.

You know you are in my power by making love. Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,
And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.
Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
And these love-darting eyes must roll no more. Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakspeare.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Dan. i. 9.

The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love. Phil. i. 17.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. St. John, xiii. 35.

Unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Ledean stars, so fam'd for love,

3. Courtship.

Demetrius
Made love to Nedar's daughter Helena,
And won her soul. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

If you will marry make your loves to me,
My lady is bespoke. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The enquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, the preference of it; and the belief of truth, the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. Bacon, Essays.

4. Tenderness; parental care.

No religion that ever was, so fully represents the goodness of God, and his tender love to mankind, which is the most powerful argument to the love of God. Tillotson.

5. Liking; inclination to: as the love of one's country.

In youth, of patrimonial wealth possest,
The love of science faintly warm'd his breast. Fenton.

6. Object beloved.

Open the temple gates unto my love. Spenser, Epithal.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue;
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Ralegh.
The banish'd never hopes his love to see. Dryden.
The lover and the love of human kind. Pope.

7. Lewdness.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

8. Unreasonable liking.

The love to sin makes a man sin against his own reason. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Men in love with their opinions may not only suppose what is in question, but allege wrong matter of fact. Locke.

9. Fondness; concord.

Come, love and health to all!—
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine; fill full. Shakspeare.

Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? 1 Cor. iv. 21.

10. Principle of union.

Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot so properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrapt up into one desire. South.

11. Picturesque representation of love.

The lovely babe was born with every grace:
Such was his form as painters, when they show
Their utmost art, on naked loves bestow. Dryden, Ovid.

12. A word of endearment.

'Tis no dishonour, trust me, love, 'tis none;
I would die for thee. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

13. Due reverence to God.

I know that you have not the love of God in you. St. John.

Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire; the one betwixt friends, the other betwixt lovers; the one a rational, the other a sensitive love: so our love of God consists of two parts, as esteeming of God, and desiring of him. Hammond.

The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love. Bp. Taylor.

14. A kind of thin silk stuff. Ainsworth.

This leaf held near the eye, and obverted to the light, appeared so full of pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of cypress, or love hood. Boyle on Colours.

LO'VEABLE.✱ adj. [from love.] Amiable; worthy to be loved. Sherwood.

LO'VEAPPLE.† n. s. A plant. Miller.

Love-apple, though its flower less fair appears,
Its golden fruit deserves the name it bears. Tate's Cowley.

LO'VEDAY.✱ n. s. [love and day.] A day, in old times, appointed for the amicable settlement of differences. "Si ante judicium capiatur dies amoris." Bracton. And, "agayn the fourme of a love-day taken bytween the same parties." Rot. Parl. 13 H. 4. n. 13. Tyrwhitt.

In lovedays, there coude he mochel help. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
I can holde lovedayes, and heare a reve's rekenynge. Vis. of P. Plowman.

This day, all quarrels die, Andronicus;—
I do remit these young men's heinous faults:
Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend; and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends:
This day shall be a loveday, Tamora. Titus Andronicus.

LOVEFA'VOUR.✱ n. s. [love and favour.] Something given to be worn in token of love.

Deck'd with love-favours. Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 2.

LOVE-in-idleness.✱ n. s. A kind of violet.

A little western flower,—
Before, milk-white; now purple with love's wound;
And maidens call it love-in-idleness. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

LO'VEKNOT. n. s. [love and knot.] A complicated figure, by which affection interchanged is figured.

LO'VELASS.✱ n. s. [love and lass.] Sweetheart; lass beloved.

Her opall colours in her Eastern throne. Mir. for Mag. p. 776.

LO'VELESS.✱ adj. [love and less.]

1. Without love; void of the passion between the sexes.

He wanted nothing but a lady, on whom he might bestow his service and affection; for the knight-errant that is loveless, resembles a tree that wants leaves and fruit, or a body without a soul. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, i. 1.

Ye loveless bards, intent with artful pains
To form a sigh, or to contrive a tear,
Forego your Pindus! Shenstone, Eleg. 1.

2. Without endearment; without tenderness.

Not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd. Milton, P. L.

3. Void of kindness.

How rules therein thy breast so quiet state,
Spite leagu'd with mercy, love with lovelesse hate? P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. iii. 14.

LO'VELETTER. n. s. [love and letter.] Letter of courtship.

Have I escaped loveletters in the holyday time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Shakspeare.

The children are educated in the different notions of their parents; the sons follow the father, while the daughters read loveletters and romances to their mother. Addison, Spect.

LOVE-lies-a-bleeding.✱ n. s. A kind of amaranth. See the first sense of AMARANTH.

LO'VELILY. adv. [from lovely.] Amiably; in such a manner as to excite love.

Thou look'st
Lovelily dreadful. Otway, Ven. Preserved.

LO'VELINESS. n. s. [from lovely.] Amiableness; qualities of mind or body that excite love.

Carrying thus in one person the only two bands of good-will, loveliness and lovingness. Sidney.

When I approach
Her loveliness, so absolute she seems,
That what she wills to do, or say,
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best. Milton, P. L.

If there is such a native loveliness in the sex, as to make them victorious when they are in the wrong, how resistless is their power when they are on the side of truth? Addison.

LO'VELOCK.* n. s. [love and lock.] A term for a particular sort of curl, worn by the men of fashion in the reigns of Elizabeth and James the First; against which Prynne wrote a laborious pamphlet in 1628, maintaining that utter ruin must be the portion of his countrymen, if they did not leave off to nourish their lovelocks! See also To CALAMISTRATE. The mode continued beyond the date of Prynne's ridiculous indignation. Lily seems to have somewhat anticipated, in the following passage, part of the vogue of the present times.

How, sir, will you be trimmed? will you have your beard like a spade or a bodkin? a penthouse on your upper lip, or an alley on your chin? a low curl on your head like a bull, or dangling like a spaniel? your mustachoes sharpe at the endes, like shoemakers' aules, or hanging down to your mouth, like goates flakes? your lovelocks wreathed with a silken twist, or shaggie to fall on your shoulders? Lily, Midas, (1592.)

Prodigal in apparel, " purè lotus," neat combed and curled, with powdered hairs, " comptus et calamistratus," with a long lovelock, a flower in his ear, perfumed gloves. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 539.

LO'VELORN. adj. [love and lorn.] Forsaken of one's love.

The love-lorn nightingale,
Nightly to thee her sad song mourneth well. Milton, Comus.

LO'VELY. adj. [from love. Sax. luflic.] Amiable; exciting love.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided. 2 Sam.

The flowers which it had press'd
Appeared to my view,
More fresh and lovely than the rest,
That in the meadows grew. Denham.

The Christian religion gives us a more lovely character of God than any religion ever did. Tillotson.

The fair
With cleanly powder dry their hair;
And round their lovely breast and head
Fresh flow'rs their mingl'd odours shed. Prior.

LO'VELY.* adv. [luflice, Sax.] Charmingly; beautifully.

The defecated liquour ——
Spouts into subject vessels, lovely clear. Philips, Cider, B. 2.

LO'VEMONGER. n. s. [love and monger.] One who deals in affairs of love.

Thou art an old lovemonger, and speakest skilfully. Shakspeare.

LO'VEQUICK.* adj. [love and quick.] With the eagerness of love.

[She] sees not him her soul desir'd to see;
And yet hope spent makes her not leave to look:
At last her lovequick eyes, which ready be,
Fasten on one. Daniel, Civ. War, B. 2.

LO'VER. n. s. [from love.]

1. One who is in love.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit. Shakspeare.

Let it never be said, that he whose breast
Is fill'd with love, should break a lover's rest. Dryden.

2. A friend; one who regards with kindness.

I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good act, whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakspeare.

3. One who likes any thing.

To be good and gracious, and a lover of knowledge, are amiable things. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

LO'VER.† n. s. An opening. See LOUVER.

LOVESE'CRET. n. s. [love and secret.] Secret between lovers.

What danger, Arimant, is this you fear?
Or what lovesecret which I must not hear? Dryden, Aur.

LO'VESHAFT.* n. s. [love and shaft.] The arrow of Cupid.

A certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throned by the west,
And loos'd his loveshaft smartly from his bow. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

LO'VESICK. adj. [love and sick.] Disordered with love; languishing with amorous desire.

See, on the shore inhabits purple spring,
Where nightingales their lovesick ditty sing. Dryden.

To the dear mistress of my lovesick mind,
Her swain a pretty present has design'd. Dryden, Virg.

Flavia prescribes despair. Granville.

LO'VESOME.† adj. [lufsume, Sax. sweet, agreeable.] Lovely. Adopted by Dryden from Chaucer. A word not now perhaps in use.

Nothing new can spring
Without thy warmth, without thy influence bear,
Or beautiful or lovesome can appear. Dryden, Luc.

LO'VESONG. n. s. [love and song.] Song expressing love.

Poor Romeo is already dead!
Stabb'd with a white wench's black eye,
Run through the ear with a lovesong. Shakspeare.

Lovesong weeds and satyrick thorns are grown,
Where seeds of better arts were early sown. Donne.

LO'VESUIT. n. s. [love and suit.] Courtship.

His lovesuit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege. Shakspeare, Cymb.

LO'VETALE. n. s. [love and tale.] Narrative of love.

The lovetale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat;
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw. Milton, P. L.

Cato's a proper person to entrust
A lovetale with. Addison.

LO'VETHOUGHT. n. s. [love and thought.] Amorous fancy.

Away to sweet beds of flowers,
Lovethoughts lie rich when canopied with bowers. Shakspeare.

LOVETO'KEN.* n. s. [lufetacn, Sax.] A present in token of love.

Thou hast given her rhymes,
And interchang'd lovetokens with my child. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

LO'VETOY. n. s. [love and toy.] Small presents given by lovers.

Has this amorous gentleman presented himself with any lovetoys, such as gold snuff-boxes? Arbuthnot and Pope.

LO'VETRICK. n. s. [love and trick.] Art of expressing love.

Other disports than dancing jollities;
Other lovetricks than glancing with the eyes. Donne.

LOUGH.† n. s. [Welsh, llwch; Irish, louch, loch, an inlet of water, a large collection of water, a lake.

Lough has been adopted into the Irish maps from the English surveyors, who could not pronounce the Irish word, louch. G. Chalmers. The word, however, is also the Icel. laug, and Su. Goth. log, a lake. Hence our lough. See also Ihre in V. LAG.] A lake; a large inland standing water.

A people near the northern pole that won,
Whom Ireland sent from loughes and forests hore,
Divided far by sea from Europe's shore. Fairfax.

Lough Ness never freezes. Phil. Trans.

LOUGH.* pret. of to laugh. Laughed. See also To LOFFE.

Eche of hem at other's sinne lough. Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

LO'VING. part. adj. [from love.]

1. Kind; affectionate.

So loving to my mother,
That he would not let ev'n the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

This earl was of great courage, and much loved of his soldiers, to whom he was no less loving again. Hayward.

2. Expressing kindness.

The king took her in his arms till she came to herself, and comforted her with loving words. Esth. xv. 8.

LO'VING-KINDNESS. n. s. Tenderness; favour; mercy. A scriptural word.

Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, and thy loving-kindnesses. Ps. xxv. 6.

He has adapted the arguments of obedience to the imperfection of our understanding, requiring us to consider him only under the amiable attributes of goodness and lovingkindness, and to adore him as our friend and patron. Rogers.

LO'VINGLY. adv. [from loving.] Affectionately; with kindness.

The new king, having no less lovingly performed all duties to him dead than alive, pursued on the siege of his unnatural brother, as much for the revenge of his father as for the establishing of his own quiet. Sidney.

It is no great matter to live lovingly with good-natured and meek persons; but he that can do so with the froward and perverse, he only hath true charity. Bp. Taylor.

LO'VINGNESS.† n. s. [from loving.] Kindness; affection.

Carrying thus in one person the only two bands of good-will, loveliness, and lovingness. Sidney.

Solyman, by cunning spite
Of Rossa's witchcrafts, from his heart had banish'd
Justice of kings, and lovingness of fathers.
Ld. Brooke, Mustapha.

LOUIS D'OR.† n. s. [French.] A golden coin of France, valued at about twenty shillings; first struck in 1640; and in 1700 rated in England at the value of seventeen shillings. See Leake on English money.

If he is desired to change a louis d'or, he must consider of it. Spectator.

To LOUNGE.† v. n. [lunderen, Dutch, to loiter. Dr. Johnson. — We have in our old dictionaries a lunges or lungis, which was used for a lubber, an idle fellow. See Barret, Sherwood, and even Bailey. This is the French longis, which Menage explains by "homme musart, et qui envoyé en quelque endroit met un long temps à revenir;" and thus deduces it from the Lat. longus. Cotgrave's longis is a dreaming, drowsy fellow. Hence lounge, which however is of no great age in our language.] To idle; to live lazily.

We lounged about the room among a parcel of two-legged things so much below our notice, as not to be worth our attention, or even our regarding that we had engrossed theirs. Student, i. 143.

LO'UNGER.† n. s. [from lounge.] An idler.

I will roar aloud, and spare not, to the terrour of at present a very flourishing society of people called loungers; gentlemen, whose observations are mostly itinerant, and who think they have already too much good sense of their own to be in need of staying at home to read other people's. Guardian, No. 124.

If she is still followed by the same idle tribe of gaping lowngers, I may venture to pronounce her a celebrated Oxford beauty. Student, i. 257.

To LOUR.* v. n. To be clouded; to frown. See To LOWER. But lour ought to be the orthography.

LO'URDAN.* See LURDAN.

LOUSE. n. s. plural lice. [lur, Saxon; luys, Dutch.] A small animal, of which different species live on the bodies of men, beasts, and perhaps of all living creatures.

There were lice upon man and beast. Exod. viii. 18.

Frogs, lice, and flies must all his palace fill
With loath'd intrusion. Milton, P. L.

It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence to affirm, that the first men might proceed out of the tumours of trees, as maggots and flies are supposed to do now, or might grow upon trees; or perhaps might be the lice of some prodigious animals whose species is now extinct. Bentley.

Not that I value the money the fourth part of the skip of a louse. Swift.

To LOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from lice.

As for all other good women, that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to louse themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser on Ireland.

You sat and lous'd him all the sun-shine day. Swift.

LO'USEWORT. n. s. The name of a plant, called also rattle and cock's comb. Miller.

LO'USILY. adv. [from louse.] In a paltry, mean, and scurvy way.

LO'USINESS.† n. s. [from lousy.] The state of abounding with lice.

Trees (especially fruit-bearers) are infested with the measels — to this commonly succeeds lousiness. Evelyn, ii. 7. 6.

LO'USY.† adj. [from louse.]

1. Swarming with lice; over-run with lice.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore,
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden, Juv.

Sweet-briar and gooseberry are only lousy in dry times, or very hot places. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Mean; low born; bred on the dunghill.

I pray you now remembrance on the lousy knave mine host.
A lousy knave, to have his gibes and his mockeries.
Shakspeare.

3. Mean; contemptible: applied to things.

A title it is mete for soche lowsye lerning as this is.
Bale, Yet a Course, &c. fol. 15.

LOUT.† n. s. [loet, Teut. Lye, and Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of to low; lowed, low'd, lowt, t for d: the lowt is a lowed person. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 345, 346. — So Spelman and Junius considered the Sax. hlutan, to bow, as the origin of this substantive, from the homage or obeisance required by the superiour from an inferiour. But the derivation of our word is much more probably, as Dr. Jamieson has also noticed, from the Germ. leute, common people, a servant; Sax. leob.] A mean awkward fellow; a bumpkin; a clown.

Pamela, whose noble heart doth disdain, that the trust of her virtue is reposed in such a lout's hands, had yet, to shew an obedience, taken on shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

This lowt, as he exceeds our lords, the odds
Is, that we scarce are men, and you are gods. Shakspeare.

I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business;
For 'tis no trusting to yon foolish lowt. Shakspeare.
Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain. Gay, Past.

To LOUT.✝ v. n. [hlutan, Sax. to bend; luta, Su. Goth. But Mr. Tooke considers it to be nothing more than the past participle of to low; "to do, or to bear one's self, as the lowed person, i. e. the lowt, does."] To pay obeisance; to bend; to bow; to stoop; to submit. Not obsolete, as Dr. Johnson asserts; being yet used in the north of England.

I serve, I bow, I looke, I loute,
Myn eie foloweth hir aboute. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.
So louted he unto his lord. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was. Spenser, F. Q.
Under the sand-bag he was seen,
Louting low, like a for'ster green. B. Jonson.
The palmer, grey with age, with countenance lowting low,
His head ev'n to the earth before the king did bow. Drayton.

To LOUT.✝ v. a. This word seems in Shakspeare to signify, to overpower. Dr. Johnson. — It does; and is countenanced by the following passage, which has escaped the notice of the commentators; where it evidently means to subject.

For few there were that were so much redoubted,
Whom double fortune lifted vp and louted.
Mir. for Mag. p. 303.
I am lowted by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

LO'UTISH. adj. [from lout.] Clownish; bumpkinly.

This loutish clown is such, that you never saw so ill-favoured a visar; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Sidney.

LO'UTISHLY.✝ adv. [from lout.] With the air of a clown; with the gait of a bumpkin; like a lubber. Huloet.

LO'UVER.* n. s. [from l'ouvert, Fr. an opening.] An opening for the smoke to go out at in the roof of a cottage. In the north of England, an opening at the top of a dove-cote. Written also lover and loover. See Barret's Alv. 1580.

But darknesse dred and daily night did hover
Through all the inner parte wherein they dwelt,
Ne lightned was with window, nor with lover,
But with continuall candle light, which delt
A doubtful sense of things. Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 42.

An envious man having caught his neighbour's pigeons in a net, pluckt off their tails, and let them go; which, though they could fly forward home, yet were soon after found dead in the dovecote, famish'd for want of food, as unable to fly up perpendicularly, and so out at the lover.
Fuller's Worthies in Northamptonshire.

The ancient manner of building in Cornwall was, to set hearths in the midst of rooms for chimneys, which vented the smoke at a louver in the top. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

LOW.✝ adj. [lau, Dan. lo, Icel. laeg, Dutch; lag, Su. Goth. from the Goth. ligan, to lie, according to some.]

1. Not high.

Their wandering course now high, now low, then hid,
Progressive, retrograde. Milton, P. L.

2. Not rising far upwards.

It became a spreading vine of low stature. Ezek. xvii. 6.

3. Not elevated in place or local situation.

O mighty Cæsar! do'st thou lye so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.
Equal in days and nights, except to those
Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompence his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still th' horizon, and not known
Or east or west. Milton, P. L.

Whatsoever is washed away from them is carried down into the lower grounds and into the sea, and nothing is brought back. Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

4. Descending far downwards; deep.

The lowest bottom shook of Erebus. Milton, P. L.
So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low,
Down sunk a hollow bottom, broad and deep,
Capacious bed of waters. Milton, P. L.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions low and high,
Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton, P. L.

5. Not deep; not swelling high; shallow: used of water.

As two men were walking by the sea-side at low water, they saw an oyster, and both pointed at it together. L'Estrange.

It is low ebb sure with his accuser, when such peccadillo's are put in to swell the charge. Atterbury.

6. Not of high price: as, corn is low.

7. Not loud; not noisy.

As when an open air we blow,
The breath, though strain'd, sounds flat and low:
But if a trumpet take the blast,
It lifts it high, and makes it last. Waller.

The theatre is so well contrived, that, from the very deep of the stage, the lowest sound may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience; and yet, if you raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause confusion. Addison on Italy.

8. In latitudes near to the line.

They take their course either high to the north, or low to the south. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

9. Not rising to so great a sum as some other accumulation of particulars.

Who can imagine, that in sixteen or seventeen hundred years' time, taking the lower chronology, that the earth had then stood, mankind should be propagated no farther than Judæa? Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

10. Late in time: as, the lower empire.

11. Dejected; depressed.

His spirits are so low his voice is drown'd,
He hears as from afar, or in a swoon,
Like the deaf murmur of a distant sound. Dryden.
Though he before had gall and rage,
Which death or conquest must assuage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the foe. Prior.

12. Impotent; subdued.

To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected, thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance. Shakspeare.
Why but to awe,
Why but to keep ye low and ignorant. Milton, P. L.

To keep them all quiet, he must keep them in greater awe and less splendor; which power he will use to keep them as low as he pleases, and at no more cost than makes for his own pleasure. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

13. Not elevated in rank or station; abject.

He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor. Shakspeare.

Try in men of low and mean education, who have never elevated their thoughts above the spade. Locke.

14. Dishonourable; betokening meanness of mind: as, low tricks.

Yet sometimes nations will decline so low
From virtue, which is reason, that no wrong,
But justice, and some fatal course annexed,
Deprives them of their outward liberty,
Their inward lost. Milton, P. L.

15. Not sublime; not exalted in thought or diction.

He has not so many thoughts that are low and vulgar, but, at the same time, has not so many thoughts that are sublime and noble. Addison, Spect.

In comparison of these divine writers, the noblest wits of the heathen world are low and dull. Felton on the Classicks.

16. Submissive; humble; reverent.

I bring them to receive
From thee their names, and pay their fealty
With low subjection. Milton, P. L.

From the tree her step she turn'd;
But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
That dwelt within. Milton, P. L.

17. A term applied to certain members of the church, in contradistinction to high. See the 24th sense of HIGH.

LOW. adv.

1. Not aloft; not on high.

There under ebon shades and low-brow'd rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell. Milton, L'All.

My eyes no object met
But low-hung clouds, that dipt themselves in rain,
To shake their fleeces on the earth again. Dryden.

No luxury found room
In low-roof'd houses, and bare walls of lome. Dryden.

Vast yellow offsprings are the German's pride;
But hotter climates narrower frames obtain,
And low-built bodies are the growth of Spain. Creech.

We wandering go through dreary wastes,
Where round some mouldering tow'r pale ivy creeps,
And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deeps. Pope.

2. Not at a high price; meanly. It is chiefly used in composition.

Proud of their numbers and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French;
Do the low-rated English play at dice? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever
Ran the greensword; nothing she does or seems,
But smacks of something greater than herself,
Too noble for this place. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited creeping family. Swift.

Corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all; and avarice creeping on,
Spread like a low-born mist, and blot the sun. Pope.

3. In times approaching towards our own.

In that part of the world which was first inhabited, even as low down as Abraham's time, they wandered with their flocks and herds. Locke.

4. With a depression of the voice.

Lucia, speak low, he is retir'd to rest. Addison, Cato.

5. In a state of subjection.

How comes it that, having been once so low brought, and thoroughly subjected, they afterwards lifted up themselves so strongly again? Spenser on Ireland.

To LOW.† v. a. [from the adjective.] To sink; to make low. Probably misprinted for lower. Dr. Johnson. — Swift perhaps chose to adopt the old verb, of which Dr. Johnson has offered no other notice than the last of the following citations; where it is certainly a justifiable word.

Ech that enhaunsith him schal be lowid; and he that mekith him schal be highed. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xiv.

He that high hearts loweth
With fyriè darts, which he throweth,
Cupido. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

The value of guineas was lowed from one-and-twenty shillings and sixpence to one-and-twenty shillings. Swift.

To LOW. v. n. [hlopan, Saxon. The adjective low, not high, is pronounced lo, and would rhyme to no: the verb low, to bellow, lou; and is by Dryden rightly rhymed to now.] To bellow as a cow.

Doth the wild ass bray when he has grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder. Job, vi. 5.

Fair Io grac'd his shield, but Io now,
With horns exalted stands, and seems to low. Dryden.

Had he been born some simple shepherd's heir,
The lowing herd, or fleecy sheep his care. Prior.

LOW.* n. s. [lohe, German.] Flame; fire; heat. Yet used in the north and west of England. See also LOW-BELL.

LO'WBELL.† n. s. [lohe, Germ. lëȝ, Saxon; or log, Icelandick, a flame; and bell.] A kind of fowling in the night, in which the birds are wakened by a bell, and lured by a flame into a net. Low denotes a flame in Scotland, and some parts of England.

In a still evening, about eight of the clock, when the moon shines not, take your lowbell of a moderate size, that it may be well managed by one man in one hand. The Experienced Fowler, (1697,) p. 97.

Her beauty, and her drum, to foes
Did cause amazement double;
As timorous larks amazed are
With light, and with a lowbell. Ballad of St. George for England.

To LO'WBELL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To scare as with a lowbell.

To be thus lowbelled with panick frights, to be thus tremblingly dismayed where there is no place of fear — is a mighty disproportion of men's faculties. Hammond, Works, iv. 579.

LOWE.† The termination of local names.

Lowe, loe, comes from the Saxon hleaƿ, a hill, heap, or barrow; and so the Gothick hlaiw is a monument or barrow. Gibson's Camden.

Hence Ƿunꝺeꞃ-hlaƿ, Houndslow, canum tumulus; Leoꝺ sive Luꝺe-hlaƿ, Ludlow, populi tumulus; Meꞃe-hlaƿ, Merlow or Marlow, mariscis circumdatus tumulus, &c. Lye, edit. Manning, in V. hlæƿ.

To LO'WER. v. a. [from low.]

1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submission.

As our high vessels pass their watery way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay;
With hasty reverence their top-honours lower,
Confessing the asserted power. Prior.

2. To suffer to sink down.

When water issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it such particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers them, and lets them fall. Woodward.

3. To lessen; to make less in price or value.

The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money. Locke.

Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest. Child on Trade.

To LO'WER. v. n. To grow less; to fall; to sink.

The present pleasure,
By revolution low'ring, does become
The opposite of itself. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To LO'WER.† v. n. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word: if it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather: if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch loeren, to look askance: the ow sounds as ou in hour; in the word lower, when it means to grow, or make low, the ow sound as o in more. Dr. Johnson. — The word is primarily perhaps from the Sax. hleaꞃe, the face, the front, the brow; and should be written lour. Chaucer uses loure in the sense of to be discontented.]

1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy; to be clouded.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;

And all the clouds that lowered upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The lowering spring, with lavish rain,
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes. Addison.

The dawn is overcast, the morning lowers,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison, Cato.

If on St. Swithin's feast the welkin lours,
And every penthouse streams with hasty showers,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain. Gay.

2. To frown; to pout; to look sullen.

There was Diana when Actæon saw her, and one of her foolish nymphs, who weeping, and withal lowering, one might see the workman meant to set forth tears of anger. Sidney.

He mounts the throne, and Juno took her place,
But sullen discontent sat lowering on her face;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.

Lo'wer. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cloudiness; gloominess.
2. Cloudiness of look.

Philoclea was jealous for Zelmane, not without so mighty a lower as that face could yield. Sidney.

Lo'weringly.† adv. [from lower.] With cloudiness; gloomily. Sherwood.

Lo'wermost. adj. [from low, lower, and most.] Lowest.

Plants have their seminal parts uppermost, living creatures have them lowermost. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It will also happen, that the same part of the pipe which was now lowermost, will presently become higher, so that the water does ascend by descending; ascending in comparison to the whole instrument, and descending in respect of its several parts. Wilkins, Dædalus.

Lo'wing.* n. s. [from To low.] The cry of black cattle.

The lowing of the oxen which I hear. 1 Sam. xv. 14.

The maids of Argos, who, with frantick cries,
And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies. Roscommon.

Lo'wland. n. s. [low and land.] The country that is low in respect of neighbouring hills; the marsh.

What a devil is he?
His errand was to draw the lowland damps,
And noisome vapours, from the foggy fens,
Then breathe the baleful stench with all his force. Dryden.

No nat'ral cause she found from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands, to produce the fogs. Dryden.

Lo'wlihood.* n. s. [lowly, and hood or head.] Humble or low state. Obsolete.

For who can fain in under lowlyhede,
Ne failith not to findin grace and spede.
Chaucer, Compl. of the Bl. Knight.

Lo'wlily. adv. [from lowly.]

1. Humbly; without pride.
2. Meanly; without dignity.

Lo'wliness. n. s. [from lowly.]

1. Humility; freedom from pride.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shakspeare.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Eve,
With lowliness majestick, from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
Rose. Milton, P. L.

If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust. Atterbury.

2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.

They continued in that lowliness until the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose. Spenser.

The lowliness of my fortune has not brought me to flatter vice; it is my duty to give testimony to virtue. Dryden.

Lo'wly.† adj. [from low.]

1. Humble; meek; mild.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart. St. Matt. xi. 29.

He did bend to us a little, and put his arms abroad: we of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death. Bacon, New Atlantis.

With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilioneus began. Dryden.

The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a Being, and adore a Nature so much superiour to our own! Rogers.

2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.

For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims. Pope.

3. Not lofty; not sublime.

For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Varus oft inscrib'd shall see. Dryden, Silenus.

4. Not elevated in local situation; low.

Where Ufens glides along the lowly lands. Dryden, Æn.

Lo'wly. adv. [from low.]

1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.

I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught; I know my business is but to the court. Shakspeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.

Heaven is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wise:
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being. Milton, P. L.

Another crowd
Preferr'd the same request, and lowly bow'd. Pope.

Lown.† n. s. [liun, Irish; loen, Dutch, a stupid drone. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke calls it, like lowt, the past participle of to low. — Dr. Jamieson conjectures the Sax. læpenð, Goth. leygands, a traitor, a betrayer, as the origin of our lown.] A scoundrel; a rascal. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. It still means a heavy, stupid fellow, according to Grose, in the north of England.

King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear;
With that he call'd the taylor lown. Old Song in Shakspeare.

We should soon have both lord and lown, if the peevish baggage would but give way to customers.
Shakspeare, Pericles.

Lownd.* adj. [logn, Icel. lugn, Su. Goth. serenity of the air. See Dr. Jamieson, in V. Loun.] Calm and mild; out of the wind; under cover or shelter. Used in several parts of the north of England; and sometimes written, like its original, lun.

Lo'wness. n. s. [from low.]

1. Contrariety to height; small distance from the ground.

They know
By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth,
Or foison follow. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The lowness of the bough where the fruit cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better; for you shall even see, in apricots upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In Gothick cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness opens it in breadth. Addison.

2. Meanness of character or condition, whether mental or external.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness but his unkind daughter. Shakspeare.
Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties,
And palter in the shift of lowness. Shakspeare.

3. Want of rank; want of dignity.

The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as lowness of condition. South.

4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness of style or sentiment.

His style is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lowness, that of Persius is the hardness of his metaphors. Dryden.

5. Submissiveness.

The people were in such lowness of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so politick a king as his father. Bacon.

6. Depression; dejection.

Hence that poverty and lowness of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person. Swift.

LOWSPI'RITED. adj. [low and spirit.] Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not sprightly.

Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind; and then, in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke.

LOWT.* }
To LOWT. } See LOUT, and To LOUT.

LOWTHO'UGHTED. adj. [low and thought.] Having the thoughts with-held from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow minded.

Above the smoke and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Milton, Comus.
O grace serene! Oh virtue heavenly fair!
Divine oblivion of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And faith our early immortality! Pope.

LOXODRO'MICK. n. s. [λοξὸς and δρόμος.]

Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them: hence the table of rhumbs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick. Harris.

LO'YAL. adj. [loyal, French.]

1. Obedient; true to the prince.

Of Gloster's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot. Shakspeare.

The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties. Knolles.

Loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.

2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.

Hail wedded love! — by thee
Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known. Milton, P. L.
There Laodamia with Evadne moves,
Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves. Dryden, Æn.

LO'YALIST. n. s. [from loyal.] One who professes uncommon adherence to his king.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians. Howell, Voc. Forest.

LO'YALLY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king; with fidelity to a lover.

The circling year I wait, with ampler stores,
And fitter pomp, to hail my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd. Pope, Odyss.

LO'YALTY. n. s. [loiaulté, French.]

1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.

Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our faith meer folly; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer. Shakspeare.

He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required. Clarendon.

Abdiel, faithful found —
Unshaken, unseduc'd, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept. Milton, P. L.
For loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Although it be not shone upon. Hudibras.

2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.

LOZEL.* See LOSEL.

LO'ZENGE.† n. s. [losenge, French. Of unknown etymology. Dr. Johnson. — Morin mentions, from Menage, Scaliger's conjecture of losanges or lausanges being a corruption of lauranges, "à cause de leur resemblance à une feuille de laurier:" but proposes at the same time a conjecture of his own as to the derivation: "peut-être a-t-on dit losange pour loxangle, comme on dit acutangle, obtusangle. Dans ce cas, il viendroit du Gr. λοξὸς, oblique, et du Lat. angulus, q. d. angle oblique."]

1. A rhomb.

The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or losenge. Wotton, Architecture.

2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces, to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.

3. A cake of preserved fruit: both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.

4. A four-cornered figure, in heraldry, like a pane of glass in old casements, in which the arms of women are now usually painted.

Ypainted all with amorettes,
And with lozingis, and scochons. Chaucer, Rom. R. 893.

LO'ZENGED.* adj. [lozengé, Fr.] Having the shape of a lozenge. Cotgrave.

LO'ZENGY.* adj. In heraldry, having the field or charge covered with lozenges.

LP. a contraction for lordship.

LU. n. s. A game at cards. See LOO.

Ev'n mighty pam who kings and queens o'erthrew,
And mow'd down armies in the fights of lu. Pope.

LU'BBARD. n. s. [from lubber.] A lazy sturdy fellow.

Yet their wine and their victuals those curmudgeon lubbards
Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.

LU'BBER.† n. s. [of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubbed, said by Junius to signify in Danish fat. Dr. Johnson. — Lubber is the same as looby, and lob; Icel. lubbe, "hirsutus et incomptus nebulo." Serenius. Huloet calls a lout "a lowber, or lourdeine, rusticus, tardus, &c." And Minsheu combines in one "a lobbe, lubber, lobcocke, and clowne;" giving them the Greek origin of λωβητὴρ. But see LOB.] A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky losel; a booby.

For tempest and showers deceiveth a many,
And lingering lubbers loose many a penie. Tusser, Husb.

These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the havens, leaping up and down, puffing like a fat lubber out of breath. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his feet were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

A notable lubber thou reportest him to be. Shakspeare.

Tell how the drudging goblin sweat; —
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
That ten day labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubbar fiend. Milton, L'All.

Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did your lubber state mankind bestride. Dryden.

How can you name that superannuated lubber? Congreve.

LU'BBERLY.✝ adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky; awkward.

I came at Eaton to marry Mrs. Anne Page; and she's a great lubberly boy. Shakspeare.

Not such idle, lubberly sots, as later times pestered the world withal. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.

Those modest, lubberly boys, who seem to want spirit, become at length more shining men; and at school generally go through their business with more ease to themselves, and more satisfaction to their instructors. Goldsmith, Ess. 7.

LU'BBERLY. adv. Awkwardly; clumsily.

Merry Andrew on the low rope copies lubberly the same tricks which his master is so dexterously performing on the high. Dryden.

To LU'BRICATE.✝ v. a. [from lubricus, Latin.] To make smooth or slippery; to smoothe. Cockeram.

There are aliments which, besides this lubricating quality, stimulate in a small degree. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and the saponaceous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate. Sharp, Surgery.

Rest,
Man's rich restorative; his balmy bath,
That supples, lubricates, and keeps in play,
The various movements of this nice machine;
Which asks such frequent periods of repair. Young, N. Th. 9.

LU'BRICATOR.✱ n. s. [from To lubricate.] That which lubricates.

Water, when simple, is insipid, inodorous, colourless, and smooth; it is found, when not cold, to be a great resolver of spasms, and lubricator of the fibres: this power it probably owes to its smoothness. Burke on the Subl. and Beaut. P. iv. § 21.

To LUBRI'CITATE. v. a. [from lubricus, Latin.] To smooth; to make slippery.

LUBRI'CITY.✝ n. s. [from lubricus, Latin; lubricité, French.]

1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface. Bullokar.

2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.

Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature; the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation. Ray on Creation.

3. Uncertainty: slipperiness; instability.

It is strange to consider the lubricity of popular favour. Wotton, Lett. in 1628, Rem. p. 444.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same conveniences in any modification. More.

He that enjoyed crowns and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of universal vanity; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the inconstancy of human affairs, and the lubricity of his subject. Glanville, Apol.

A state of tranquillity is never to be attained but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune. L'Estrange.

4. Wantonness; lewdness.

[They] incline and allure men to lubricity and debauched courses. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 357.

From the lechery of these fauns, he thinks that satire is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided. Dryden.

LU'BRICK. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.

A throng
Of short thick sobs, whose thundering volleys float,
And roll themselves over her lubrick throat,
In panting murmurs. Crashaw, Del. of the Muses.

2. Uncertain; unsteady.

I will deduce him from his cradle through the deep and lubrick waves of state, till he is swallowed in the gulf of fatality. Wotton, Life of D. of Buckingham.

3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, French.]

Why were we hurried down
This lubrick and adulterate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
To encrease the steaming ordures of the stage? Dryden.

LU'BRICOUS. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth.

The parts of water being voluble and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Uncertain.

The judgement being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions. Glanville, Scepsis.

LUBRIFICA'TION. n. s. [lubricus, and fio, Lat.] The act of smoothing.

A twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction and lubrification of the heads of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow; a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the articulations. Ray on Creation.

LUBRIFA'CTION. n. s. [lubricus and facio, Lat.] The act of lubricating or smoothing.

The cause is lubrifaction and relaxation, as in medicines emollient, such as milk, honey, and mallows. Bacon.

LUCE.✝ n. s. [lucius, Lat. à λυκὸς, Gr. quia est quasi lupus inter pisces. Vossius. Hence also the Fr. lucel, lucet, a young pike. Luce is very old in our language.] A pike full grown.

Many a breme, and many a luce in stew. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

The mighty luce, or pike, is taken to be the tyrant, as the salmon is the king, of the fresh waters. Walton, Angler.

They give the dozen white luces in their coat. Shakspeare.

LU'CENT. adj. [lucens, Latin.] Shining; bright; splendid.

I meant the day-star should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat. B. Jonson, Epig. 76.

A spot like which perhaps
Astronomer in the sun's lucent orb,
Through his glaz'd optick tube, yet never saw. Milton, P. L.

LU'CERNE.✱ n. s. [luzerne, Span. medica, in Latin; so called because it came originally from Media.] A plant remarkable for quick growth; bearing a purplish flower; the hay of which is eminent for the fattening of cattle.

Harte has been much out of order these last three or four months, but is not the less intent upon sowing his lucerne. Ld. Chesterfield.

LU'CID. adj. [lucidus, Latin; lucide, French.]

1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd;
Livelier than Melibœan. Milton, P. L.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light. Ray.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electrick vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid, like a glow-worm. Newton.

The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phœbus warm the ripening ore to gold. Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.

On the fertile banks
Of Abbana and Pharphar, lucid streams. Milton, P. L.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madness.

The long dissentions of the two houses, which, although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth. Bacon.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through, and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day. Dryden.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired he would please to let me see his book. Tatler.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons, may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conscience. Bentley.

LUCI'DITY.† n. s. [from lucid.] Splendour; brightness. Dict.

What we call wit shews itself with such a pointed effulgence in the eyes, that there is scarce a man living, whose portion of it is not determinable from their natural lucidity.
Philos. Lett. on Physiognomy, (1751,) p. 230.

LU'CIDNESS.* n. s. [from lucid.] Transparency; clearness.

The spaciousness of their souls that are extended in perfect contemplation, is aptly figured by that property of the sea; their equanimity and clearness, by the smoothness and lucidness of glass. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 385.

LUCIFE'RIAN.* adj. [from Lucifer, a name of the devil.]

1. Devilish. A word formerly much used; now obsolete.

Hence men of art deprave each other's skill,
Sith it they view with luciferian eyes.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrimage, sign. P. 3.

What luciferian pride in him, a man of sin, to admit, yea to delight in, the same!
Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 171.

That all that luciferian exorcism be blotted out: — that very "luciferina," or devilish exorcism is reprinted.
Bp. Taylor, Diss. against Popery, ch. 2. § 10.

It savours too much of the luciferian presumption.
Ld. North, Light to Paradise, p. 90.

2. Denoting the persons called Luciferians. See LUCIFERIANS.

Turrian tells us that Donatists and Luciferian hereticks have some kind of bishops and priests. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 217.

LUCIFE'RIANS.* n. s. pl. Persons who adhered to the pernicious schism of Lucifer, bishop of Cagliari, in the fourth century. They believed the soul to be of a carnal nature, transmitted to children from their fathers; and they denied any place for repentance or reconciliation to such as fell.

LUCI'FEROUS. adj. [lucifer, Latin.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

The experiment is not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt. Boyle.

LUCI'FEROUSLY.* adv. [from luciferous.] So as to discover.

Embrace not the opacous and blind side of opinions, but that which looks most luciferously or influentially unto goodness. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii, 3.

LUCI'FICK. adj. [lux and facio, Latin.] Making light; producing light.

When made to converge, and so mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorifick, is interrupted. Grew.

LU'CIFORM.* adj. [lux, lucis, Latin, and form.] Having the nature of light.

Plato speaketh of the mind or soul as a driver that guides and governs a chariot, which is, not unfitly, styled αὐγοειδὲς, a luciform ethereal vehicle, or ὄχημα, terms expressive of the purity, lightness, subtilty, and mobility, of that fine celestial nature, in which the soul immediately resides and operates.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 171.

LUCK.† n. s. [geluck, Dutch. Junius, and Dr. Johnson. — Luck, good or bad, is merely the past participle of the Sax. læccan, to catch; and means something, any thing, caught. Instead of saying, that a person has had good luck; it is not uncommon to say, he has had a good catch. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 357. — Such an expression may be still used among the vulgar, and the reasoning upon this deduction is plausible. But the derivation from geluck, which is from the old verb ghelucken, to prosper, is not to be hastily dismissed. Wachter thus derives the Germ. gluck, good fortune, (under which word he notices our luck, the Swed. lycka, and the Sax. inf. lück, from gleichen, to please. "Hoc sanè primum et præcipuum est," he well observes, "in rebus secundis, ut nobis placeant. Quid enim refert, qualis sit status noster, si nobis videtur malus?" In like manner, Ihre derives the Su. Goth. lyckas, to prosper, from lika, to please. Ungluck, is the Germ. for bad luck. See also Kilian in V. Ghe-luck.]

1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event.

He forc'd his neck into a noose,
To shew his play at fast and loose;
And when he chanc'd t'escape, mistook
For art and subtlety, his luck. Hudibras.

Some such method may be found by human industry or luck, by which compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

2. Fortune, good or bad.

Glad of such luck the luckless lucky maid,
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser, F. Q.

Farewel, good luck go with thee. Shakspeare.

I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me, that rebellion had ill luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. Shakspeare.

That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent. Temple.

Such, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed. South.

The guests are found too numerous for the treat,
But all, it seems, who had the luck to eat,
Swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat. Tate, Juv.

LU'CKILY. adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately; by good hap.

It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications. Addison.

Lu'ckiness. n. s. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.

He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding. Locke.

Lu'ckless. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid,
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser, F. Q.

Never shall my thoughts be base,
Though luckless, yet without disgrace. Suckling.

What else but his immoderate lust of power,
Pray'rs made and granted in a luckless hour? Dryden.

Lu'cky. adj. [from luck; gelukkig, Dutch.] Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more lucky wight,
Dismay'd with that deformed, dismal sight,
Fled fast away. Spenser, F. Q.

Perhaps some arm more lucky than the rest,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage. Addison.

Lu'crative. adj. [lucratif, French; lucrativus, Lat.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate; other contracts not so. Bacon.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture. Broome.

LU'CRE. n. s. [lucrum, Latin.] Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage. In an ill sense.

Malice and lucre in them
Have laid this woe here. Shakspeare, Cymb.

They all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn,
Of lucre and ambition. Milton, P. L.

A soul supreme in each hard instance tried,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of power, the blast of publick breath,
The lust of lucre, and the dread of death. Pope.

To Lu'cre. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a desire of pecuniary advantage. Not in use.

[They] frame themselves to every chaunge, thereby to satisfy their lucring lust. Anderson, Expos. on Benedict. (1573,) fol. 75. b.

Lucri'ferous.✝ adj. [lucrum and fero, Latin.] Gainful; profitable.

Opening treasures with the key of luciferous inventions. Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib, (1648,) p. 23.

Silver was afterwards separated from the gold, but in so small a quantity, that the experiment, the cost and pains considered, was not lucriferous. Boyle.

Lucri'fick. adj. [lucrum and facio, Latin.] Producing gain.

Lucta'tion.✝ n. s. [luctation, Fr. Cotgrave; from luctor, Lat.] Struggle; effort; contest. Cockeram.

This act requires the intention of our mind, thoughtfulness, and a diligent luctation and contention with ourselves. Farindon, Serm. (1657,) p. 418.

Lu'ctual.* adj. [luctus, Lat. mourning.] Lamentable. Not in use.

The turbulent and luctual times, which were towards the end and period of his life and reign. Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 41.

To LU'CUBRATE.✝ v. n. [lucubror, Lat.] To watch; to study or work by candle-light. Cockeram.

Lucubra'tion.✝ n. s. [lucubratio, Latin.] Study by candle-light; nocturnal study; any thing composed by night.

Life is, since he is gone,
But a nocturnal lucubration. Cleaveland, Eleg. on Abp. Laud.

Thy lucubrations have been perused by several of our friends. Tatler.

Lucubra'tory. adj. [lucubratorius, from lucubror, Lat.] Composed by candle-light.

You must have a dish of coffee, and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend. Pope.

Lu'culent.✝ adj. [luculentus, Latin.]

1. Clear; transparent; lucid. This word is perhaps not used in this sense by any other writer. Dr. Johnson. — It should seem, from the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor in 1656, that this was anciently a received sense, luculent being defined "bright, clear, fair, beautiful, famous."

And luculent along
The purer rivers flow. Thomson, Winter.

2. Certain; evident.

They are against the obstinate incredulity of the Jews, the most luculent testimonies that the Christian religion hath. Hooker.

A luculent oration he made of the miseries of this, and happiness of that other life. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 218.

LU'DICROUS. adj. [ludicer, Lat.] Burlesque; merry; sportive; exciting laughter.

Plutarch quotes this instance of Homer's judgement, in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction. Broome.

Lu'dicrously.✝ adv. [from ludicrous.] Sportively; in burlesque; in a manner that may excite laughter.

To see the buffoonery or action correspond so ludicrously with the musick. Drummond, Trav. p. 52.

Cicero ludicrously describes Cato as endeavouring to act in the commonwealth upon the school paradoxes, which exercised the wits of the junior students in the Stoick philosophy. Burke.

Lu'dicrousness.✝ n. s. [from ludicrous.] Burlesque; sportiveness; merry cast or manner; ridiculousness.

The ludicrousness and fugitiveness of our wanton reason might otherwise find out many starting-holes. More, Ant. against Idolatry, ch. 1.

Boileau used to hint among his intimate friends, that he thought the reason why Homer sometimes introduced his gods and goddesses in scenes of ludicrousness, was to soften the general severity of his poem, and to relieve the reader from the perpetual prospect of the slaughters and deaths with which the Iliad abounded. Dr. Warton on Dryden's Transl. of Iliad.

LUDIFICA'TION. n. s. [ludificor, Latin.] The act of mocking, or making sport with another. Dict.

Ludi'ficatory.* adj. [ludificatoire, Fr. Cotgrave; from ludificor, Lat.] Mocking; making sport; trifling.

In the sacraments of the church there is nothing empty or vain, nothing ludificatory, but all thoroughly true. Barrow, iii. 39.

Luff.✝ n. s. [lofa, Gothick.] The palm of the hand. used in the north of England, and in Scotland.

To Luff. v. n. [or loof.] To keep close to the wind. Sea term.

Contract your swelling sails, and luff to wind. Dryden.

To LUG.✝ v. a. [aluccan, Saxon, to pull; loga, Swedish, the hollow of the hand. Dr. Johnson. — It is more probably the Su. Goth. lugga, to pull or drag by the hair; ʒeluʒʒian, Sax. to pull, to pluck.]

1. To hale or drag; to pull with rugged violence.

You gods! why this
Will lug your priests and servants from your sides. Shakspeare.
Thy bear is safe, and out of peril,
Though lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill. Hudibras.
When savage bears agree with bears,
Shall secret ones lug saints by th' ears? Hudibras.
See him drag his feeble legs about
Like hounds ill coupled: Jowler lugs him still Through hedges. Dryden.
Whose pleasure is to see a strumpet tear
A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair. Dryden.

Either every single animal spirit must convey a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and so lug off every one his share. Collier.

2. To pull or shake by the ears. Barret's Alv. 1580. So in the north of England, "to pull by the ears: I'll lug thee, if thou dost so." Pegge.

3. To LUG out. To draw a sword, in burlesque language.

But buff and beltmen never know these cares,
No time, nor trick of law, their action bars;
They will be heard, or they lug out and cut. Dryden.

To LUG v. n. To drag; to come heavily: perhaps only misprinted for lags.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air, too damp, and lugs along,
As if she were a body in a body. Dryden.

LUG.† n. s.

1. A kind of small fish.

They feed on salt unmerchantable pilchards, tag worms, lugs, and little crabs. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. The ear. Dr. Johnson confines the use of this word to Scotland, without any example; but it is certainly common enough in England. [from the verb lug.]

There's no man colour smells, or sees a sound,
Nor sucks the labour of the honey-bee
With's hungry lugs, nor binds a gaping wound
With's slippery eye-balls: every faculty
And object have their due analogy.
More, Life of the Soul, ii. 97.
With hair in character, and lugs in text. Cleaveland.

3. A land measure; a pole or perch.

That ample pit, yet far renown'd
For the large leap which Debon did compel
Coulin to make, being eight lugs of ground. Spenser, F. Q.

LU'GGAGE. n. s. [from lug.] Any thing cumbrous and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come bring your luggage nobly on your back. Shakspeare.
What do you mean
To doat thus on such luggage? Shakspeare, Tempest.
Think not thou to find me slack, or need
Thy politick maxims, or that cumbersome
Luggage of war there shewn me. Milton, P. R.
How durst thou with that sullen luggage
O' th' self, old ir'n, and other baggage,
To oppose thy lumber against us? Hudibras.

The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the ruffling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked. Glanville.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,
And leave the luggage of good works behind. Dryden.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey. Swift to Pope.

LU'GSAIL.* n. s. A square sail hoisted occasionally on a yard which hangs nearly at right angles with the mast. Ash.

LUGU'BRIOUS.† adj. [lugubre, French; lugubris, Lat.] Mournful; sorrowful.

To act no passionate, lugubrious, tragical part, whatever secular provocation cross us on the stage. Hammond, Works, iv. 546.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whining tone, makes up the sum of many men's humiliations. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Most of them [pictures] represent devout lugubrious events. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 41.

LUKE, or LEUKE.* adj. [plæc, Saxon.] Not fully hot. See LUKEWARM. Prompt. Parv.

LU'KENESS, or LE'UKENESS.* n. s. [from luke.] Moderate warmth. Ort. Vocab.

LU'KEWARM.† adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is hleoð; in old Frisick hlij; in Dutch liewte; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second; as we say, boiling hot. Dr. Johnson.—It is from the Sax. plæc, warm: which was also pleonastically accompanied with papm, viz. plæc-papm: whence our luke-warm. See Lye, edit. Manning. See also LEW.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

Water is not sodeynly by the fyre made hote to the uttermost, but fyrste cometh bytwene a lytell warmenes, as we myght saye luke warme, whiche is neyther very hote, nor very colde, but in a meane bytwene both. Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 49.

A dreary corse, whose life away did pass,
All wallow'd in his own, yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh alas! Spenser, F. Q.
May you a better feast never behold,
You knot of mouth friends; smoke and lukewarm water
Is your perfection. Shakspeare, Timon.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to contemperate hot and sharp humours. Wiseman, Surgery.

Whence is it but from this attractive power that water, which alone distils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not distil from salt of tartar without a great heat? Newton, Opticks.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If some few continues stedfast, it is an obedience so lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of passion. Dryden.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue
In lukewarm patriots. Addison, Cato.

LU'KEWARMLY.† adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate warmth. Sherwood.
2. With indifference.

LU'KEWARMNESS. n. s. [from lukewarm.]

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.
2. Indifference; want of ardour.

Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness. King Charles.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Sprat.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness. Swift.

To LULL.† v. a. [lulu, Danish; lallo, Latin. See LULLABY.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound; to draw to sleep. This is the oldest sense of the word.

In her barme this litel child she laid,
With ful sad face, and gan the child to blisse,
And lulled it, and after gan it kisse. Chaucer, Cl. Tale.
There trickled softly down
A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play
Emongst the pumy stones, and made a sound
To lull him soft asleep, that by it lay. Spenser, F. Q.
Such sweet compulsion doth in musick lie,
To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton, Arcades.
These, lull'd by nightingales, embracing slept. Milton, P. L.

In England we very frequently see people lulled asleep with solid and elaborate discourses of piety, who would be warmed and transported out of themselves by the bellowings and distortions of enthusiasm. Addison, Spect. No. 407.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

Fortune false doth lull them in her lap. Mir. for Mag. p. 327.

To find a foe it shall not be his hap,
And peace shall lull him in her flowery lap. Milton, Vac. Ex.

No more these scenes my meditations aid,
Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.

By the vocal woods and waters lull'd,
And lost in lonely musing in a dream. Thomson, Spring.

LULL.* n. s. [from the verb.] Power or quality of soothing.

My lord, your stay was long, and yonder lull
Of falling waters tempted me to rest. Young, Revenge.

LU'LLABY.† n. s. [Lallus, Lat. "Quem nutricum fuisse deum contendit Turnebus." From lull: it is observable, that the nurses call sleep by, by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep. Dr. Johnson. — "Dr. Johnson is probably mistaken in supposing that the nurses' by signifies sleep, otherwise than as a contraction of lullaby. It is to be wished, that Mr. Holt White had favoured us with some proof that to lull originally signified to sleep, and that its present sense, to compose to sleep by a pleasing sound, is but a secondary one, retained after the primitive import had become obsolete. The same ingenious critic proceeds to state that by means house, and and therefore lullaby is to go to house or cradle. There is so much plausibility in this conjecture, that it is almost a pity to be obliged to dissent from it. Though it cannot be disputed that by signifies a dwelling, it is presumed that this sense is as unconnected with the word in question as Dr. Johnson's sleep. It would be a hopeless task to trace the origin of the northern verb to lull, which means to sing gently; but it is evidently connected with the Gr. λαλεω, to speak, or λαλλη, the sound made by the beach at sea. Thus much is certain, that the Roman nurses used the word lalla to quiet their children, and feigned a deity called Lallus, whom they invoked on that occasion: the lullaby, or tune itself, was called by the same name. As lallare meant to sing lalla, to lull might in like manner denote the singing of the nurse's lullaby to induce the child to sleep. — In an old ballad, printed by Mr. Ritson, Anc. Songs, p. 198., the burden is lully, lullaby, lullyby, sweete baby; from which it seems probable, that lullaby is only a comparatively modern contraction of lully baby, the first word being the legitimate offspring of the Rom. lalla." Douce. Illustr. of Shakspeare, vol. 2. p. 111.] A song to still babes.

Only that noise heavens' rolling circles kest,
Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fairfax.

Philomel, with melody,
Sing in your sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby. Shakspeare.

If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further. — Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Shakspeare.

Whiles hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,
Be unto us, as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby, to bring her babe to sleep. Titus Andronicus.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children. Locke on Education.

LU'LLER.* n. s. [from lull.] A dandler; one who fondles children. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

LUM.* n. s. The chimney of a cottage. Northumberland. Pegge. Used in Scotland, and supposed by Sibbald to be from the Sax. leom, light, with great probability; "scarcely any other light being admitted, excepting through this hole in the roof."

LUMBA'GO. n. s. [lumbi, Latin, the loins.]

Lumbagos are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawnings, shudderings, and erratick pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers. Quincy.

LU'MBAL.* } adj. [lumbaris, Lat. from lumbi, the LU'MBAR. } loins.] In anatomy, pertaining to the loins.

LU'MBER.† n. s. [loma, ʒeloma, Saxon, household-stuff; lommering, the dirt of an house, Dutch.]

1. Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value; old stuff. Cockeram.

The very bed was violated
By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,
And thrown amongst the common lumber. Otway.

One son at home
Concerns thee more than many guests to come.
If to some useful art he be not bred,
He grows mere lumber, and is worse than dead. Dryden.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store,
Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor. Dryden, Juv.

If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber. Grew.

The poring scholiasts mark;
Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark;
A lumber-house of books in every head. Pope, Dunciad.

2. Harm; mischief. Lancashire. Pegge.

To LU'MBER. v. a. [from the noun. To heap like useless goods irregularly.

In Rollo we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear. Rymer.

To LU'MBER. v. n. To move heavily, as burthened with his own bulk.

First let them run at large,
Nor lumber o'er the meads, nor cross the wood. Dryden.

LU'MBRICAL.* adj. [from lumbricus, Lat. a worm.] In anatomy, denoting muscles of the hands and feet, which, on account of their smallness and figure, have derived this name of resemblance to worms.

LU'MINARY. n. s. [luminare, Latin; luminaire, Fr.]

1. Any body which gives light.

The great luminary
Dispenses light from far. Milton, P. L.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.

Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he espied in his face, dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

3. Any one that instructs mankind.

The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island. Bentley.

To LU'MINATE.* v. a. [lumino, Lat.] To give light to; to illuminate. Cockeram.

LUMINA'TION. n. s. [from lumen.] Emission of light. Dict.

To LU'MINE.* v. a. [lumino, Lat.] To illuminate; to lighten intellectually.

With admiration of their passing light,
Blinding the eyes, and lumining the spright. Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Love.

LU'MINOUS. adj. [lumineux, Fr.]

1. Shining; emitting light.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate. Bacon.

Its first convex divides
The luminous inferiour orbs inclos'd,
From chaos. Milton, P. L.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes. Bentley.

2. Enlightened.

Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east; and with her part averse
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton, P. L.

3. Shining; bright.

The most luminous of the prismatick colours are the yellow and orange: these affect the senses more strongly than all the rest together. Newton, Opticks.

LU'MINOUSLY.* adv. [from luminous.] In a bright or shining manner.

LU'MINOUSNESS.* n. s. [from luminous.] Brightness; emission of light: as, the luminousness of the sea: a philosophical term.

That luminousness that appears in some eyes. Spence, Crito.

LUMP. n. s. [lompe, Teut.]

1. A small mass of any matter.

The weed kal is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear? Boyle.

A wretch is prisoner made;
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the ravenous foe
In morsels cut. Tate.

Every fragrant flower, and odorous green,
Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.

To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present need of. Locke.

2. A shapeless mass.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Why might not there have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together. Keil against Burnet.

3. Mass undistinguished.

All men's honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pinch he please. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

It is rare to find any of these metals pure; but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all promiscuously in one lump. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

4. The whole together; the gross.

If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump. Addison.

Other epidemical vices are rife and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley, Serm.

The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists. Swift.

To LUMP. v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.

The expences ought to be lumped together. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counterpoise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale. Addison.

LU'MPFISH.† n. s. [lump and fish.] A sort of fish; thick, and very ill-shaped; called also the sucker, and the sea-owl.

LU'MPING adj. [from lump.] Large; heavy; great. A low word.

Nick, thou shalt have a lumping pennyworth. Arbuthnot.

LU'MPISH.† adj. [lompsch, Teut. stupidus, piger. Kilian.] Heavy; gross; dull; unactive; bulky.

Lifting up his lompish head. Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 43.

Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man, and therefore heavy and lumpish. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Sylvia is lumpish, heavy, melancholy. Shakspeare.

Love is all spirit: fairies sooner may
Be taken tardy, when they night tricks play,
Than we; we are too dull and lumpish. Suckling.

Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made their way more speedily. Burnet.

How dull and how insensible a beast
Is man, who yet wou'd lord it o'er the rest?
Philosophers and poets vainly strove
In every age the lumpish mass to move. Dryden.

LU'MPISHLY.† adv. [from lumpish.] With heaviness; with stupidity. Sherwood.

LU'MPISHNESS.† n. s. [from lumpish.] Stupid heaviness.

The Lord was well acquainted with the dulnesse and lumpishnesse of our hearts. Exposit. of Solomon's Song, (1585,) p. 209.

Such repugnancy and resistance there is yet remaining in those, which are most obedient; such heaviness and lumpishness in those, which are most ready and diligent. Harmar, Transl. of Beza, p. 59.

LU'MPY. adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.

One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LU'NACY.† n. s. [from luna, the moon.] A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.

Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Your kindred shun your house,
As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shakspeare.

If we bid all reason, and history, and human helps and acquisitions, quite adieu, the world will never be rid of religious lunacies and fancies. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 251.

There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, that, when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in, think you have nothing. Suckling.

LU'NAR.† } LU'NARY. } adj. [lunaire, Fr. lunaris, Lat.]

1. Relating to the moon.

They that have resolved that these years were but lunary years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Then we upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

2. Being under the dominion of the moon.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The figure of its seed much resembles a horseshoe, which Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signification, and raised the same unto a lunary representation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Resembling the moon; orbed like the moon.

The lunar horns, that bind
The brow of Isis, cast a blaze around. Dryden, Ov.

In their right hand a pointed dart they wield;
The left, for ward, sustains a lunar shield. Dryden, Æn.

LU'NARY. n. s. [lunaria, Latin; lunaire, French.] Monwort.

Then sprinkles she the juice of rue
With nine drops of the midnight dew,
From lunary distilling. Drayton, Nymphid.

LU'NATED.† adj. [from luna.] Formed like a half moon.

A sort of cross, which our heralds do not dream of; which is a cross lunated after this manner. Brown, Trav. (1685,) p. 54.

LU'NATICK.† adj. [lunatique, Fr. lunaticus, Latin.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.

Lord, have mercy on my sone, for he is lunatyk. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xvii.

Bedlam beggars, from low farms,
Sometimes with lunatick bans, sometimes with prayers,
Enforce their charity. Shakspeare.

LU'NATICK. n. s. A madman.

The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
The madman. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

I dare ensure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years; because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hospital for the reception of idiots and lunaticks. Swift.

LUNA'TION. n. s. [lunaison, French; luna, Latin.] The revolution of the moon.

If the lunations be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever. Holder on Time.

LUNCH.† } LU'NCHEON. } n. s. [Minsheu derives it from lonja, Spanish; Skinner from kleinken, a small piece, Teutonick. It probably comes from clutch or clunch. Dr. Johnson. — Minsheu's derivation seems to be the true one. The Spanish lonja, a great slice, is particularly applied to bacon. See LONJA, Dict. Acad. Españ. And thus, in our early usage of luncheon: "Witnesse their double chynnes, and fat lunchions of flesh on their bodies." The Cautelles of the Masse, 8vo. 1584. Serenius, however, notices the Swed. luns, kluns, massa.]

1. As much food as one's hand can hold.

When hungry thou stood'st staring, like an oaf,
I slic'd the luncheon from the barley loaf;
With crumbled bread I thicken'd well the mess. Gay.

2. A kind of meal between breakfast and dinner. Now a common colloquial expression. Formerly it was an afternoon's repast, between dinner and supper.

LUNE.† n. s. [luna, Lat.]

1. Any thing in the shape of an half moon.

A troop of Janizaries strew'd the field,
Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, lunes, or squares,
Firm as they stood. Watts.

2. Fit of lunacy or frenzy; mad freak. The French say of a man fantastical or whimsical, Il a des lunes. Hanmer.

These dangerous, unsafe lunes o' the king! Beshrew them!
He must be told on't, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman best. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

3. A leash: as, the lune of a hawk. [Su. Goth. lina, funis.]

LU'NET.* n. s. [from luna, Lat.] A little moon; an attendant upon a planet.

There have been further discoveries made of the visible and material heavens, in these later ages, than ever were known to our predecessors; who could never have believed, that there were such lunets about some of the planets, as our late perspectives have descried. Bp. Hall, Peacemaker, § 10.

LUNE'TTE. n. s. [French.] A small half moon.

Lunette is a covered place made before the courtine, which consists of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raised in fosses full of water, to serve instead of a fausse braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage: it is six toises in extent, of which the parapet is four. Trevoux.

LU'NGEOUS.* adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Spiteful; malicious. Derbyshire, and Leicestershire. Grose. And, I believe, in Cheshire.

LU'NGIS.* n. s. [longis, Fr. longone, Ital. from λογγάζω, to be slow, Trippault; from longus, q. d. to be a long time about an affair, Menage. See To LOUNGE.] A lubber. Barret, Alv. 1580. A dreaming, drowsy fellow; also, one who being sent on an errand is long in returning. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. Not now in use, though obvious in the modern lounger.

LUNGS.† n. s. [lunȝen, Saxon; long, Dutch.]

1. The lights; the part by which breath is inspired and expired.

More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me. Shakspeare.

The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,
Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel. Dryden.

Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.

2. Formerly a cant term for a person; denoting a large and strong-voiced man, as Coles has observed; and also a chymical servant, a sort of under workman in the art.

That is his fire-drake,
His lungs, his zephyrus, he that puffs his coals. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

LU'NGED. adj. [from lungs.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air, as the lungs in an animal body.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.

LUNG-GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.]

The lungs sometimes grow fast to the skin that lines the breast within; whence such as are detained with that accident are lung-grown. Harvey on Consumptions.

LU'NGWORT.† n. s. [lunȝen-ƿyꞃt, Saxon; pulmonaria, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

LUNISO'LAR. adj. [lunisolaire, French; luna and solaris, Latin.] Compounded of the revolution of sun and moon.

LUNT. n. s. [lonte, Dutch.] The matchcord with which guns are fired.

LU'PINE. n. s. [lupin, French; lupinus, Latin.] A kind of pulse.

It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterward turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks. Miller.

When Protogenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined. Peacham on Drawing.

Where stalks of lupines grew,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year. Dryden, Georg.

LURCH. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from l'ourche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch; ourche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]

To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help. A ludicrous phrase.

Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the main design,
And leave us in the lurch. Denham.

But though thou'rt of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hudibras.

Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. L'Estrange.

Can you break your word with three of the honestest best meaning persons in the world? It is base to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison, Guardian.

To LURCH. v. n. [loeren, Dutch; or rather from the noun.]

1. To shift; to play tricks.

I myself, sometimes leaving goodness on my left-hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, and fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakspeare.

2. To lie in wait: we now rather use lurk.

While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurching upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. L'Estrange.

To LURCH. v. a. [lurcor, Lat.]

1. To devour; to swallow greedily.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]

He waxed like a sea;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurcht all swords o' the garland. Shakspeare, Coriol.

God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should so quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant. South.

3. To steal privily; to filch; to pilfer.

LU'RCHER.† n. s. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.

Is not love a lurcher, that taketh men's stomachs away that they cannot eat, their spleen that they cannot laugh, their hearts that they cannot fight, their eyes that they cannot sleepe? Lily, Endimion.

His thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his play the scudding lurcher flies;
Whilst every honest tongue Stop thief resounds. Gay.

2. A dog that watches for his game.

I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and setters. Tatler.

3. [lurco, Latin.] A glutton; a gormandizer. Not now used. Barret.

LU'RDAN.* n. s. [lourdin, old French, stupid, clownish; lourdat, a dunce; lurdus, low Lat. from lourd; Teut. loerd. See LOORD. Serenius derives the word from the Goth. lort, stercus.] A clown; a blockhead; a lazy person; a worthless person. Used in Lancashire.

Lo! here we have the kynge's seale:
What, lurden, art thou wode? Old Song of Adam Bell, P. ii.

Lourdans or clownes attired in their ordinary worky-day clothes. Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, p. 228.

LU'RDAN.* } adj. [lourdin, Fr.] Blockish; stupid;
LU'RDY. } lazy; sluggish. Cotgrave, and Grose.

LURE. n. s. [leurre, French; lore, Dutch.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My faulcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shakspeare.

This lure she cast abroad, thinking that this fame and belief would draw, at one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon, Hen. VII.

A great estate to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

This stiffneck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tarsels, and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.

How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty, and her lures, easily scorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent? Milton, P. R.

Luxury
Held out her lure to his superiour eye,
And griev'd to see him pass contemptuous by. Madden.

To LURE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks.

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill, I had suddenly an offence, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.

These falconers clammering up and down, from hill to hill, and luring all along, lighted at last upon a large pleasant valley. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 134.

To LURE.† v. a.

1. To bring hawks to the lure.

With empty hond men may no haukes lure. Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prol.

2. To attract; to entice; to draw. [lura, allicere, Goth. Serenius.]

A little matter will lure or scare the common people into civil and religious fashions, if they have easy leaders and bold dictators. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 154.

As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton, P. L.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lured on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could. Temple.

Should you lure
From this dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendent trees, the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various science lures the learned eye. Gay, Trivia.

LU'RID. adj. [luridus, Latin.] Gloomy; dismal. Not used.

Slow settling o'er the lurid grove,
Unusual darkness broods. Thomson, Summer.

To LURK.† v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See To LURCH. Dr. Johnson.— Lurch may be from loeren; or rather from the Danish lurer, to lurk, to watch, to lie sneaking, or in ambush; whence lur, an ambush. See Dr.

Jamieson in V. To Loure.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.

Far in land a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in loathsome den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked. Spenser, F. Q.

Milbrook lurketh between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing his name from a mill and little brook running there through. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

They lay not to live by their worke,
But theevishly loiter and lurke. Tusser, Husbandry.

If sinners entice thee, consent not; if they say, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent. Prov. i. 11.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton, P. L.

See
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree. Dryden, Æn.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen;
He springs to vengeance. Pope.

I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world: I have set my name at length. Swift.

Lu'rker.☨ n. s. [from lurk.] A loiterer; one that lies in wait; a thief that lies in wait.

If this lawless lurker had ever had any taste of the civil or canon law. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 129.

It was well known what a bold lurker schism was. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

Lu'rkingplace. n. s. [lurk and place.] Hiding place; secret place.

Take knowledge of all the lurkingplaces where he hideth himself. 1 Sam. xxiii. 23.

LU'SCIOUS.☨ adj. [from delicious, say some; but Skinner more probably derives it from luxurious, corruptly pronounced. Dr. Johnson. — It is probably from the old word lush, juicy, succulent, rank, lusty. See Lush.] Luscious is usually written lushious in our old lexicography.]

1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.

Pert wit and luscious eloquence have lost their relish. Burnet, Pastoral Care.

2. Sweet in a great degree.

The food that to him now is as luscious as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as colloquintida. Shakspeare, Othello.

With brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glass,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground. Milton, Comus.

Blown roses hold their sweetness to the last,
And raisins keep their luscious native taste. Dryden.

3. Pleasing; delightful.

He will bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase. South.

Lu'sciously.☨ adv. [from luscious.] Sweetly to a great degree. Sherwood.

Lu'sciousness. n. s. [from luscious.] Immoderate sweetness.

Can there be greater indulgence in God, than to embitter sensualities whose lusciousness intoxicates us, and to clip wings which carry us from him? Decay of Chr. Piety.

Peas breed worms by reason of the lusciousness and sweetness of the grain. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Lu'sern. n. s. [lupus cervarius, Lat.] A lynx.

Lush.☨ adj. Of a dark, deep, full colour, opposite to pale and faint; from lousche. Dr. Johnson from Hanmer. — But the word has no connection with the Fr. lousche, and no reference to colour, where Shakspeare applies it to the grass, in the solitary instance of the word given by Dr. Johnson. It appears to have been usually applied to plants, and to denote their juicy, full, succulent, and rank state. All the old editions of Shakspeare read "lushious woodbine," in the Mids. Night's Dream; where modern criticism has substituted lush.

Lush and foggy is the blade,
And cheers the husbandman with hope.
Golding, Transl. of Ovid, (1587.)

Shrubs lush, and almost like a grystle.
Golding, Transl. of Jul. Solinus, (1587.)

How lush and lusty the grass looks? how green?
Shakspeare, Tempest.

LUSK.☨ adj. [lasche, French; from the Goth. loskr, sluggish, crafty. Serenius.] Idle; lazy; worthless. Dict.

Lusk.* n. s. [from the adjective.] A lubber; a sot; a lazy fellow. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Els had we never had so many lecherous luskes among them. Bale, Acts of Eng. Vot. P. i. fol. 61. b.

To Lusk.* v. n. [from the noun.] To be idle; to lie idle, unemployed; to be careless.

He is my foe; friend thou not him, nor forge him arms, but let Him luske at home unhonoured.
Warner, Albion's Eng. (1596,) p. 147.

Themis selfe
Would be cashier'd from one poor scrap of pelfe:
If that she were incarnate in our time,
She might luske scorned in disdained slime,
Shaded from honour. Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599,) ii. 5.

Not that I mean to feign an idle God,
That lusks in heaven, and never looks abroad,
That crowns not virtue, and corrects not vice; —
——————— but I conceive
In God care, counsel, justice, mercy, might,
To punish wrongs, and patronize their right.
Sylvester, Du Bartas, (1621,) p. 141.

Lu'skish.☨ adj. [from lusk.] Somewhat inclinable to laziness or indolence.

Any swineherd's brat, that lousie came
To luskish Athens. Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599,) i. 3.

Lu'skishly. adv. [from luskish.] Lazily; indolently.

Lu'skishness.☨ n. s. [from luskish.] A disposition to laziness.

He shooke off luskishness; and, courage chill,
Kindling afresh, gan battell to renew. Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 35.

Luso'rious.☨ adj. [lusorius, Latin.] Used in play; sportive.

Many too nicely take exceptions at cards, tables, and dice, and such mixt lusorious lots; whom Gataker well confutes. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 271.

Things more open to exception, yet unjustly condemned as unlawful; such as the lusorious lots, dancing and stage-plays. Bp. Sanderson.

Lu'sory.☨ adj. [lusorius, Lat.] Used in play.

How bitter have some been against all lusory lots, or any play with chance! Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 120.

They supply it with their lances in lusory skirmishes on horseback, wherein their dexterity cannot be too much admired. L. Addison, West Barbary, p. 218.

There might be many entertaining contrivances for the instruction of children in geometry and geography, in such alluring and lusory methods, which would make a most agreeable and lasting impression. Watts on the Mind.

LUST.☨ n. s. [lust, Saxon; lust, Dutch; from the Gothick, lustus, desire; and not the participle of the Sax. lystan, to list, to desire, as Mr. H. Tooke pretends. See the first sense of the word.]

1. Desire; inclination; will. This primary sense is not noticed by Dr. Johnson. Seamen yet use this sense in respect to the inclination of the ship, when she heels.

He that hath more lust to cry.
Sidney, Dial. between two Shepherds.

And Nemertea learned well to rule her lust.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 51.

Little lust had she to talk of aught.
Spenser, F. Q. v. vi. 21.

Let me be privileg'd by my place, and message,
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I'll answer to my lust. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them.
Exod. xv. 9.

2. Carnal desire.

This our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; Epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Lust, and rank thoughts. Shakspeare, Cymb.

They are immoderately given to the lust of the flesh, making no conscience to get bastards. Abbot.

When a temptation of lust assaults thee, do not resist it by disputing with it, but fly from it, that is, think not at all of it. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

3. Any violent or irregular desire.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wiliness they imagined. Psalms.

Virtue was represented by Hercules: he is drawn offering to strike a dragon; by the dragon are meant all manner of lusts. Peacham on Drawing.

All weigh our acts, and whate'er seems unjust,
Impute not to necessity, but lust. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

The lust of lucre. Pope.

4. Vigour; active power; lustiness. Not used.

Trees will grow greater, and bear better fruit, if you put salt, or lees of wine, or blood, to the root: the cause may be the increasing the lust or spirit of the root. Bacon.

To LUST.✝ v. n. [Sax. lurtan; Goth. lustan.]

1. To desire carnally.

This is she,
That with her lust wins infamy.
If lusting love be so disgrac't,
Die before you live unchast:
For better die with honest fame,
Than lead a wanton life with shame.
Greene, Philomela, (1615.)

Inconstant man, that loveth all he saw,
And lusted after all that he did love. Roscommon.

2. To desire vehemently.

Giving sometimes prodigally; not because he loved them to whom he gave, but because he lusted to give. Sidney.

The Christian captives in chains could no way move themselves, if they should unadvisedly lust after liberty. Knolles.

3. To list; to like. Out of use.

Their eyes swell with fatness; and they do even what they lust. Psal. lxxiii. 7.

4. To have irregular dispositions, or desires.

The mixed multitude fell a lusting; and the children of Israel also wept, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? Numbers.

The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy. Jam. iv. 5.

LU'STFUL.✝ adj. [lust and full. Sax. lurtpull.]

1. Libidinous; having irregular desires.

Turning wrathful fire to lustful heat,
With beastly sin thought her to have defil'd. Spenser, F. Q.

There is no man that is intemperate or lustful, but besides the guilt likewise stains and obscures his soul. Tillotson.

2. Provoking to sensuality; inciting to lust.

Thence his lustful orgies he enlarg'd. Milton, P. L.

3. Vigorous. Not in use.

The want of lustful health
Could not be half so griefful to your grace,
As these most wretched tidings that I bring.
Sackville, Trag. of Gorboduc, (1561.)

LU'STFULLY. adv. [from lustful.] With sensual concupiscence.

LU'STFULNESS.✝ n. s. [from lustful. Sax. lurtpulnep.] Libidinousness. Sherwood.

And flourish in flowres of lustihead. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

A goodly personage,
Now in his freshest flower of lustihead,
Fit to inflame fair lady with love's rage. Spenser.

Reason and respect
Make livers pale, and lustihood deject. Shakspeare.

I'll prove it on his body;
Despight his nice fence, and his active practice,
His May of youth and bloom of lustyhood. Shakspeare.

Frenchmen have been neighing after the constitutions of their neighbours in their lawless lustihood.
Pursuits of Literature.

LU'STILY.✝ adv. [lurtlice, Sax.] Stoutly; with vigour; with mettle.

Old Hubberdin, as he was dauncing with his doctours lustilie in the pulpit, against the hereticks, how he stampt and tooke on I cannot tell, but crash quoth the pulpit, downe commeth the dauncer, and there lay Hubberdin not dauncing, but sprawling in the midst of his audience.
Fox, Acts and Mon. of Bp. Latimer.

I determine to fight lustily for him. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Now, gentlemen,
Let's tune, and to it lustily a while. Shakspeare.

Barbarossa took upon him that painful journey, which the old king lustily performed. Knolles.

LU'STINESS. n. s. [from lusty.] Stoutness; sturdiness; strength; vigour of body.

Fresh Clarion being ready dight,—
[He] with good speed began to take his flight,
Over the fields in his frank lustiness. Spenser, Muiopotmos.

Where there is so great a prevention of the ordinary time, it is the lustiness of the child; but when it is less, it is some indisposition of the mother. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness, and being in good liking, were set on a stall to shew the good habit of their body, and made to play tricks before the buyers, to shew their activity and strength. Dryden, Pers.

LU'STLESS.✝ adj. [from lust.] Not vigorous; weak; languid; lifeless.

Lustless, far from game. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

The rather lambs bene starved with cold,
All for their maister is lustlesse and old. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

In his lustlesse limbs, through evill guise,—
A shaking fever raign'd continually. Spenser, F. Q.

The throstle, with shrill sharps, as purposely he song
To awake the lustlesse sun; or chiding, that so long
He was in coming forth. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

LU'STRAL. adj. [lustrale, French; lustralis, Latin.] Used in purification.

His better parts by lustral waves refin'd,
More pure, and nearer to æthereal mind. Garth.

To LU'STRATE.* v. a. [lustro, Latin.] To purify.

The parts of this work, as fast as I could finish them, were lustrated by your gracious eye, and consummated by your judicious observations. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. Dedication.

When we have found this execrable thing, which hath brought all our plagues on us, then we must purge, and cleanse, and lustrate the whole city for its sake.
Hammond, Works, iv. 638.

LUSTRA'TION. n. s. [lustration, French; lustratio, Lat.] Purification by water.

Job's religious care,
His sons assembles, whose united prayer,
Like sweet perfumes, from golden censors rise;
He with divine lustrations sanctifies. Sandys, Par. of Job.

That spirits are corporeal seems a conceit derogative unto himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Should Io's priest command,
A pilgrimage to Meroe's burning sand;

Through desarts they wou'd seek the secret spring,
And holy water for lustration bring. Dryden, Juv.

What were all their lustrations but so many solemn purifyings, to render both themselves and their sacrifices acceptable to their gods? South, Serm.

By ardent prayer, and clear lustration,
Purge the contagious spots of human weakness;
Impure no mortal can behold Apollo. Prior.

LU'STRE. n. s. [lustre, French.]

1. Brightness; splendour; glitter.

You have one eye left to see some mischief on him.
—Lest it see more prevent it; out, vile gelly! where is thy lustre now? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To the soul time doth perfection give,
And adds fresh lustre to her beauty still. Davies.

The scorching sun was mounted high,
In all its lustre, to the noonday sky. Addison, Ov.

Pass but some fleeting years, and these poor eyes,
Where now without a boast some lustre lies;
No longer shall their little honours keep,
But only be of use to read or weep. Prior.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair,
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. A sconce with lights.

Ridotta sips, and dances till she see
The doubling lustres dance as quick as she. Pope, Hor.

3. Eminence; renown.

His ancestors continued about four hundred years, rather without obscurity than with any great lustre. Wotton.

I used to wonder how a man of birth and spirit could endure to be wholly insignificant and obscure in a foreign country, when he might live with lustre in his own. Swift.

4. [from lustre, Fr. lustrum, Latin.] The space of five years.

Both of us have closed the tenth lustre, and it is time to determine how we shall play the last act of the farce. Bolingbroke.

LU'STRING. n. s. [from lustre.] A shining silk; commonly pronounced lutestring.

LU'STROUS.† adj. [from lustre. Fr. lustreux. Donne has written our word lustrious: "a lustrious beauty and excellency of workmanship." Hist. of the Septuagint, ed. 1633. p. 62.] Bright; shining; luminous.

Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin, good sparks and lustrous. Shakspeare, All's well.

The more lustrous the imagination is, it filleth and fixeth the better. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Of the colour of mud.

A scaly tortoise-shell, of the lutarious kind. Grew.

LUTA'TION.* n. s. [lutatus, Lat.] The method of cementing chymical vessels close together. See To LUTE.

LUTE.† n. s. [luth, lut, French. Dr. Johnson.—Some derive this word from the Arab. a-oude, whence the Spanish laud or laut, supposed by Bochart to be the chelys or testudo of the ancients. See Shaw's Travels, 4to. p. 203. The German laute is also testudo, and the verb lauten, sonum modulare sive id fiat ore sive instrumento. See Wachter.]

1. A stringed instrument of musick.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

May must be drawn with a sweet countenance, upon his head a garland of roses, in one hand a lute. Peacham.

In a sadly pleasing strain
Let the warbling lute complain. Pope, St. Cæcilia.

A lute string will bear a hundred weight without rupture, but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity. Arbuthnot.

Lands of singing, or of dancing slaves,
Love-whispering woods, and lute-resounding waves. Pope, Dunciad.

2. [from lut, French; lutum, Lat.] A composition like clay, with which chemists close up their vessels.

Some temper lute, some spacious vessels move,
These furnaces erect, and those approve. Garth.

To LUTE.† v. a. [from the noun. French luter.] To close with lute, or chemist's clay.

Take a vessel of iron, and let it have a cover of iron well luted, after the manner of the chemists. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Iron may be so heated, that, being closely luted in a glass, it shall constantly retain the fire. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

Then appeared a large glass-bottle, wherein was luted up a famous necromancer. L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo, p. 48.

LU'TER.* } LU'TIST. } n. s. [from lute. Lutist is a word more regularly formed than lutanist.] A player on the lute. Huloet and Barret thus define the luter. Dr. Johnson notices neither that nor lutist.

His [Strada's] imitation of Claudian in expressing a controversy between a lutist and a nightingale. Hakewill on Providence, p. 254.

LU'TESTRING.* n. s.

1. The string of a lute. Sherwood. And see the example from Arbuthnot in LUTE.

2. A kind of silk. See LUSTRING.

There goes Mrs. Roundabout; I mean the fat lady in the lutestring trollopee. Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

LU'THERAN.* n. s. One who adheres to the doctrine and discipline of Luther. See LUTHERANISM.

I know her son,
pleeny Lutheran. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The Lutherans constantly pressed the unsophisticated tenet of the Atonement, not contractedly in a calvinistical, but comprehensively in a Christian point of view. Laurence, Serm. 3.

LU'THERAN.* adj. Denoting the doctrine or followers of Luther.

The king desired the Lutheran divines to approve his second marriage; they begged his excuse in writing. Burnet, Hist. of the Ref. B. 2.

If we contemplate them [the Articles of the Church of England] in this view, or rather such of them as will become the subject of investigation, we find, that far from being framed according to the system of Calvin in preference to all others, they were modelled after the Lutheran in opposition to the Romish tenets of the day. Laurence, Serm. 1.

LU'THERANISM.* } n. s. The doctrine of Luther.
LU'THERISM. } Protestantism is divided into Lutheranism and Calvinism, so called from Luther and Calvin, the two distinguished reformers of the sixteenth century. Guthrie.

Lutherism increased daily in the university. A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1526.

In this country, where the light of literature could not be concealed, nor the love of truth suppressed, Lutheranism found numerous proselytes, who were known by the appellation of "the men of the new learning." Laurence, Serm. 1.

LU'THERN.* n. s. [lucarne, Fr. lucerna, Lat.] An architectural term for a sort of window over the cornice, in the roof of a building. See the third sense of LANTERN.

LU'TULENT. adj. [lutulentus, Latin.] Muddy; turbid.

To LUX. } v. a. [luxer, French; luxo, Latin.]
To LU'XATE. } To put out of joint; to disjoint.

Consider well the luxated joint, which way it slipped out; it requireth to be returned in the same manner. Wiseman.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall
Lux'd his neck-joint, and spinal marrow bruis'd. Philips.

LUXA'TION.† n. s. [luxation, Fr. Cotgrave; from luxo, Latin.]

1. The act of disjointing.

If the straining and luxation of one joint can so afflict us, what shall the racking of the whole body, and the torture of the soul? Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.

Why this mangling and luxation of passages? Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 50.

2. Any thing disjointed.

If thou wert laid up of the gout, or some rupture, or luxation of some limb, thou wouldst not complain to keep in. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

This joint may be kept from luxation. Smith on Old Age, p. 59.

The undue situation, or connexion of parts, in fractures and luxations, are to be rectified by chirurgical means. Floyer.

LUXE.† n. s. [French; luxus, Latin.] Luxury; voluptuousness. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Prior. But Shenstone uses it; though indeed it is a word unworthy of English usage.

The pow'r of wealth I try'd,
And all the various luxe of costly pride. Prior.

Above or Persian luxe, or Attic art,
The rude majestic monument arose. Shenstone, Eleg. 21.

LUXU'RIANCE.† } n. s. [from luxurians, Latin. This LUXU'RIANCY. } word is noticed by Heylin, in 1656, as unusual and uncouth. But luxuriancy had been used some years before that date.] Exuberance; abundant or wanton plenty or growth.

The rankness and luxuriancy of our tempers in this kind ought rather to be the subject of our extirpation, than a ground for our manuring and culture. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 143.

A fungus prevents healing only by its luxuriancy. Wiseman.

Flowers grow up in the garden in the greatest luxuriancy and profusion. Spectator.

While through the parting robe the alternate breast
In full luxuriance rose. Thomson, Summer.

LUXU'RIANT. adj. [luxurians, Lat.] Exuberant; superfluously plenteous.

A fluent and luxuriant speech becomes youth well, but not age. Bacon, Ess.

The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps
Luxuriant. Milton, P. L.

If the fancy of Ovid be luxuriant, it is his character to be so. Dryden, Pref. to Ov. Ep.

Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth refine,
But show no mercy to an empty line. Pope.

LUXU'RIANTLY.* adv. [from luxuriant.] Abundantly.

The auburn locks, and the taper arms, of the Saxon dame are most luxuriantly illustrated. Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 81.

To LUXU'RIATE.† v. n. [luxurior, Latin.] To grow exuberantly; to shoot with superfluous plenty.

I could more willingly have luxuriated, and better satisfied myself and others. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

For all this harm, which apparently follows surfeiting and drunkenness, see how we rage and luxuriate in this kind! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 71.

Corn luxuriates in a better mold. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 454.

The tongue, that nimble interpreter of the mind, when it doth most luxuriate in variety of expressions, is yet so bounded, that of necessity it must utter all conceptions of the mind in a few words. Hartlib, Reform. of Schools, (1642,) p. 47.

'Tis worth enough, if a young gallant can
Look big, luxuriate, and write gentleman! Beaumont, Psyche, xvi. 30.

The gay girl, as was her fate,
Doth wanton and luxuriate. Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 46.

Alexander the Great, reflecting on his friends degenerating into sloth and luxury, told them that it was a most slavish thing to luxuriate, and a most royal thing to labour. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 19.

LUXU'RIOUS adj. [luxurieux, Fr. luxuriosus, Lat.]

1. Delighting in the pleasures of the table.

2. Administring to luxury.

Those whom last thou saw'st
In triumph, and luxurious wealth, are they
First seen in acts of prowess eminent,
And great exploits; but of true virtue void. Milton, P. L.

The luxurious board. Anon.

3. Lustful; libidinous.

She knows the heat of a luxurious bed:
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakspeare.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful. Shakspeare.

4. Voluptuous; enslaved to pleasure.

Luxurious cities, where the noise
Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers. Milton, P. L.

5. Softening by pleasure.

Repel the Tuscan foes, their city seize,
Protect the Latians, in luxurious ease. Dryden.

6. Luxuriant; exuberant.

Till more hands
Aid us, the work under our labour grows
Luxurious by restraint. Milton, P. L.

LUXU'RIOUSLY. adv. [from luxurious.] Deliciously; voluptuously.

Hotter hours — you have
Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Where mice and rats devour'd poetick bread,
And with heroick verse luxuriously were fed. Dryden.

He never supt in solemn state;
Nor day to night luxuriously did join. Dryden.

LUXU'RIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from luxurious.] Voluptuousness; lewdness. Sherwood.

When dead's the strength of England's yeomanry;
When inundation of luxuriousness
Fats all the world with such gross beastliness;

Who can abstain? what modest brain can hold,
But he must make his shamefac'd muse a scold!
Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599.) i. 2.

LU'XURY. n. s. [luxuré, old French; luxuria, Latin.]

1. Voluptuousness; addictedness to pleasure.

Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. Milton, P. L.

Riches expose a man to pride and luxury, and a foolish elation of heart. Addison, Spect.

2. Lust; lewdness.

Urge his hateful luxury,
His bestial appetite in change of lust,
Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters, wives.
Shakspeare.

3. Luxuriance; exuberance.

Young trees of several kinds set contiguous in a fruitful ground, with the luxury of the trees will incorporate. Bacon.

4. Delicious fare.

He cut the side of the rock for a garden, and by laying on it earth, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison.

Ly. A very frequent termination both of names of places and of adjectives and adverbs; when ly terminates the name of a place, it is derived from leaȝ, Saxon, a field. Gibson. When it ends an adjective or adverb, it is contracted from lich, like: as, beastly, beastlike; plainly, plainlike.

Ly'am.* n. s. [called also leam, and lyme. See Limehound, and Limmer. Perhaps from the Saxon liȝan, ducere, to lead.] A kind of thong or leash for holding a hound in hand.

My dog-hook at my belt to which my lyam's ty'd,
My sheaf of arrows by, my wood-knife by my side,
My hound then in my lyam. Drayton, Muse's Elizium.

Lyca'nthropy.† n. s. [lycanthropie, Fr. λύκος, a wolf, and ἄνθρωπος, a man, Gr.] A kind of madness, in which men have the qualities of wild beasts.

The world is a wide wilderness, wherein we converse with wild and savage creatures: we think them men; they are beasts. It is contrary to the delusions of lycanthropy: there, he that is a man thinks himself a beast. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

I must resent the calamities of the time, and the desperate case of this nation, who seem to have fallen quite from the very faculty of reason, and to be possessed with a pure lycanthropy, with a wolvish kind of disposition to tear one another in this manner. Howell, Lett. i. vi. 58.

He sees like a man in his sleep, and grows as much the wiser as the man that dreamt of a lycanthropy, and was for ever after wary not to come near a river. Bp. Taylor.

Dr. John Freind [has] given, from Ætius and Oribasius, a description of the madness called lycanthropy, of which one of the most striking symptoms was, to wander amongst the sepulchres of the dead. Warburton, Serm. 27.

Ly'dian.* adj. Denoting a species of the ancient musick; meaning a soft and slow kind of air.

And ever, against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton, L'All.
Softly sweet in Lydian measure,
Soon he sooth'd the soul to pleasure. Dryden, Ode.

The Lydian mood is now in most request.
Phillips, Theat. Poet. Pref.

I have mixed unawares too much of the Phrygian; I might change it to the Lydian, and soften their riotous tempers: but it is enough: learn from this sample to speak with veneration of ancient musick! Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scriblerus.

To* Lye. See To Lie.

Ly'ing.† n. s. [from lie, whether it signifies to be recumbent, or to speak falsely, or otherwise.]

They will have me whipt for speaking true, thou wilt have me whipt for lying, and sometimes I am whipt for holding my peace. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Many tears and temptations befal me by the lying in wait of the Jews. Acts, xx. 19.

The doctor has practised both by sea and land, and therefore cures the green-sickness and lyings-in! Spectator.

Ly'ingly.* adv. [from lying.] Falsely; without truth. Sherwood.

Lyke. adj. for like. Spenser.

Lym.* n. s. [from leam or lyme. See Limehound.] A bloodhound.

Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,
Hound, or spaniel, brach, or lym. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

LYMPH. n. s. [lymphe, French; lympha, Latin.] Water; transparent colourless liquor.

When the chyle passeth through the mesentery, it is mixed with the lymph, the most spirituous and elaborated part of the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Ly'mphated. adj. [lymphatus, Lat.] Mad. Dict.

Lympha'tick.† n. s. [lymphatique, Fr. from lympha, Latin.]

1. The lymphaticks are slender pellucid tubes, whose cavities are contracted at small and unequal distances: they are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving first a fine thin lymph from the lymphatick ducts, which dilutes the chylous fluid.
Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

Upon the death of an animal, the spirits may sink into the veins, or lymphaticks and glandules. Floyer.

2. A lunatick. [lymphaticus, Lat. mad.]

All nations have their lymphatics of some kind or other.
Ld. Shaftesbury.

Erroneous fancy shap'd her wild attire;
From Bethlem's walls the poor lymphatic stray'd.
Shenstone, Eleg. 16.

Lympha'tick.* adj.

The circulation of the blood, the milky and lymphatick vessels, the motion of the heart, &c.
Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 342.

2. Mad; raving; extravagant; enthusiastick.

A negro stood by us trembling, whom we could see now and then lift up his hands and eyes, muttering his black art, as we apprehended, to some hobgoblin; but, when we least suspected, [he] skipt out, and as in a lymphatick rapture unsheathed a long skean or knife. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 27.

Horace either is, or feigns himself, lymphatic.
Ld. Shaftesbury.

Ly'mpheduct. n. s. [lympha and ductus, Lat.] A vessel which conveys the lymph.

The glands,
All artful knots, of various hollow threads,
Which lympheducts, an artery, nerve, and vein,
Involv'd and close together wound, contain. Blackmore.

Ly'nden tree. [tilia, Lat.] A plant. See Lind.

LYNX. n. s. [Latin.] A spotted beast, remarkable for speed and sharp sight.

He that has an idea of a beast with spots, has but a confused idea of a leopard, it not being thereby sufficiently distinguished from a lynx. Locke.

What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam. Pope.

LYRE. n. s. [lyre, Fr. lyra, Lat.] A harp; a musical instrument to which poetry is, by poetical writers, supposed to be sung.

With other notes than to the Orphean lyre. Milton, P. L.

My softest verse, my darling lyre,
Upon Euphelia's toilet lay. Prior.

He never touched his lyre in such a truly chromatick manner as upon that occasion. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

LY'RICAL. } adj. [lyricus, Latin; lyrique, Fr.] Per-
LY'RICK. } taining to a harp, or to odes or poetry sung to a harp; singing to a harp.

All his trophies hung and acts enroll'd
In copious legend, or sweet lyrick song. Milton, S. A.

Somewhat of the purity of English, somewhat of more equal thoughts, somewhat of sweetness in the numbers; in one word, somewhat of a finer turn, and more lyrical verse, is yet wanting. Dryden.

The lute neglected, and the lyrick muse,
Love taught my tears in sadder notes to flow,
And tun'd my heart to elegies of woe. Pope.

LY'RICK. n. s. A poet who writes songs to the harp.

The greatest conqueror in this nation, after the manner of the old Grecian lyricks, did not only compose the words of his divine odes, but set them to musick himself. Addison.

LY'RIST. n. s. [lyristes, Lat.] A musician who plays upon the harp.

His tender theme the charming lyrist chose
Minerva's anger, and the direful woes
Which voyaging from Troy the victors bore. Pope.

M.

M Has, in English, one unvaried sound, by compression of the lips; as, mine, tame, camp: it is never mute.

M.* A numeral letter signifying one thousand.

MAB.* n. s.

1. The queen of the fairies, in the superstitious mythology of elder days; probably derived from the Welsh mab, anciently signifying a little child.

O, then, I see queen Mab hath been with you:
She is the fairies' midwife; and she comes
In shape no bigger than an agate stone
On the fore-finger of an alderman. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Her chariot of a snail's fine shell,
Which for the colours did excell,
The fair queen Mab becoming well. Drayton, Nymphidia.

This is Mab, the mistress fairy
That doth nightly rob the dairy. B. Jonson, Entert. at Altrope.

MACARO'NI. * n. s. [Ital. maccaroni.]

1. A kind of paste meat boiled in broth, and dressed with butter, cheese, and spice. Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598. A favourite dish among the Italians; and now common, in our own country, at dinners; a sort of vermicelli.

He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat anchovies, maccaroni, &c. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

2. A sort of droll or fool; and thence the application of the word to a fop. [maccarone, Ital.] See also Macaroon.

There is a set of merry drolls whom the common people of all countries admire, and seem to love so well, that they could eat them, according to the old proverb; I mean those circumforaneous wits whom every nation calls by the name of that dish of meat which it loves best. In Holland, they are termed pickled herrings;" in France, " Jean pottages;" in Italy, " maccaronies;" and in Great Britain, " Jack puddings." Addison, Spect. No. 47.

You are a delicate Londoner; you are a maccaroni; you can't ride. Boswell, Tour to the Hebr. p. 84.

Macaro'nick.* n. s. [macaronique, Fr. from the Ital. maccaroni.] A confused heap or mixture of several things. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Macaro'nick.* adj. [macaronique, Fr. The adjective in both languages is modern: not so the substantive.] Denoting a kind of burlesque poetry, intermixing several languages, latinizing words of vulgar use, and modernizing Latin words. Dr. Johnson, in macaroon, has considered this application as derived from the person, the macaroni, whom he calls a coarse, rude, low fellow; but it is much more probably from the combination, the mixed food, maccaroni.

Our author gives an account of this new species of poetry, since called macaronic. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 357.

Macaro'on.† n. s. [maccaroni, Italian.]

1. A coarse, rude, low fellow; whence macaronick poetry, in which the language is purposely corrupted. Dr. Johnson. — But see Macaronick. Donne means not such a person as Johnson has described, but a pert, meddling fellow; a busy body; and the poet has placed the accent on the first syllable. But it was also accented on the last.

Like a big wife at sight of lothed meat,
Ready to travail; so I sigh and sweat,
To hear this macaron talk in vain: for yet,
Either my humour or his own to fit;—
He names a price for every office paid,
He saith our wars thrive ill because delay'd. Donne, Poems, p. 132.

A macaroon,
And no way fit to speak to clouted shoon.
El. on Donne's Death by R. B. Donne's Poems, (ed. 1650.)

2. A kind of sweet biscuit, made of flour, almonds, eggs, and sugar. [from the Italian word; whence macaron, Fr.]

Maca'w.† n. s. A large species of parrot, distinguished also by the length of its tail. There are three sorts of this bird brought over into Europe. Chambers.

Where pheasants, parrots, and macaws unfold,
Their many-colour'd plumes, suffus'd with gold. Anon.

Macaw-tree. n. s.

A species of the palm-tree, very common in the Carribee islands, where the negroes pierce the tender fruit, whence issues a pleasant liquor; and the body of the tree affords a solid timber, supposed by some to be a sort of ebony. Miller.

MACE.† n. s. [mazza, Saxon; maça, Spanish.]

1. An ensign of authority borne before magistrates.

Who mightily upheld that royal mace,
Which now thou bearest. Spenser, F. Q.

2. [mace, old French; massa, Latin.] A heavy blunt weapon; a club of metal.

Some have an axe, and some a mace of stele.
Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

O, murderous slumber!
Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy,
That plays thee musick? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The Turkish troops breaking in with their scymitars and heavy iron maces, made a most bloody execution. Knolles.

Death with his mace petrifick smote. Milton, P. L.

With his mace their monarch struck the ground;
With inward trembling earth receiv'd the wound,
And rising streams a ready passage found. Dryden.

The mighty maces with such haste descend,
They break the bones, and make the armour bend. Dryden.

3. [macis, Lat. and old French.] A kind of spice.

The nutmeg is inclosed in a threefold covering, of which the second is mace: it is thin and membranaceous, of an oleaginous, and a yellowish colour: it has an extremely fragrant, aromatick, and agreeable smell, and a pleasant, but acrid and oleaginous taste. Hill, Mat. Med.

Water, vinegar, and honey, is a most excellent sudorifick: it is more effectual with a little mace added to it. Arbuthnot.

MACEA'LE. n. s. [mace and ale.] Ale spiced with mace.

I prescribed him a draught of maceale, with hopes to dispose him to rest. Wiseman, Surgery.

MA'CEBEARER. n. s. [mace and bear.] One who carries the mace before persons in authority.

I was placed at a quadrangular table opposite to the mace-bearer. Spectator.

To MA'CERATE.† v. a. [macero, Latin; macerer, French.]

1. To make lean; to wear away.

Recurrent pains of the stomach, megrims, and other recurrent head-aches, macerate the parts, and render the looks of patients consumptive and pining. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. To mortify; to harass with corporal hardships.

No such sad cares, as wont to macerate
And rend the greedie minds of covetous men,
Do ever creepe into the shepherd's den. Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

Sorrow, which contracts the heart, macerates the soul, subverts the good estate of the body, hindering all the occupations of it, causing melancholy, and many times death itself. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 25.

Covetous men are all fools: for what greater folly can there be, or madness, than for such a man to macerate himself when he need not? Burton, Anat. of Mel.

Out of an excess of zeal they practise mortifications; they macerate their bodies, and impair their health. Fiddes.

3. To steep almost to solution.

A vessel — wherein the meat must be macerated for a certain season. Smith on Old Age, p. 84.

In lotions in women's cases, he orders two portions of hellebore macerated in two cotylæ of water. Arbuthnot.

MA'CERATION.† n. s. [maceration, French; from macerate.]

1. The act of wasting, or making lean. Cockeram.

2. Mortification; corporal hardship.

The faith itself, being clear and serene from all clouds of ceremonies, yet retaineth the use of fastings, abstinencies, and other macerations and humiliations of the body, as things real and not figurative. Bacon, Advan. of Learning, B. 2.

What maceration is there here, with fears and jealousies? Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 26.

Envy is not pleasure, but the maceration of the body. Feltham, Res. ii. 56.

Long fastings, and macerations of the flesh. Howell, Lett. iv. 36.

3. Maceration is an infusion either with or without heat, wherein the ingredients are intended to be almost wholly dissolved. Quincy.

He took only a maceration of rhubarb, infused into a draught of white wine and beer. Rawley, Life of Lord Bacon, (1657.)

They beat the whole plant in a mortar, roots, stalks, flowers, leaves and all, till it be reduced to a confused mass. Then after maceration, fermentation, separation, and other workings of art, there is extracted a kind of ashes or salt. Gregory, Notes on Script. (ed. 1684,) p. 126.

The saliva serves for a maceration and dissolution of the meat into a chyle. Ray on Creation.

MACE-REED. n. s. [typha.] An herb.

MACHIAVE'LIAN.* n. s. [from Nicholas Machiavel, a Florentine, of the fifteenth century; who inculcated the most detestable notions, and encouraged the "art of reigning tyrannically." He was an enemy to religion, as well as to sound politicks; for he taught, that the most solemn obligations might be broken, and that no scruples should be entertained of any action that might compass a design.] A follower of the opinions of Machiavel. Bullokar.

Subtile Machiavelians, and those which are frequently called the prudent. Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 46.

As our Saviour said, to forewarn all revolters, "Remember Lot's wife;" so say I, to forewarn all arch-politicians, and cunning Machiavelians of this world, Remember poor Naboth's vineyard. Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639,) p. 626.

MACHIAVE'LIAN.* adj. Denoting the notions of Machiavel; crafty; subtle; roguish.

My brain,
Italianates my barren faculties
To Machiavelian blackness. The Valiant Welshman, (1615.)

A most barbarous fellow, using Machiavelian atheism. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633,) p. 208.

MA'CHIAVELISM.* n. s. [machiavelisme, French; from Machiavel.] The notions of Machiavel; cunning roguery. See MACHIAVELIAN. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

MA'CHINAL. adj. [from machina, Latin.] Relating to machines. Dict.

To MA'CHINATE.† v. n. [machinor, Lat. machiner, Fr.] To plan; to contrive; to form schemes; to plot; to conspire against. Cotgrave.

How long will you machinate!
Persecute with causeless hate! Sandys, Ps. p. 96.

MACHINA'TION. n. s. [machinatio, Lat. machination, French; from machinate.] Artifice; contrivance; malicious scheme.

If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

O from their machinations free,
That would my guiltless soul betray;
From those who in my wrongs agree,
And for my life their engines lay. Sandys, Paraphr. Ps.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machinations come to nought. Milton, P. R.

How were they zealous in respect to their temporal governors? Not by open rebellion, not by private machinations; but in blessing and submitting to their emperors, and obeying them in all things but their idolatry. Sprat.

MA'CHINATOR.* n. s. [machinator, Lat. machinateur, Fr.] One who plots or forms schemes.

This is the design and the mischievous issue, which to cover and propagate, the cunning machinator pretends the exaltation of the freeness of that grace which he designs to dishonour and defeat. Glanville, Serm. x. p. 380.

MACHI'NE.† n. s. [machina, Latin; machine, French. This word is pronounced masheen. Dr. Johnson. — But formerly it had the Latin accent, viz. on the first syllable. See the example from Ben Jonson. Dr. Johnson's earliest example is junior by nearly half a century to this.

1. Any complicated work in which one part contributes to the motion of another.

But who hath them interpreted, and brought
Lucan's whole frame unto us, and so wrought,
As not the smallest joint or gentlest word
In the great mass or machine there is stirr'd? B. Jonson, Verses pref. to May's Lucan, (1627.)

We are led to conceive this great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity, as to conceive a watch to have been once in its first materials. Burnet.

In a watch's fine machine, . . .
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary power
From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

2. An engine.

In the hollow side
Selected numbers of their soldiers hide;
With inward arms the dire machine they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode. Dryden.

3. Supernatural agency in poems.

The changing of the Trojan fleet into water-nymphs is the most violent machine in the whole Æneid, and has given offence to several criticks. Addison, Spect.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

4. One name for a stage coach.

MACHI'NERY.† n. s. [from machine.]

1. Enginery; complicated workmanship; self-moved engines.

The Arabians were also famous for other machineries of glass. T. Warton.

2. The machinery signifies that part which the deities, angels, or demons, act in a poem.

Dryden — gives an account of his design of writing an epick poem on the actions either of Arthur or the Black Prince, and of the machinery he intended to have used on that occasion. Dr. J. Warton.

MACHI'NING.* adj. [from machine.] Denoting the machinery of a poem.

Of Venus and Juno, Jupiter and Mercury, I say nothing; for they were all machining work. Dryden on Epick Poetry.

MA'CHINIST.† n. s. [machiniste, French; from machina, Latin.] A constructor of engines or machines.

Has the insufficiency of machinists hitherto disgraced the imagery of the poet? Steevens on Shakspeare's Macbeth.

MA'CILENCY. n. s. [from macilent.] Leanness. Dict.

MA'CILENT. adj. [macilentus, Latin.] Lean.

MA'CKEREL.† n. s. [mackereel, Dutch; maquereau, French.]

1. A sea-fish.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whiting and mackerel. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Law ordered that the Sunday should have rest;
And that no nymph her noisy food should sell,
Except it were new milk or mackerel. King, Cookery.

Sooner shall cats disport in water clear,
And speckled mackrels graze the meadows fair,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay, Pastorals.

2. A pander; a pimp. [maquerel, old Fr. Minsheu.] Obsolete.

MACKEREL Gale seems to be, in Dryden's cant, a strong breeze; such, I suppose, as is desired to bring mackerel fresh to market.

They set up every sail;
The wind was fair, but blew a mackrel gale.
Dryden, Hind and Panther.

MACKEREL *Sky. A sky streaked or marked like a mackerel.

Let "water'd" signify a sky that has many high, thin, and small clouds, looking almost like water'd tabby, called in some places a mackeril sky. Hooke, in Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 177

MACRO'LOGY.* n. s. [μακρὸς long, and λόγος, discourse, Gr.] Long and tedious talk without matter. Bullokar, edit. 1656. It is, in rhetorick, a redundant or too copious style.

MA'CROCOSM.† n. s. [macrocosme, French; μακρὸς, and κόσμος.] The whole world, or visible system, in opposition to the microcosm, or world of man.

... hold all this vast macrocosm.
Watson, Quodlibets, (1602,) p. 274.

There is a very rigid and strict analogy and conformity between the macrocosm and the microcosm, the world and man.
Spencer on Prodigies, p. 70.

MACTA'TION.† n. s. [mactatus, Latin.] The act of killing for sacrifice.

Here they call Cain's offering, which is described and allowed to be of the fruits of the ground only, Θυσίαν, a sacrifice, or mactation. Shuckford on the Creation, Pref. p. ciii.

MA'CULA. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A spot.

And lastly, the body of the sun may contract some spots or maculæ greater than usual, and by that means be darkened. Burnet, The. of the Earth.

2. [In physick.] Any spots upon the skin, whether those in fevers or scorbutick habits.

To MA'CULATE.† v. a. [maculo, Latin.] To stain; to spot.

They would not maculate the honour of theyr people with such a reproche. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 80. b.

MA'CULATE.* adj. [from the verb; maculatus, Lat.] Spotted; stained.

Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red.
Moth. Most maculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colours. Shakspeare, Lov. Lab. Lost.

MACULA'TION.† n. s. [maculation, old French.] Stain; spot; taint.

I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

MA'CULE. n. s. [macula, Latin.] A spot; a stain.

MAD.† adj. [ȝemaad, Saxon; matto, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — "It is merely mæꝺ, mæꝺ, (d for t,) the past tense and past participle of the Sax. metan, somniare, to mete, to dream. The verb mete was formerly in common use for dream. 'I fell eftsones a slepe, and sodainly me mette.' Vis. of P. Pl. 'As he satte and woke, his spirit mete that he her saugh.' Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. — The Ital. matto is the same Sax. participle, with the Italian terminating vowel. The decided opinion of Menage and Junius, that matto is derived from the Greek μάταιος, is overruled in my mind, by the consideration of the time when the word matto was first introduced into the Italian language: for the Greek derivatives, in that language, proceed to it through the Latin. And in the Latin, there is nothing which resembles matto." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 341. — Mr. Tooke has here overlooked the true etymon. Serenius derives our word from the Goth. mod, anger; whence our mood for rage, or heat of mind; moody, passionate, angry; moꝺian, Sax. to be angry. Thus also Mr. Haslam, in his Observations on Madness, refers to the Gothick word, without noticing the preceding sophistry of Mr. Tooke; and adds, "it is true that we have now converted the o into a, and write the word mad: but mod was anciently employed:

'Yet sawe I modnesse laghyng in his rage.'
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, fol. 1561, p. 6.

There is so great a resemblance between anger and violent madness, that there is nothing which could more probably have led to the adoption of the term." Observ. &c. 1809, p. 3. The word modnesse, however, which Mr. Haslam has cited, is not the genuine reading of the old poet. The best manuscripts, and correct editions, of Chaucer, read wodeness or woodness, which is the ancient term for madness; and modnesse is most undoubtedly an oversight or errour.]

1. Disordered in the mind; broken in the understanding; distracted; delirious without a fever.

Alack, Sir, he is mad.
—'Tis the time's plague when madmen lead the blind. Shakspeare.

This musick mads me, let it sound no more;
For though it have help'd madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wisemen mad. Shakspeare.

Cupid, of thee the poets sung,
Thy mother from the sea was sprung;
But they were mad to make thee young. Denham.

We must bind our passions in chains, lest like mad-folks they break their locks and bolts, and do all the mischief they can. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

A bear, enrag'd at the stinging of a bee, ran like mad into the bee-garden, and over-turn'd all the hives. L'Estrange.

Madmen ought not to be mad;
But who can help his frenzy? Dryden, Span. Friar.

But some strange graces and odd flights she had,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

2. Expressing disorder of mind.

His gestures fierce
He mark'd, and mad demeanour when alone. Milton, P. L.

3. Over-run with any violent or unreasonable desire: with on, after, of, perhaps better for, before the object of desire.

It is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. Jer. l. 38.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry, or rather the judgement that is fallen upon dramatick writing. Dryden, Pref. to Cleomenes.

The people are not so very mad of acorns, but that they could be content to eat the bread of civil persons. Rymer.

4. Enraged; furious.

They that are mad upon me are sworn together against me. Ps. cii. 8.

Holy writ represents St. Paul as making havock of the church, and persecuting that way unto the death, and being exceedingly mad against them. Decay of Chr. Piety.

To Mad. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make mad; to make furious; to enrage.

O villain! cried out Zelmane, madded with finding an unlooked-for rival. Sidney.

This will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

This mads me, that perhaps ignoble hands
Have overlaid him, for they could not conquer. Dryden.

To Mad.† v. n.

1. To be mad; to be furious.

Many of them seiden, he hath a devel, and maddeth. Wicliffe, St. John, x.

The madding wheels
Of brazen chariots rag'd: dire was the noise
Of conflicts! Milton, P. L.

She, mixing with a throng
Of madding matrons, bears the bride along. Dryden.

2. To be wild.

Here grows melampode every where,
And teribinth good for goates;
The one my madding kids to smere,
The next to heale their throates. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

Mad.† } Made. } n. s. [matha, Goth. maðu, Sax. maade, mad, Dutch.] An earthworm Essex. Ray, and Grose.

Ma'dam.† n. s. [ma dame, French, my dame.] The term of compliment used in address to ladies of every degree. It was anciently spoken as in French, with the accent upon the last syllable. Dr. Johnson. — It was anciently also used for mistress, or lady, without being the term of compliment. And vulgarly it is now so used: as, she is a proud madam.

She became a gloryouse madame of the earth.
Bale, Yet a Course, (1543,) fol. 38. b.

They have alwaies for lucre's sake gloriously garnished their holy mother, the madame of mischiefe.
Bale on the Revel. P. i. sign. A. vi. b.

Certes, madamè, ye have great cause of plaint. Spenser, F. Q.

Madam, once more you look and move a queen!
Philips, Distrest Mother.

Ma'dbrain. } Ma'dbrained. } adj. [mad and brain.] Disordered in the mind; hotheaded.

I gave my hand oppos'd against my heart,
Unto a madbrain Rudesby, full of spleen.
Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

He let fall his book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
This madbrain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Ma'dcap. n. s. [mad and cap; either taking the cap for the head, or alluding to the caps put upon distracted persons by way of distinction.] A madman; a wild hotbrained fellow.

That last is Biron, the merry madcap lord;
Not a word with him but a jest. Shakspeare.

The nimble-footed madcap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daft the world aside,
Aud bid it pass. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To Ma'dden. v. n. [from mad.] To become mad; to act as mad.

The dog-star rages, nay 'tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out;
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land. Pope.

To Ma'dden. v. a. To make mad.

Such mad'ning draughts of beauty,
As for a while overwhelm'd his raptur'd thought. Thomson.

Ma'dder. n. s. [mæddere, Sax.] A plant.

The flower of the madder consists of one single leaf, which is cut into four or five segments, and expanded at the top; the flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit, composed of two juicy berries closely joined together, containing seed for the most part, hollowed like a navel; the leaves are rough, and surround the stalks in whorles. Miller.

Madder is cultivated in vast quantities in Holland: what the Dutch send over for medicinal use is the root, which is only dried; but the greatest quantity is used by the dyers, who have it sent in coarse powder. Hill.

Made, participle preterite of make.

Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest. St. John, ix. 3.

Madefa'ction. n. s. [madefacio, Lat.] The act of making wet.

To all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.

To Ma'defy.† v. a. [madefio, Latin; madefier, Fr. Cotgrave.] To moisten; to make wet. Cockeram.

Made'ira Wine.✱ A rich wine made at the island of Madeira.

A cup of Madeira, and a cold capon's leg.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

MADEMOISE'LLE.✱ n. s. [French; ma damoiselle, an ancient term of compliment to young ladies.] A miss; a young girl.

Courtiers and court ladies with their grooms and mademoiselles. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

I cannot fancy that miss in a boarding-school is more an economist than mademoiselle in a nunnery. Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

Madgeho'wlet.† n. s. [machette, Fr. Cotgrave.] An owl. See Howlet.

Madhe'aded.✱ adj. [mad and head.] Hotheaded; full of fancies.

Out, you madheaded ape!
A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen,
As you are toss'd with. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

MA'DHOUSE. n. s. [mad and house.] A house where madmen are cured or confined.

A fellow in a madhouse being asked how he came there? Why, says he, the mad folks abroad are too many for us, and so they have mastered all the sober people, and cooped them up here. L'Estrange.

MA'DID.* adj. [madidus, Lat.] Wet; moist; dropping. Not used. Bailey.

MA'DLY.† adv. [from mad.]

1. Without understanding; furiously.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.

2. Wildly; in disorder.

Her matted tresses madly spread,
To every sod which wraps the dead
She turns her joyless eyes. Collins, Ode 5.

MA'DMAN. n. s. [mad and man.] A man deprived of his understanding.

They shall be like madmen, sparing none, but still sporting. 2 Esdr. xvi. 71.

He that eagerly pursues any thing, is no better than a madman. L'Estrange.

He who ties a madman's hands, or takes away his sword, loves his person while he disarms his frenzy. South.

MA'DNESS. n. s. [from mad.]

1. Distraction; loss of understanding; perturbation of the faculties.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again: he so buffets himself on the forehead, that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness and civility to this distemper. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

There are degrees of madness as of folly, the disorderly jumbling ideas together, in some more, some less. Locke.

2. Fury; wildness of passion; rage.

The power of God sets bounds to the raging of the sea, and restrains the madness of the people. King Charles.

He rav'd with all the madness of despair,
He roar'd, he beat his breast, and tore his hair. Dryden.

*MADO'NA. } n. s. [Italian; i. e. mia ma donna, MADO'NNA. } my lady.]

1. A name given to pictures of the Virgin Mary.

The Italian painters are noted for drawing the Madonnas by their own wives or mistresses. Rymer, View of Tragedy, p. 157.

2. Term of compliment, like madam. Not in use.

Olivia. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clown. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

MADRI'ER.† n. s. [madrier, Fr. a plank, or piece of timber, whose grain is full of crooked and speckled streaks. Cotgrave. From materiarium, Lat. "L'isle Madera a été dite demesme de materia, parcequ' elle est fertile en bois." Menage.]

1. Madrier, in war, is a thick plank armed with iron plates, having a cavity sufficient to receive the mouth of the petard when charged, with which it is applied against a gate, or other thing intended to be broken down. Bailey.

2. A long plank of broad wood used for supporting the earth in mining, carrying on saps, and the like. Chambers.

MA'DRIGAL. n. s. [madrigal, Spanish and French, from mandra, Latin; whence it was written anciently mandriale, Italian.] A pastoral song; any light airy short song.

A madrigal is a little amorous piece, which contains a certain number of unequal verses, not tied to the scrupulous regularity of a sonnet, or subtilty of an epigram: it consists of one single rank of verses, and in that differs from a canzonet, which consists of several strophes, which return in the same order and number. Bailey.

Waters, by whose falls
Birds sing melodious madrigals. Shakspeare.

Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal. Milton, Comus.

Their tongue is light and trifling in comparison of the English; more proper for sonnets, madrigals, and elegies, than heroick poetry. Dryden.

MA'DWORT. n. s. [mad and wort.] An herb.

MÆRE. adv. It is derived from the Saxon mæꞃ, famous, great, noted: so ælmere is all famous; æthelmere, famous for nobility. Gibson's Camden.

MAESTO'SO. * [Italian.] A musical term, directing the part to be played with grandeur, and consequently slow, but yet with strength and firmness.

To MA'FFLE.† v. n. [maffelen, Teut. balbutire. Kilian. This word was in use nearly two centuries before the time of Ainsworth, whom alone Dr. Johnson cites as authority for it. See also To FAFFLE.] To stammer. The word is still used in the north of England. Huloet, and Cockeram.

[He] so stammered, or maffled in his talke, that he was not able to bring forth a readie word. Barret, Tr. of Sueton. in V. Stammer, Alv. (1580.)

MA'FFLER. n. s. [from the verb.] A stammerer. Ainsworth.

MAGAZI'NE.† n. s. [magazin, French; magazino, Italian; from the Arabick machsan, a treasure.]

1. A storehouse; commonly an arsenal or armoury, or repository of provisions.

If it should appear fit to bestow shipping in those harbours, it shall be very needful that there be a magazine of all necessary provisions and ammunitions. Ralegh, Essays.

Plain heroick magnitude of mind;
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milton, S. A.

Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden, Virg.

Useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace. Pope.

His head was so well stored a magazine, that nothing could be proposed which he was not master of. Locke.

2. Of late [that is, in the year 1737,] this word, Dr. Johnson says, has signified a miscellaneous pamphlet, from a periodical miscellany called the Gentleman's Magazine, and published under the name of Sylvanus Urban, by Edward Cave. This miscellany, which gave rise to the London, the Lady's, and various other Magazines, still continues, as Dr. Johnson said of it in his Life of Cave, to enjoy the favour of the world, and is one of the most successful and lucrative pamphlets which literary history has upon record.

We essayists, who are allowed but one subject at a time, are by no means so fortunate as the writers of magazines, who write upon several. Goldsmith, Ess. 9.

MAGAZI'NER.* n. s. [from magazine.] One who writes an article for a magazine. A bad word.

If a magaziner be dull upon the Spanish war, he soon has us up again with the Ghost in Cock-Lane: if the reader begins to doze upon that, he is quickly roused by an Eastern tale. Goldsmith, Ess. 9.

MAGE.† n. s. [magus, Latin; mage, Fr.] A magician.

The hardy Mayd (with love to frend)
First entering, the dreadful mage there fownd
Deep busied 'bout worke of wondrous end. Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 14.

MA'GGOT. n. s. [magrod, Welsh; millepeda, Latin; maða, Sax.]

1. A small grub, which turns into a fly.

Out of the sides and back of the common caterpillar we have seen creep out small maggots. Ray on Creation.

From the sore although the insect flies,
It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth.

2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy. A low word.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest
In russet yeas, and honest kersy noes. Shakspeare.

To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our breth'ren though by other venters,
Unite them and their different maggots,
As long and short sticks are in faggots. Hudibras.

She pricked his maggot, and touched him in the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbuthnot.

MA'GGOTTINESS. n. s. [from maggotty.] The state of abounding with maggots.

MA'GGOTTY. adj. [from maggot.]

1. Full of maggots.
2. Capricious; whimsical. A low word.

To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggotty unsettled head, is as ridiculous as to think to write strait in a jumbling coach. Norris.

MA'GGOTTYHEADED.* adj. [maggotty and head.] Having a head full of fancies.

He [Aubrey] was a shiftless person, roving and magotie-headed, and sometimes little better than crased. Life of A. Wood, p. 209.

MA'GI.* n. s. pl. [Latin.] Wise men of the East.

Not only the philosophers among the Greeks, but even the magi in the extremest east. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 36.

The inspired magi from the orient came,
Preferr'd my star before their Mithra's flame,
And at my infant feet devoutly fell.
Sandys, Christ's Passion, p. 2.

MA'GIAN.* adj. [from magi.] Denoting the magi of the East.

A future resurrection was the belief of the magian sect so famous all over the East. Peters on Job, (2d ed. 1757,) p. 406.

Cyrus was a Persian, had been brought up in the religion of his country, and was probably addicted to the magian superstition of two independent Beings. Bp. Watson, Apol. for the Bible, p. 160.

MA'GICAL.† adj. [magicus, Lat. magique, Fr.]

1. Acting, or performing by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.

I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected. Shakspeare.

They beheld unveiled the magical shield of your Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms. Dryden.

By the use of a looking-glass, and certain attire made of cambrick, upon her head, she attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Tatler.

2. Applied to persons using enchantment. Not common.

Some of the natives are doubtless magical; and this reason I give for it: Another gentleman and myself one evening sitting under a tree to avoid a storm, (for at that time it thundered and rained excessively,) a negro stood by us trembling, whom we could see now and then lift up his hands and eyes, muttering his black art, as we apprehended, to some hobgoblin; but, when we least suspected, skipped out, and as in a lymphatick rapture unsheathed a long skean or knife, which he brandished about his head seven or eight times, and after muttering as many spells put it up again; then kissed the earth three times: which done, he rose; and upon a sudden the skie cleared, and no more noise affrighted us. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 27.

MA'GICALLY. adv. [from magical.] According to the rites of magick; by enchantment.

In the time of Valens divers curious men, by the falling of a ring magically prepared, judged that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire. Camden.

MAGI'CIAN.† n. s. [magicien, Fr. Cotgrave; and so Chaucer writes the word; magicus, Lat.] One skilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.

What black magician conjures up this fiend
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakspeare, Rich. III.

An old magician, that did keep
The Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where she lists, makes calmest souls to grieve. Waller.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as, whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician or a magician. Locke.

MA'GICK.† n. s. [magia, Latin; magie, French; which language has the adjective magique, as in the old dictionary of Cotgrave.]

1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits: it was supposed that both good and bad spirits were subject to magick; yet magick was in general held unlawful; sorcery; enchantment.

She once being looft,
The noble ruin of her magick, Antony,
Claps on his sea-wing. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

What charm, what magick, can over-rule the force of all these motives. Rogers.

2. The secret operations of natural powers.

The writers of natural magick attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse immaterial virtue into the part severed. Bacon.

MA'GICK.† adj. [magicus, Lat. magique, Fr.]

1. Acting or doing by powers superiour to the known power of nature; enchanted; necromantick.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magick slights
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Like castles built by magick art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear. Granville.

2. Done or produced by magick.

And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake
Till all thy magick structures rear'd so high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton, Comus.

MAGISTE'RIAL.† adj. [magisterial, old French; from magister, Latin.]

1. Such as suits a master.

Such a government is paternal, not magisterial. King Charles.

He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uses a magisterial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.

2. Lofty; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotick.

We are not magisterial in opinions, nor, dictator-like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words and magisterial looks, for current payment. L'Estrange.

Those men are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South.

3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magistery.

Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt. Grew, Musæum.

MAGISTE'RIALLY. adv. [from magisterial.] Arrogantly; with an air of authority.

A [illegible] mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Over their pots and pipes, they claim and engross all wholly to themselves, magisterially censuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new modelling the world. South.

MAGISTE'RIALNESS.† n. s. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.

Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion and speculation, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith.
Gov. of the Tongue, p. 188.

He chargeth him with too much precipitancy and magisterialness in judging. Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull, p. 225.

MA'GISTERY. n. s. [magisterium, Latin.]

Magistery is a term made use of by chymists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c. and sometimes resins and resinous substances; as those of jalap, scamony, &c. but the most genuine acceptation is to express that preparation of any body wherein the whole, or most part is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.

Paracelsus extracteth the magistery of wine, exposing it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncongealed in the centre. Brown.

The magistery of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

MA'GISTRACY. n. s. [magistratus, Latin.] Office or dignity of a magistrate.

You share the world, her magistracies, priesthoods,
Wealth, and felicity, amongst you, friends. B. Jonson.

He had no other intention but to dissuade men from magistracy, or undertaking the publick offices of state. Browne.

Some have disputed even against magistracy itself.
Atterbury.

Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government.
Richardson, Clarissa.

MA'GISTRAL.* adj. [magistral, French; magistralis, low Lat.]

Authoritative; suiting a magistrate or master: magisterial. Cotgrave.

The whole race or corporation of sheep have sent four ambassadors to this court:—whereupon a great and goodly magistral ram of Lincolnshire, in an articulate bleating voice, uttered these words. Transl. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 99.

Masterly; artificial; skilful; cunning. This sense is also given by Cotgrave.

Opiates, juleps, apozems,
Magistral syrups. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

MA'GISTRAL.* n. s. A sovereign medicine: an artificial preparation. See the second sense of MAGISTRAL. Not in use.

I find a vast chaos of medicines, a confusion of receipts and magistrals, amongst writers, appropriated to this disease.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 391.

A cure and magistral against melancholy beyond the syrup.
Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 106.

MAGISTRA'LITY.* n. s. [from magistral.] Despotick authority in opinions.

Those who seek truths, and not magistrality.
Bacon on Learning.

MA'GISTRALLY.† adv. [from magistral.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.

What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a license to controul so magistrally. Bp. Bramhall, against Hobbes.

MA'GISTRATE.† n. s. [magistrat, old French; magistratus, Latin.] A man publickly invested with authority; a governour; an executioner of the laws.

They choose their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects. Decay of Chr. Piety.

MAGISTRA'TICK.* adj. [from magistrate.] Having the authority of a magistrate.

Both civil and religious acts study to conciliate to themselves a majesty, and reverence, by habits and ornaments;—by comely robes and costly vests; which, though they are not of the internal and essential glory which is in magistratick or ecclesiastick power and order, (which are both divine,) yet are so far not only convenient, but almost necessary, as they help to keep both laws and religion from contempt, and from that vulgar insolence to which seditious and atheistical humours are subject. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 69.

MA'GNA CHA'RTA.* n. s. [Latin.] The great charter of liberties granted to the people of England in the ninth year of Henry the third, and confirmed by Edward the first.

The walls, instead of being adorned with pictures and maps, were hung with many acts of parliament written in golden letters. At the upper end of the hall was the Magna Charta, with the Act of Uniformity on the right hand, and the Act of Toleration on the left. Addison, Spect. No. 3.

MAGNA'LITY. n. s. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.

Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown.

MAGNANI'MITY. n. s. [magnanimité, French; magnanimitas, Latin.] Greatness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul.

With deadly hue, and armed corse did lye,
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity. Spenser, F. Q.

Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weighed, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker.

They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears,
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom were propos'd. Milton, S. A.

Exploding many things under the name of trifles, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.

MAGNA'NIMOUS. adj. [magnanimus, Lat.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment; brave.

To give a kingdom hath been thought
Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to assume. Milton, P. R.
In strength
All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage, and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton, S. A.

Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work. Grew, Cosmol.

MAGNA'NIMOUSLY. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.

A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skilfully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war. Milton on Education.

MA'GNES.* See MAGNET.

MAGNE'SIA.* n. s. [magnesie, French.] A white alcaline earth, used in medicine, gently purgative.

MA'GNET.† n. s. [magnes, Latin. Spenser calls it the magnes-stone; and it is so given in Sherwood's dictionary, 1632. The Lat. magnes is thought to be from the city of Magnesia in [illegible] where the stone is said to have been first [illegible].] The loadstone; the stone that attracts iron.

Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss,
The larger loadstone that, the nearer this. Dryden.

It may be reasonable to ask, Whether obeying the magnet be essential to iron? Locke.

MAGNE'TICAL. }
MAGNE'TICK. } adj. [from magnet.]

1. Relating to the magnet.

Review this whole magnetick scheme. Blackmore.

Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is so rare as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetick effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton, Opticks.

2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.

The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, silver, lead, glass, water. Newton, Opticks.

3. Attractive; having the power to draw things distant.

The moon is magnetical of heat, as the sun is of cold and moisture. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

She should all parts to reunion bow;
She, that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Donne.

They, as they move tow'rds his all-chearing lamp,
Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
By his magnetick beam. Milton, P. L.

4. Magnetick is once used by Milton for magnet.

Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manliest, resolutest breast,
As the magnetick hardest iron draws. Milton, P. R.

MAGNE'TICALLY.* adv. [from magnetical.] By the power of attraction.

Many green wounds — magnetically cured.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 94.

MAGNE'TICALNESS.* } n. s. [from magnetical.] Quality of being magnetick, or attractive.
MAGNE'TICKNESS. }

The *magneticknes*s of their external success.
Waterhous, Comm. on Fortescu, (1663,) p. 187.

It related not to the instances of the magneticalness of lightning. Hist. of the Royal Soc. iv. 253.

MA'GNETISM.† n. s. [from magnet; magnetism, modern French.]

1. The tendency of the iron towards the magnet, and the power of the magnet to produce that tendency. Reid.

Very likely that gravity proceeds from a kind of magnetism, and attractive virtue in the earth. Glanville, Pre-exist. p. 130.

Let them tell us then what is the chain, the cement, the magnetism, what they will call it, the invisible tie of that union, whereby matter and an incorporeal mind, things that have no similitude nor alliance to each other, can so sympathize by a mutual league of motion and sensation! No, they will not pretend to that. Bentley, Serm. ix.

Many other magnetisms, and the like attractions through all the creatures of nature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Power of attraction.

By the magnetism of interest our affections are irresistibly attracted. Glanville, Scepsis.

MA'GNIFIABLE. adj. [from magnify.] Worthy to be extolled or praised. Unusual.

Number, though wonderful in itself, and sufficiently magnifiable from its demonstrable affection, hath yet received adjections from the multiplying conceits of men. Brown.

MAGNI'FICAL.† } adj. [magnificus, Latin.] Illustrious; grand; great; noble. Proper, but little used.
MAGNI'FICK. }

They hoped that [illegible] the king, or of the nobles, a more mag[illegible] to receive the multitude of that university, should have ___ erected.
Fulke, Answ. to Frarine, (1580,) p. 42.

The house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and glory throughout all countries.
1 Chron. xxii. 5.

That magnifick feast which Ahasuerus made for an hundred and eighty days to the nobles and princes of his empire.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 300.

In this magnifick state his progress he
Through his usurp'd world did pretend to make.
Beaumont, Psyche, ix. 168.

Thrones, dominations, princedoms, virtues, pow'rs!
If these magnifick titles yet remain,
Not merely titular. Milton, P. L.

O parent! these are thy magnifick deeds;
Thy trophies! Milton, P. L.

To MAGNI'FICATE.* v. a. [magnifico, Lat.] To praise extremely; to commend highly. Not in use.

I cannot with swoln lines magnificate
Mine owne poor worth.
Marston, Scourge of Vill. Pr. B. 2. (1599.)

[He] that with oath
Magnificates his merit. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

MAGNI'FICENCE. n. s. [magnificentia, Latin.] Grandeur of appearance; splendour.

This desert soil
Wants not her hidden lustre, gems, and gold,
Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence. Milton, P. L.

Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence
Equall'd in all her glories to enshrine
Belus or Serapis, their gods; or seat
Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. Milton, P. L.

One may observe more splendour and magnificence in particular person's houses in Genoa, than in those that belong to the publick. Addison on Italy.

MAGNI'FICENT. adj. [magnificus, Lat.]

1. Grand in appearance; splendid; pompous.

Man he made, and for him built
Magnificent this world. Milton, P. L.

It is suitable to the magnificent harmony of the universe, that the species of creatures should, by gentle degrees, ascend upward from us toward his perfection, as we see they gradually descend from us downwards. Locke.

Immortal glories in my mind revive,
When Rome's exalted beauties I descry,
Magnificent in piles of ruin lie. Addison.

2. Fond of splendour; setting greatness to shew.

If he were magnificent, he spent with an aspiring intent: if he spared, he heaped with an aspiring intent. Sidney.

MAGNI'FICENTLY. adv. [from magnificent.] Pompously; splendidly.

Beauty a monarch is,
Which kingly power magnificently proves,
By crowds of slaves and peopled empire's loves. Dryden.

We can never conceive too highly of God; so neither too magnificently of nature, his handy-work. Grew, Cosmol.

MAGNI'FICO.† n. s. [Italian.] A grandee of Venice.

The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all proceeded with him. Shakspeare.

All but the old magnifico Volpone. B. Jonson, Fox.

If the Venetians have their senate and magnificoes, they [the bees] have the same. Partheneia Sacra, (1633,) p. 71.

MA'GNIFIER.† n. s. [from magnify.]

1. One that encreases, or enlarges.

A merry heart is one of the three Salernitan doctors, Dr. Merriman, Dr. Diet, and Dr. Quiet, which cures all diseases; [and] is a great magnifier of honest mirth.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 297.

MA'GNITUDE. n. s. [magnitudo, Lat.]

1. Greatness; grandeur.

He with plain heroick magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milton, S. A.

2. Comparative bulk.

This tree hath no extraordinary magnitude, touching the trunk or stem; it is hard to find any one bigger than the rest.
Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Never repose so much upon any man's single counsel, fidelity and discretion, in managing affairs of the first magnitude, that is, matters of religion and justice, as to create in yourself, or others, a diffidence of your own judgement. King Charles.

When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heaven and earth consisting; and compute
Their magnitudes; this earth a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milton, P. L.

Convince the world that you're devout and true;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden, Juv.

Conceive these particles of bodies to be so disposed amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all; and that these particles may be composed of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton, Opticks.

MA'GPIE.† n. s. [from pie, pica, Latin, and mag, contracted from Margaret, as phil is used to a sparrow, and poll to a parrot. Dr. Johnson.— Mr. Steevens calls it a contraction of the old French magot; and our word was also magot-pie, as in the example from Shakspeare's Macbeth, where Dr. Johnson has given it magpies instead of magot-pies. Minsheu and Cotgrave call this bird a magatapie. Yet it is most likely from mag, a colloquial expression in some places for chatter; especially as the bird is also known by the vulgar name of chatter-pie.] A bird sometimes taught to talk.

Augurs, and understood relations, have
By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth
The secret'st man of blood. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Dissimulation is expressed by a lady wearing a vizard of two faces, in her right-hand a magpie, which Spenser described looking through a lattice. Peacham on Drawing.

So have I seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpie hight,
Majestically stalk;
A stately, worthless animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All flutter, pride, and talk. Swift.

MAHO'MEDAN.*
MAHO'METAN.
MAHO'METIST.
MAHU'METAN.
n. s. A mussulman; a professor of the religion of Mahomet. Our old lexicography writes the word Mahumetan. The most usual, though not correct, way of writing it, is Mahometan. "I call him every where Mahomet, although Mohammed be the alone true and proper pronunciation of the name." Prideaux's Life of Mahomet, Pref.

The subjection of Papists to their judges doth no more prove their religion to be true, than the obedience of Mahometists to their superiours both in cases of religion, and of the commonwealth, doth justify their sect to be of the religion of God.
Fulke, Retentive, &c. (1580,) p. 84.

It is the custom of the Mahometans, if they see any printed or written paper upon the ground, to take it up, and lay it aside carefully, as not knowing but it may contain some piece of their alcoran. Addison, Spect. No. 85.

The Mahomedans are enthusiasts. Guthrie, of Egypt.

MAHO'METAN.* adj. Denoting the followers of the religion of Mahomet.

My purpose was to give an account first of the controversies, which miserably divided those Eastern churches; and then of that grievous calamity and ruin, which happened to them thereupon, through that deluge of Mahometan tyranny and delusion which overwhelmed all those provinces in which they were planted. Prideaux, Life of Mahomet, Pref. p. xv.

MAHO'METANISM.* MAHO'METISM. MAHO'METRY. MAHU'METISM. } n. s. The religion of Mahometans.

The standers by, to joy his initiation into Mahometry, salute him by the name of mussulman. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 307.

Pity, that so noble a place, and so populous, should continue so long uncivilized and corrupted by Mahometism and Gentilism; which, as with an impure breath, has infected the whole island. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 22.

Who now sustains a Persian storm:
There hell (that made it) suffers schism:
This war, forsooth, was to reform
Mahumetism. Fanshaw, Poems, (1676,) p. 210.

That abominable imposture of Mahometism. Prideaux, Life of Mahomet, Pref. p. 9.

He thought popery and mahometanism were equally dangerous to Christianity. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 170.

To MAHO'METANIZE.* v. a. [from mahometan.] To render conformable to any mode or custom of the Mahometans.

From these differential marks, I am inclined to suspect that our old structures have been new-named, and mahometanised without sufficient proof of their Arabic origin. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

MA'HOUND.* n. s. A contemptuous name of old for Mahomet; sometimes also used by our ancestors for the devil, and sometimes for any savage character. It is said to have been common in the religious interludes. See TERMAGANT.

Like Mahound in a play,
No man dare him withsay. Skelton, Poems, p. 158.

When judgement in causes of religion is committed to soche monstruous mahoundes, what godlynesse can folowe? Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 5.

He gan to curse and sweare,
And vow by Mahoune that he should be slaine. Spenser, F. Q.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakspeare.

I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden's eyes. Shakspeare.

She employed the residue of her life to repairing of highways, building of bridges, and endowing of maidens. Carew.

Your deluded wife had been a maid;
Down on the bridal bed a maid she lay,
A maid she rose at the approaching day. Dryden, Juv.

Let me die, she said,
Rather than lose the spotless name of maid. Dryden.

2. A woman servant.

My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Shakspeare.

Old Tancred visited his daughter's bow'r;
Her cheek, for such his custom was, he kiss'd,
Then bless'd her kneeling, and her maids dismiss'd. Dryden.

Her closet and the gods share all her time,
Except when, only by some maids attended,
She seeks some shady solitary grove. Rowe.

A thousand maidens ply the purple loom,
To weave the bed, and deck the regal room. Prior.

3. Female. [mæðen-cild, Sax.]

To MA'IDEN.* v. n. To speak or act demurely like a maiden.

The courteous citizen bade me to his feast,
With hollow words, and overly request:
" Come, will ye dine with me this holy day?"
I yielded, though he hop'd I would say nay:
For had I mayden'd it, as many use,
Loath for to grant, but loather to refuse;
" Alack, sir, I were loath; another day, —
" I should but trouble you, — pardon me, if you may;" —
No pardon should I need: for, to depart
He gives me leave, and thanks too, in his heart!
Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 3.

MA'IDENHAIR. n. s. [maiden and hair; adiantum.] This plant is a native of the southern parts of France and in the Mediterranean, where it grows on rocks, and old ruins, from whence it is brought for medicinal use.

I love thee. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

MAIDMA'RIAN.† n. s. [puer ludius, Latin.] A kind of dance, so called from a buffoon dressed like a man, who played tricks to the populace. Dr. Johnson. — Maid Marian was originally a woman, the queen of the May; one of the company of our old Morris dancers; but, as Mr. Steevens has observed, after the morris degenerated into a piece of coarse buffoonery, and Maid Marian was personated by a strumpet or clown, this once elegant queen obtained the name of Malkin, or Maukin. See MALKIN.

So the hobbihorse, and so the maid-marian was attired in colours. Old Meg of Herefordshire for a Mayd-Marian, 1609, B. 4. b

For womanhood, maid-marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

Great was the number of the preachers, [during Cromwell's usurpation;] for a lying spirit made both some lords, and their coachmen; some mechanicks and their apprentices; yea, some mistresses, and their maid-maukins, all gifted in that kind: which were not able to discern and distinguish between faith and faction, reformation and rebellion, conscience and conspiracy, holiness and hypocrisy. Dr. Griffith, Samaritan revived, (1660,) p. 23.

A set of morrice-dancers danced a maidmarian with a tabor and pipe. Temple.

3. Dignity; elevation of manner.

The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
The next in majesty. Dryden.

4. The title of kings and queens. The use of majesty has been ascribed to Gondemar king of the Visigoths, and to the kings of Lorraine in the seventh century; but in France is not traceable before the year 1360; and, according to Camden, "majesty came hither in the time of king Henry the eighth, as sacred majesty lately in our memory."

See Douce's Illustr. of Shakspeare, ii. 12. Selden has adduced an instance of our word so early as in the reign of Henry the second.

Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than what your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I have a garden opens to the sea,
From whence I can your majesty convey
To some nigh friend. Waller.

MA'LKIN.† n. s. [from mal, of Mary, and kin, the diminutive termination. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson's etymology is, I apprehend, erroneous. The kitchen-wench very naturally takes her name from this word, a scullion; another of her titles is in like manner derived from escouillon, the French term for the utensil called a malkin. Malone. — It may perhaps be derived from the Sax. mal, a spot, and the termination kin. G. Chalmers.] A kind of mop made of clouts for sweeping ovens; thence a frightful figure of clouts dressed up; thence a dirty wench. See Etym. See MARIAN.

The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him. Shakspeare, Coriol.
None would look on her,
But cast their gazes on Marina's face;
Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a malkin.
Shakspeare, Pericles.

MALLEABI'LITY. n. s. [from malleable.] Quality of enduring the hammer; quality of spreading under the hammer.

Supposing the nominal essence of gold to be a body of such a peculiar colour and weight, with the malleability and fusibility, the real essence is that constitution on which these qualities and their union depend. Locke.

MA'LLEABLE. adj. [malleable, French; from malleus, Latin, a hammer.] Capable of being spread by beating: this is a quality possessed in a most eminent degree by gold, it being more ductile than any other metal; and is opposite to friability or brittleness. Quincy.

Make it more strong for falls, though it come not to the degree to be malleable. Bacon.

The beaten soldier proves most manful,
That like his sword endures the anvil;
And justly's held more formidable,
The more his valour's malleable. Hudibras.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pression, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastick, returning to its figure, with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts; if the parts slide upon one another, the body is malleable or soft. Newton, Opticks.

MA'LLEABLENESS. n. s. [from malleable.] Quality of enduring the hammer; malleability; ductility.

The bodies of most use that are sought for out of the earth are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

To MA'LLEATE. v. a. [from malleus, Lat.] To hammer; to forge or shape by the hammer.

He first found out the art of melting and malleating metals, and making them useful for tools. Derham.

With him he brought a jubbe of Malvesie,
And eke another ful of fine Vernage. Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.
Metheglin, wort, and malmsey. Shakspeare.

MALT.† n. s. [mealt, Saxon; mout, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — It is nothing, says Mr. H. Tooke, "but the French word mouillé, the past participle of the verb mouiller, to wet or moisten: mouillé, anglicised, becoming mouilled, mouill'd, mould; then moult, mault, malt: wetting or moistening of the grain is the first and necessary part of the process in making what we therefore term malt." Diversions of Purley, ii. 70. — There is much ingenuity in this deduction, which is applied also to mould, evidently with greater force; for that word was written mowle, and moule; thus marking precisely, as it were, its origin. See MOULD, and To MOULD. But the Sax. mealt, or malt, as well as the Teut. malt, seem to point out the origin of the present word; and these may have been easily formed from the Greek μαλάττω, to soften, to make soft.] Grain steeped in water and fermented, then dried on a kiln.

Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Mam. } n. s. [mamma, Latin: this word is said to
Mamma'. } be found for the compellation of mother in all languages: and is therefore supposed to be the first syllables that a child pronounces.] The fond word for mother.

Poor Cupid sobbing scarce could speak;
Indeed, mamma, I did not know ye;
Alas! how easy my mistake?
I took you for your likeness Cloe. Prior.

Little masters and misses are great impediments to servants; the remedy is to bribe them, that they may not tell tales to papa and mamma. Swift, Rules to Servants.

Ma'maluke.* n. s. [mamaluc, Fr. mamalucco, Ital. from the Arab. mamluc, subject, under the command of another.] One of those, who were originally slaves or mercenary soldiers, and usurped the sovereignty of Egypt in the thirteenth century, and maintained their usurpation till the beginning of the sixteenth: they are said to have been originally Circassian or Mingrelian slaves; and have, in modern times, been called the military force of Egypt. They have both fought against that enemy of the world's happiness, Napoleon Buonaparte; and they have also joined the French.

He [Saladine] sent to the Circassians by the lake of Meotis, near Taurica Chersonesus, and thence brought many slaves of able and active bodies. — These slaves he trained up in military discipline, most of them being Christians, once baptized; but afterwards, untaught Christ, they learned Mahomet; and so became the worse foes to religion for once being her friends. These proved excellent soldiers and special horsemen, and are called mammalukes. Fuller, Holy War, p. 97.

'Tis sung, there is a valiant mamaluke
In foreign land. Hudibras, i. 1.

The surfeited priest scruples not to paw and mammock the sacramental bread. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

MA'MMON.† n. s. [Syriack.] Riches.

If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?
St. Luke, xvi. 11.

Ma'mmonist.* n. s. [from mammon.] A worldly-minded person.

Those base submissions that the covetous mammonist, or cowardly trembler, drudges under. Hammond, Works, iv. 479.

Let him come to the converted mammonist, and ask him which he finds the better treasury.
Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 105.

I am none of those mammonists who adore white and red earth, and make their prince's picture their idol that way.
Howell, Lett. i. vi. 60.

MAN.† n. s. [man, mon, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — M. Goth. manna; Icel. man, madr; from the Goth. magan, to be able. "Ab antiquo mannen, Sueth. manna. cujus vestigia supersunt in ubermannen, oefwermanna, vincere." Wachter, and Serenius. — "Man (inquit Becan.) fit à men, id est, ago, duco; præcipuum enim viri est officium ut se et cætera omnia animalia ducat et gubernet." Kilian. Thus a connexion between the Greek μένος, strength, and man; and between the Latin manus, the hand, and man; has been supposed: a power of guiding, directing, restraining, or confining, i. e. strength and skill, being in man. See Wachter, in V. Man. And Whiter's Etym. Magn. p. 125. 386.]

1. Human being.

The king is but a man as I am; the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shews to him as it doth to me, all his senses have but human conditions. Shakspeare.

All the west bank of Nilus is possessed by an idolatrous, man-eating nation. Brerewood on Languages.

A creature of a more exalted kind
Was wanted yet, and then was man design'd,
Conscious of thought. Dryden, Ov.

Nature in man capacious souls hath wrought,
And given them voice expressive of their thought;
In man the God descends, and joys to find
The narrow image of his greater mind. Creech, Manilius.

A combination of the ideas of a certain figure, with the powers of motion, and reasoning joined to substance, make the ordinary idea of a man. Locke.

On human actions reason though you can,
It may be reason, but it is not man. Pope, Epist.

2. Not a woman.

Bring forth men children only!
For thy undaunted metal should compose
Nothing but males. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I had not so much of man in me,
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Every man child shall be circumcised. Gen. xvii. 10.

Ceneus, a woman once, and once a man,
But ending in the sex she first began. Dryden, Æn.

A long time since the custom began, among people of quality, to keep men cooks of the French nation. Swift.

3. Not a boy.

The nurse's legends are for truths receiv'd,
And the man dreams but what the boy believ'd. Dryden.

4. A servant; an attendant; a dependant.

Now thanked be the great god Pan,
Which thus preserves my loved life,
Thanked be I that keep a man,
Who ended hath this bloody strife:
For if my man must praises have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

My brother's servants
Were then my fellows, now they are my men. Shakspeare.

Such gentlemen as are his majesty's own sworn servants should be preferred to the charge of his majesty's ships; choice being made of men of valour and capacity rather than to employ other men's men. Ralegh, Ess.

I and my man will presently go ride
Far as the Cornish mount. Cowley.

5. A word of familiar address, bordering on contempt.

You may partake of any thing that we say:
We speak no treason, man. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

6. It is used in a loose signification like the French on, one, any one.

This same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me, nor a man cannot make him laugh. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A man in an instant may discover the assertion to be impossible. More, Divine Dial.

He is a good-natured man, and will give as much as a man would desire. Stillingfleet.

By ten thousand of them a man shall not be able to advance one step in knowledge. Tillotson, Serm.

Our thoughts will not be directed what objects to pursue, nor be taken off from those they have once fixed on; but run away with a man, in pursuit of those ideas they have in view. Locke.

A man would expect to find some antiquities; but all they have to show of this nature is an old rostrum of a Roman ship. Addison.

A man might make a pretty landscape of his own plantation. Addison.

7. One of uncommon qualifications.

Manners maketh man. William of Wykeham.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more is none.
— What beast was't then
That made you break this enterprise to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would
Be so much more the man. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He tript me behind, being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Will reckons he should not have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, and knocked down constables, when he was a young fellow. Addison, Spect.

8. A human being qualified in any particular manner.

Thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth. 1 Sam. xvii. 33.

9. Individual.

In matters of equity between man and man, our Saviour has taught us to put my neighbour in the place of myself, and myself in the place of my neighbour. Watts, Logick.

10. Not a beast.

Thy face, bright Centaur, autumn's heats retain,
The softer season suiting to the man. Creech, Manilius.

11. Wealthy or independant person: to this sense some refer the following passage of Shakspeare, others to the sense next foregoing.

There would this monster make a man; any strange beast there makes a man. Shakspeare, Tempest.

What poor man would not carry a great burthen of gold to be made a man for ever. Tillotson.

12. When a person is not in his senses, we say, he is not his own man. Ainsworth.

13. A movable piece at chess or draughts.

14. MAN of war. A ship of war.

A Flemish man of war lighted upon them, and overmastered them. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

MAN-MIDWIFE.* n. s. A strange compound, denoting the man who discharges the office of a midwife. It is now frequently converted into the finical accoucheur. Bishop Hall may be considered as giving rise, in some degree, to the present expression. Addison makes a man an housewife. See the third sense of HOUSEWIFE.

This man was not their midwife.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 160.

She took it in her head to change her sex. This was soon done by the help of a sword and a pair of breeches. I have reason to believe that her first design was to turn man-midwife. Tatler, No. 226.

To MAN.† v. a. [from the noun. Sax. mannian.]

1. To furnish with men.

Your ships are not well mann'd;
Your mariners are muleteers, or reapers. Shakspeare.

There stands the castle by yond tuft of trees,
Mann'd with three hundred men. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

A navy, to secure the seas, is mann'd;
And forces sent. Daniel, Civ. War.

It hath been agreed, that either of them should send certain ships to sea well manned, and apparelled to fight. Hayward.

Their ships go as long voyages as any, and are for their burdens as well manned. Ralegh, Ess.

He had manned it with a great number of tall soldiers, more than for the proportion of the castle. Bacon.

They man their boats, and all their young men arm. Waller.

The Venetians could set out thirty men of war, a hundred gallies, and ten galeases; though I cannot conceive how they could man a fleet of half the number. Addison on Italy.

Timoleon forced the Carthaginians out, though they had manned out a fleet of two hundred men of war. Arbuthnot.

2. To guard with men.

See, how the surly Warwick mans the wall. Shakspeare.

The summons take of the same trumpet's call,
To sally from one port, or man one publick wall. Tate.

3. To fortify; to strengthen. Dr. Johnson, under this sense, cites a passage from Milton, where the word is move, not man.

Theodosius having manned his soul with proper reflexions, exerted himself in the best manner he could, to animate his penitent. Addison, Spect.

4. To tame a hawk.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her. Shakspeare.

5. To attend; to serve; to wait on as a man or servant.

Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels: I was never manned with agate till now. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

They distil their husband's land
In decoctions, and are mann'd
With ten empiricks in their chamber,
Lying for the spirit of amber. B. Jonson, Forest.

6. To direct in hostility; to point; to aim. Obsolete.

Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
And he retires. Shakspeare, Othello.

MA'NACLE.† n. s. [manicle, old French; manicæ, from manus, Latin. Our own word was thus formerly oftener manicle than manacle.] Chain for the hands; shackles.

For my sake wear this glove;
It is a manacle of love. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet, and like manacles on the right-hand Ecclus. xxi. 19.

Nothing but gyves and manicles in the freest sins. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 22.

The law good men count their ornament and protection; others, their manacles and oppression. King Charles.

Those manicles put on him were exceedingly inconvenient for a grinder in a mill. Smith on Old Age, p. 115.

To MA'NACLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To chain the hands; to shackle.

We'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shakspeare.
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together. Shakspeare.

Is it thus you use this monarch, to manacle and shackle him hand and foot? Arbuthnot and Pope.

To MA'NAGE.† v. a. [menager, French; from manus, the hand, Latin.]

1. To conduct; to carry on.

The fathers had managed the charge of idolatry against the heathens. Stillingfleet.

Let her at least the vocal brass inspire,
And tell the nations in no vulgar strain,
What wars I manage, and what wreaths I gain. Prior.

2. To train a horse to graceful action.

He rode up and down gallantly mounted, managing his horse, and charging and discharging his lance. Knolles.

They vault from hunters to the manag'd steed. Young.

3. To govern; to make tractable.

Let us stick to our point, and we will manage Bull I'll warrant you. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

4. To wield; to move or use easily.

Long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be easily managed. Newton.

5. To husband; to make the object of caution.

There is no more to manage! If I fall,
It shall be like myself; a setting sun
Should leave a tract of glory in the skies. Dryden.
The less he had to lose, the less he car'd,
To manage loathsome life, when love was the reward. Dryden.

6. To treat with caution or decency: this is a phrase merely Gallick; not to be imitated. Dr. Johnson. — Bishop Hurd has disregarded Dr. Johnson's censure of this usage.

Notwithstanding it was so much his interest to manage his protestant subjects in the country, he made over his principality to France. Addison on Italy.

To the Hollanders she [Queen Elizabeth] could talk big; and it was not her humour to manage those over whom she had gained an ascendant. Hurd, Dial. iv. On the Gold. Age of Q. Eliz.

To MA'NAGE. v. n. To superintend affairs; to transact.

Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant
What their unerring wisdom sees thee want. Dryden.

MA'NAGE. n. s. [mesnage, menage, French.]

1. Conduct; administration.

To him put
The manage of my state. Shakspeare, Tempest.

This might have been prevented,
With very easy arguments of love,
Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shakspeare, K. John.
For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere further leisure yield them further means. Shakspeare.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet. Bacon, Ess.

The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South.

2. Use; instrumentality.

To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped; for quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.

3. Government of a horse.

In thy slumbers
I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,
Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed. Shakspeare.

The horse you must draw in his career with his manage and turn, doing the curvetto. Peacham.

4. Discipline; governance.

Whenever we take a strong biass, it is not out of a moral incapacity to do better, but for want of a careful manage and discipline to set us right at first. L'Estrange.

MA'NAGEABLE.† adj. [from manage.]

1. Easy in the use; not difficult to be wielded or moved.

The conditions of weapons and their improvement are, that they may serve in all weathers; and that the carriage may be light and manageable. Bacon, Ess.

Very long tubes are, by reason of their length, apt to bend, and shake by bending so as to cause a continual trembling in the objects, whereas by contrivance the glasses are readily manageable. Newton, Opticks.

2. Governable; tractable.

Not to forbid the ingenuous operations of human art and invention, — so far as they are manageable within the limits of moral intentions and religious ends. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 76.

The courage of a Christian is truly rational and manly, founded in religion and true principles of reason; and so is a thousand times more manageable and useful, than that which ariseth only out of temper and complexion. Scott's Works, (ed. 1718,) ii. 5.

Many of us seem to borrow our passions from bears, tigers, and lions, rather than from more manageable animals. Skelton, Deism Revealed, Dial. viii.

MA'NAGEABLENESS. n. s. [from manageable.]

1. Accommodation to easy use.

This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed. Boyle.

2. Tractableness; easiness to be governed.

MA'NAGEMENT. n. s. [menagement, French.]

1. Conduct; administration.

An ill argument introduced with deference, will procure more credit than the profoundest science with a rough, insolent, and noisy management. Locke on Education.

The wrong management of the earl of Godolphin was the only cause of the union. Swift.

2. Prudence; cunning practice.

Mark with what management their tribes divide;
Some stick to you, and some to t'other side. Dryden.

3. Practice; transaction; dealing.

He had great managements with ecclesiasticks in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Addison on Italy.

MA'NAGER. n. s. [from manage.]

1. One who has the conduct or direction of any thing.

A skilful manager of the rabble, so long as they have but ears to hear, needs never enquire whether they have any understanding. South.

The manager opens his sluice every night, and distributes the water into the town. Addison.

An artful manager, that crept between
His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen. Pope.

2. A man of frugality; a good husband.

A prince of great aspiring thoughts: in the main, a manager of his treasure, and yet bountiful, from his own motion, wherever he discerns merit. Temple.

The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

MA'NAGERY. n. s. [managerie, French.]

1. Conduct; direction; administration.

They who most exactly describe that battle, give so ill an account of any conduct or discretion in the managery of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarendon.

2. Husbandry; frugality.

The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns are conferred gratis. Decay of Chr. Piety.

3. Manner of using.

No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloody skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready managery of their weapons. Decay of Chr. Piety.

MA'NAKIN.* See MANIKIN.

MANA'TION. n. s. [manatio, Lat.] The act of issuing from something else.

MANCHE. n. s. [French.] A sleeve.

MA'NCHET.† n. s. [michet, Fr. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — More probably a corruption of main cheat, i. e. principal kind of cheat. Archæol. vol. 15. p. 10. See CHEAT-BREAD.] A small loaf of fine bread.

Take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds. Bacon.

I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. More, Divine, Dial.

A paste made only of crums of bread, which should be of pure fine manchet. Walton, Angler.

MANCHINE'EL tree. n. s. [mancanilla, Lat.]

The manchineel tree is a native of the West Indies, and grows to the size of an oak: its wood is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark must be burnt out before the work is begun; for it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should flie into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippen; many Europeans have suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it: the leaves abound with juice of the same nature; cattle never shelter themselves, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade; yet goats eat this fruit without injury. Miller.

To MA'NCIPATE.† v. a. [mancipo, Latin; mancipér, old Fr.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.

They voluntary mancipate and sell themselves.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 150.

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the meteors, which are in themselves more unstable, and less mancipated to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

MANCIPA'TION.† n. s. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation. Cockeram.

They [the Romans] fortified themselves against all incursions, — and prevailed against all mankind to their mancipation under them. Waterhous, Comm. on Fortescu, p. 187.

MA'NCIPLE.† n. s. [manceps, Latin; which signified particularly the superintendant of a public bakehouse, and from thence a baker in general, Tyrwhitt. And see Du Cange in V. MANCEPS.] The steward of a community; the purveyor: it is particularly used of the purveyor of a college.

A gentil manciple was ther of a temple,
Of which achatours mighten take ensemple
For to ben wise in buying of vitaille. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

They come furnished with no more experience than they learnt between the cook and the manciple.
Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

Their manciple fell dangerously ill,
Bread must be had, their grist went to the mill:
This simkin moderately stole before,
Their steward sick, he robb'd them ten times more.
Betterton, Miller of Trompington.

MANDA'MUS.† n. s. [Latin.] A writ granted by the court of king's bench in the name of the king; so called from the initial word.

I thought it my duty to returne our most humble thankes to your grace, for your late seasonable and effectual assistance in reverting the mandamus sent to Oriel-college.
Letter in Warton's Life of Bathurst, p. 100.

MANDARI'N.† n. s. [mandarim, or mandador, a commander, Portuguese; by persons of which country this name was given to the Chinese people of distinction; mandar, to command, from the Latin mandare.] A Chinese nobleman or magistrate.

Out of these are chosen all their chief officers, and mandarines both civil and military. Temple.

MA'NDATARY. n. s. [mandataire, Fr. from mando, Lat.] He to whom the pope has, by his prerogative, and proper right, given a mandate for his benefice. Ayliffe.

MA'NDATE.† n. s. [mandat, French; mandatum, Lat.]

1. Command.

Her force is not any where so apparent as in express mandates or prohibitions, especially upon advice and consultation going before. Hooker.

The necessity of the times cast the power of the three estates upon himself, that his mandates should pass for laws, whereby he laid what taxes he pleased. Howell, Voc. For.

2. Precept, charge; commission, sent or transmitted.

Who knows,
If the scarce bearded Cæsar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

This Moor,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought. Shakspeare, Othello.

He thought the mandate forg'd, your death conceal'd. Dryden.

This dream all powerful Juno sends, I bear
Her mighty mandates, and her words you hear. Dryden.

MANDA'TOR. n. s. [Latin.] Director.

A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his proctor. Ayliffe, Parergon.

MA'NDATORY.✝ adj. [mandare, Lat.] Preceptive; directory.

It doth not appear that he usurped more than a mandatory nomination of the bishop to be consecrated. Abp. Usher on Ordination, p. 221.

MA'NDATORY.* n. s. One to whom a commandment or charge is given; as, to an apparitor, or other messenger, to execute a citation. Bullokar.

Sending their mandatory with a musquetier to doctor Hammond's lodging, they commanded him to appear before them. Fell, Life of Hammond, § 1.

To MA'NDER.* See To MAUNDER.

MA'NDIBLE.✝ n. s. [mandibula, Latin; mandibule, old Fr.] The jaw; the instrument of manducation.

There are two jaw bones, which are called the upper and nether mandible. Smith on Old Age, p. 76.

He saith, only the crocodile moveth the upper jaw, as if the upper mandible did make an articulation with the cranium. Grew, Museum.

MANDI'BULAR.✝ adj. [from mandibula, Lat.] Belonging to the jaw.

They consider and conpute the many parts, joints, sinews; — parts similar, dissimilar, guttural, dental, mandibular. Gayton on D. Quix. (1654,) p. 103.

MA'NDIL.* n. s. [mandille, old French. From the Persian. See MANTLE.] A sort of mantle.

Gratifying them with a horse, a sword, a mandil, or the like. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 293.

MANDI'LION.✝ n. s. [mandiglione, Italian.] A soldier's coat. Skinner. A loose garment; a sleeveless jacket. Ainsworth. It is from the Persian. See MANDIL, and MANTLE.

MA'NDMENT.* n. s. [mandement, old French; from mando, Lat.] Commandment; direction. Obsolete.

Without mandement. Chaucer, Fr. Tale.

MA'NDOLIN.* n. s. [mandola, Ital. strumento musicale. Vocab. Della Crusca.] A kind of citern.

MANDRA'GORA.✝ } n. s. [mandragoras, Lat. mandragôre, Fr. manꝺꞃaᵹoꞃa, Saxon.]
MA'NDRAKE. }
A plant.

The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts; the root is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.

Among other virtues, mandrake has been falsely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporifick quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a narcotick of the most powerful kind. Hill, Mat. Med.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear. Shakspeare.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep. Shakspeare.

Come, violent death,
Serve for mandragora to make me sleep.
Webster, Dutchess of Malfy, (1623.)

And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shakspeare.

Go, and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root. Donne.

MA'NDREL. n. s. [mandrin, Fr.] An instrument to hold in the lathe the substance to be turned.

Mandrels are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work, that is to be turned; this mandrel is a shank, or pin mandrel. Moxon.

MA'NDUCABLE.* adj. [from manduco, Lat.] That may be eaten; fit to be eaten.

Not forbearing to eat any manducable creature. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 53.

To MA'NDUCATE.✝ v. a. [manduco, Lat.] To chew; to eat.

It is gravel in the teeth, and a man must drink the blood of his own gums, when he manducates such unwholesome, such unpleasant fruit. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653,) p. 252.

MANDUCA'TION.✝ n. s. [manducatio, Lat.] Eating; chewing.

Manducation is the action of the lower jaw in chewing the food, and preparing it in the mouth before it is received into the stomach. Quincy.

As good popery κατὰ γράμμα, as ever papist conceived of transubstantiation or oral manducation. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 261.

The more solid food needs greater manducation. Smith on Old Age, p. 82.

As he who is not a holy person does not feed upon Christ, it is apparent that our manducation must be spiritual, and therefore so must the food, and consequently it cannot be natural flesh. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

MANE. n. s. [maene, Dutch.] The hair which hangs down on the neck of horses or other animals.

Dametas was tossed from the saddle to the mane of the horse, and thence to the ground. Sidney.

A currie comb, maine comb, and whip for a jade. Tusser.

The weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

The horses breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light-fire. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

A lion shakes his dreadful mane,
And angry grows. Waller.

For quitting both their swords and reins,
They grasp'd with all their strength the manes. Hudibras.

MA'NEATER. n. s. [man and eat.] A cannibal; an anthropophagite; one that feeds upon human flesh.

MA'NED. adj. [from the noun.] Having a mane.

MANE'GE.* n. s. [French.] A place where horses are trained, or horsemanship taught; a riding-school.

If the weather is very hot, you may leave your riding at the manege till your return to Paris. Ld. Chesterfield.

MANE'RIAL.* adj. [manerium, Latin.] Manorial: which is another way of writing the word.

Hence we may conclude, that beside the church, there was a domestic or manerial chapel belonging to the old family-seat at Asterley. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 20.

MA'NES.✝ n. s. [Latin.] Ghost; shade; that which remains of man after death.

Hail, O ye holy manes! hail again
Paternal ashes. Dryden, Virg.

Some sages have thought it pious to preserve a certain reverence for the manes of their deceased friends; and have withdrawn themselves from the rest of the world, at certain seasons, to commemorate in their own thoughts such of their acquaintance who have gone before them out of this life. Tatler, No. 181.

MA'NFUL.✝ adj. [man and full.] Bold; stout; daring.

Of that integrity which should become it. Shakspeare.

Afterward they brought the fifth also, and mangled him. 2 Macc. vii. 15.

Thoughts my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb,
Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton, S. A.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With lolling tongue, lay fawning at thy feet,
And, seiz'd with fear, forgot his mangled meat. Dryden.

What could swords or poisons, racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame!
More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

It is hard, that not one gentleman's daughter should read her own tongue; as any one may find, who can hear them when they are disposed to mangle a play or a novel, where the least word out of the common road disconcerts them. Swift.

They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, only to shorten a syllable; so that most of the books we see now-a-days, are full of those manglings and abbreviations. Swift.

Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and curtailing authors. Baker on Learning.

To MA'NGLE. v. a. [mangeln, Germ. manghelen, Teut. " Manghelen het lijn-waet, levigare, complanare, polire lintea." Kilian.] To smooth linen; to calender.

Stark staring mad with manicon. Hudibras, iii. 1.

MA'NICHORD.* n. s. [manicordion, Fr. "an old-fashioned clarichord." Cotgrave.] A musical instrument, like a spinet. It has been confounded with the monochord, as if it were an instrument of one string only. See MONOCHORD. It has taken the name, most probably, from the Lat. manus, the hand, and chord. Its strings, like those of the clarichord, were covered with little pieces of cloth, to deaden or soften the sound: whence it is called the dumb spinet; and was much used in nunneries, by reason that the nuns, who were learning to play upon it, might not disturb the silence of other cells. See Grassineau's Mus. Dict.

MA'NIFEST. adj. [manifestus, Latin.]

1. Plain; open; not concealed; not doubtful; apparent.

They all concur as principles, they all have their forcible operations therein, although not all in like apparent and manifest manner. Hooker.

MANIPULA'TION.* n. s. [manipulatim, Lat. by bands or companies, or in heaps.] In mines, the manner of digging silver out of the earth.

MA'NKILLING.* adj. [man and kill.] Used to kill men.

Cursed be the poet, who first honoured, with the name of a hero, a mere Ajax, a mankilling idiot Dryden, Ded. to the D. of Ormond.

MANKI'LLER. n. s. [man and killer.] Murderer.

To kill mankillers man has lawful power,
But not the extended licence to devour. Dryden, Fab.

MANKI'ND.† n. s. [man and kind. Saxon, mancÿnn. The poets have sometimes placed the accent on the first syllable of mankind. Shakspeare affords an example in the adjective, and Milton in the substantive.]

1. The race or species of human beings.

From them I will not hide
My judgements, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they saw. Milton, P. L.
Erewhile perplex'd with thoughts what would become
Of me and all mankind; but now I see
His day, in whom all nations shall be blest. Milton, P. L.

Plato witnesseth, that soon after mankind began to increase, they built many cities. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

All mankind alike require their grace,
All born to want; a miserable race. Pope, Odyss.

2. Humanity. Not in use.

You, whose minds are good,
And have not forc'd all mankind from your breasts
That yet have so much stock of virtue left,
To pity guilty states, when they are wretched;
Lend your soft ears to hear, and eyes to weep,
Deeds done by men beyond the acts of furies. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

MA'NKIND.† adj. [man, Sax. denotes wickedness, as well as man.] Resembling man not woman in form or nature; masculine: often applied by our old poets to the female sex in a bad sense, and in some parts of England still denoting violent, ferocious, women. Sometimes it is an epithet for a ferocious man. In the sense of mischievous, it was also formerly applied to beasts.

He saw mightie deere, that seemed to be mankind, which ranne at him. Frobisher, First Voyage, (1578,) p. 48.

A mankind witch! Hence with her, out o'door:
A most intelligencing bawd. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
Pallas, nor thee, I call on, mankind maid!

He fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamp of night in revels: is not more manlike
Than Cleopatra. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Under his forming hand a creature grew,

2. Becoming a man.

Civil manlike exercise, which might stir up, and discipline, and ripen the strength they have. Hammond, Works, iv. 561.

MA'NLESS. adj. [man and less.] Without men; not manned.

Sir Walter Ralegh was wont to say, the Spaniards were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more but a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon the armada at Calais by the favour of the wind in the night, that put them in such terror, as they cut their cables. Bacon.

MA'NLINESS.† n. s. [from manly. Dignity; bravery; stoutness.

Feed your wrath, sir, rather than your lust;
It is a vice comes nearer manliness. B. Jonson, Fox.

If men want manliness to expostulate the right of their due ransom. Milton, Tetrachordon.

Young master, willing to shew himself a man, lets himself loose to all irregularities; and thus courts credit and manliness in the casting off the modesty he has till then been kept in. Locke.

MA'NLING.* n. s. [from man.] A little man.

Augustus often called him his witty manling, for the littleness of his stature. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

MA'NLY. adj. [from man.]

1. Manlike; becoming a man; firm; brave; stout; undaunted; undismayed.

As did Æneas old Anchises bear,
So I bear thee upon my manly shoulders. Shakspeare.

Lets briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet i' th' hall together. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Serene and manly, harden'd to sustain
The load of life, and exercis'd in pain. Dryden, Juv.

See great Marcellus! how inur'd in toils,
He moves with manly grace. Dryden, Æn.

2. Not womanish; not childish.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

MA'NLY. adv. [from man.] With courage like a man.

MA'NNA. n. s. [Hebrew.]

Manna is properly a gum, and is honey-like juice concreted into a solid form, seldom so dry but it adheres to the fingers: its colour is whitish, or brownish, and it has sweetness, and with it a sharpness that renders it agreeable: manna is the product of two different trees, both varieties of the ash: when the heats are free from rain, these trees exudate a white honey juice, which concretes into what we call manna. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an aërial produce, by an experiment being made by covering a tree with sheets in the manna season, and the finding as much manna on it afterwards as on those which were open to the air and dew. Hill.

It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs or leaves only. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The manna in heaven will suit every man's palate. Locke.

MA'NNER.† n. s. [maniere, French.]

1. Form; method.

In my divine Emilia make me blest.
Find thou the manner; and the means prepare,
Possession, more than conquest, is my care. Dryden.

2. Custom; habit; fashion.

As the manner of some is. Heb. x. 25.

To the sea-side. Shakspeare, K. John.

The bread is in a manner common. 1 Sam. xxi. 5.

If the envy be general in a manner upon all the ministers of an estate, it is truly upon the state itself. Bacon, Ess.

This universe we have possest, and rul'd
In manner at our will, the affairs of earth. Milton, P. R.

Augustinus does in a manner confess the charge. Baker.

4. Sort; kind.

All manner of men assembled here in arms against God's peace and the king's: we charge you to repair to your dwelling places. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable,
Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shakspeare.

What manner of men were they whom ye slew? Judges.

The city may flourish in trade, and all manner of outward advantages. Atterbury.

5. Formerly, in the preceding sense, without of. In modern editions of the Bible, of has been foisted in, where this old form occurs in Leviticus. Notwithstanding Dr. Johnson's omission of this usage of manner, I should not have expected, in some recent editions of our authorized version of the Scriptures, the alteration of a particular expression which our venerable translators thought proper to repeat; at least not till a new version had been allowed.

A maner Latin corrupt was her speche. Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

Three maner wayes Almighty God deleth with synners. Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 8.

Ye shall eat no manner fat of ox, of sheep, or of goat. Levit. vii. 23.

6. Mien; cast of the look.

Air and manner are more expressive than words. Richardson, Clarissa.

Some men [illegible] a native dignity in their manner, which will procure them [illegible] regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Richardson, Clarissa.

7. Peculiar way; distinct mode of person.

It can hardly be imagined how great a difference was in the humour, disposition, and manner, of the army under Essex, and the other under Waller. Clarendon.

Some few touches of your lordship, which I have endeavoured to express after your manner, have made whole poems of mine to pass with approbation. Dryden, Juv.

As man is known by his company, so a man's company may be known by his manner of expressing himself. Swift.

8. Way; mode: of things.

The temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves after a gentle, but very powerful, manner. Atterbury.

9. In the plural: character of the mind.

His princes are as much distinguished by their manners as by their dominions; and even those among them, whose characters seem wholly made up of courage, differ from one another as to the particular kinds. Addison.

10. In the plural: general way of life; morals; habits.

The kinds of musick have most operation upon manners: as, to make them warlike, to make them soft and effeminate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Every fool carries more or less in his face the signature of his manners, more legible in some than others. L'Estrange.

We bring our manners to the blest abodes,
And think what pleases us must please the gods. Dryden.

11. In the plural: ceremonious behaviour; studied civility.

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urge. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you. Shakspeare, Othello.

Our griefs and not our manners reason now. Shakspeare.

Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves,
Where manners ne'er were preach'd. Shakspeare.

Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Good manners bound her to invite
The stranger dame to be her guest that night. Dryden.

None but the careless and the confident would rush rudely into the presence of a great man. and shall we, in our applications to the great God, take that to be religion, which the common reason of mankind will not allow to be manners? South.

Your passion bends
Its force against your nearest friends;
Which manners, decency, and pride,
Have taught you from the world to hide. Swift.

12. To take in or with the MANNER. To catch in the actual commission of a crime; to be caught in the fact. [written mainour, in our old law-books; from the French manier, to seize with the hand; though a learned friend observes that maniour, as Hawkins writes the word, is proper; that a thief taken in the manner is said, in our old statutes, to be "pris ove maynovre," 1 Hen. 4. c. 20.; and that it is probably from the old Norman word manouvrer, to hold or occupy. Kelham gives the ancient French expression thus; "ove manour, with the mainour, with the goods in their hands."]

The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta: the manner of it is, I was taken with the manner. Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

And there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner. Num. v. 13.

If I melt into melancholy while I write, I shall be taken in the manner; and I sit by one too tender to these impressions. Donne, Lett.

To MA'NNER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To instruct in morals; to form; "to be mannered, imbui bonis moribus." Huloet.

Beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born. Shakspeare, Pericles.

He is one
The truest manner'd, such a holy witch,
That he enchants societies to him. Shakspeare, Cymb.

MA'NNERIST.* n. s. [from manner.] An artist who performs all his works in one unvaried manner.

Not such a likeness, as, through Hayman's works,
(Dull mannerist,) in Christians, Jews, and Turks,
Cloys with a sameness. Churchill, Gotham.

MA'NNERLINESS. n. s. [from mannerly.] Civility; ceremonious complaisance.

Others out of mannerliness and respect to God, though they deny this universal soul of the universe, yet have devised several systems of the universe. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

MA'NNERLY. adj. [from manner.] Civil; ceremonious; complaisant.

Tut; tut; here's a mannerly forbearance. Shakspeare.

Let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly. Shakspeare.

Fools make a mock at sin, affront the God whom we serve, and vilify religion; not to oppose them, by whatever mannerly names we may palliate the offence, is not modesty but cowardice, and a traiterous desertion of our allegiance to Christ. Rogers.

MA'NNERLY.† adv. Civilly; without rudeness; ceremoniously.

When we've supp'd,
We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story. Shakspeare.

He mannerly desired him to depart in kindness, as he came. Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) N. iv. b.

Better it is to lap one's pottage like a dog, than to eat it mannerly with a spoon of the devil's giving. Fuller, Holy State, p. 352.

MA'NNIKIN.† n. s. [manneken, Teut. mannequin, Fr. See MANIKIN.] A little man; a dwarf.

MA'NNISH.† adj. [from man.]

1. Human; belonging to the human species.

It was a figure
Most liche to mannishe creature;
But as of beautie heavenliche,
It was most to an aungell liche. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

The proverbe sayth; for to don sinne is mannish, but certes to persevere long in sinne is werke of the divel. Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

2. Having the appearance of a man; bold; masculine; impudent.

Nature had proportioned her without any fault; yet altogether seemed not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in; the reason whereof might seem a mannish countenance, which overthrew that lovely sweetness, the noblest power of womankind, far fitter to prevail by parley than by battle. Sidney.

A woman, impudent and mannish grown,
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man. Shakspeare.

When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore,
Astride on horseback hunts the Tuscan boar. Dryden.

*MANŒUVRE. n. s. [French; manouvrier, a handicraft-man; manovra, Ital. manopera, low Lat. i. e. manûs opera.] Originally in the French language, the service of a vassal to his lord: then, an operation of military tacticks, a stratagem, in which sense we use it, and apply it also to naval skill in managing a ship; and thence any kind of management.

Thus to make them the principal not the secondary theatre of their manœuvres for securing a determined majority in parliament. Burke, Speech on the Duration of Parliaments.

To MANŒU'VRE.* v. n. [from the noun; manouvrer, Norm. Fr. to hold.] To manage military or naval tacticks skilfully; to carry on any operation adroitly.

MA'NOR. n. s. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin; maner, Armorick.]

Manor signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass of ground granted by the king to some man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterward this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, injoining them again such services and rents as he thought good: and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the inferiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these mansions and lands so given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to the king; and thereby they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies a jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site: for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Cowel.

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Ev'n now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Kinsmen of mine,
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly. O many
Have broke their backs with laying manors on them
For this great journey. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

MA'NOR-HOUSE.* } n. s. The house of the lord or MA'NOR-SEAT. } owner of the manor.

Hail the poor muses' richest manor-seat! Cowley.

I am of opinion that this family of De Williamscot took its name from Williamscot, commonly called Willescot, a hamlet in the parish of Cropredy, near Banbury, where is still an ancient manour-house. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 36.

MANO'RIAL.* adj [from manor.] Belonging to a manor; denoting a manor.

MA'NQUELLER.† n. s. [Sax. mancpellene, from man and cpellan.] A murderer; a mankiller; a manslayer.

He sent a manqueller, and commaundide that Jones heed were brought in a disch. Wicliffe, St. Mark, vi. 27.

This was not Kayne the manqueller, but one of a gentler spirit and milder sex, to wit, a woman. Carew.

MANSE.† n. s. [manse, old French; mansio, Latin.]

1. Farm and land.

This lady died at her capital manse at Fencot near Bicester, in the year 1111. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 30.

2. A parsonage house.

Finding a manse or parsonage-house wanting, he offered 200l. toward providing one. Life of Bp. Kennet, p. 50.

Donations of glebes and manses were made. Ornaments of Churches considered, (1761,) p. 89.

MA'NSION. n. s. [mansio, Latin.]

1. The lord's house in a manor.

2. Place of residence; abode; house.

All these are but ornaments of that divine spark within you, which being descended from heaven, could not elsewhere pick out so sweet a mansion. Sidney.

A fault no less grievous, if so be it were true, than if some king should build his mansion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles in a place,
From whence himself does fly? he loves us not. Shakspeare.
Thy mansion wants thee, Adam, rise
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd;
First father! call'd by thee, I come thy guide
To the garden of bliss, thy seat prepar'd. Milton, P. L.
A mansion is provided thee; more fair
Than this, and worthy Heaven's peculiar care,
Not fram'd of common earth. Dryden.

3. Residence; abode.

These poets near our princes sleep,
And in one grave their mansions keep. Denham.

To MA'NSION.* v. n. [from the noun.] To dwell as in a mansion.

Visible as the clouds of heaven, and other meteors; as also the rest of the creatures mansioning therein. Mede, Paraphr. of St. Peter, (1642,) p. 16.

MA'NSIONRY.* n. s. [from mansion.] Place of residence. Not in use.

The temple-haunting martlet does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that the heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

MANSLA'UGHTER. n. s. [man and slaughter.]

1. Murder; destruction of the human species.

The whole pleasure of that book standeth in open manslaughter and bold bawdry. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils, with infinite
Manslaughter, shall be held the highest pitch
Of human glory. Milton, P. L.

2. [In law.] The act of killing a man not wholly without fault, though without malice: punished by forfeiture.

When a man, throwing at a cock, killed a bystander, I ruled it manslaughter. Foster.

MA'NSLAYER.† n. s. [manſlaga, Saxon.] One that has killed another.

Cities for refuge for the manslayer. Numb. xxxv. 6.

The foul blood of a wicked manslayer. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 2. C. 1.

MA'NSTEALER.* n. s. [man and steal.] One that steals and sells men.

For manstealers, for liars, for perjured persons. 1 Tim. i. 10.

MA'NSTEALING.* part. adj. Stealing men, in order to sell them.

Manstealing Tartars, who plentifully furnish the Turkish dominion [with slaves.] Brown, Trav. (1685,) p. 49.

MANSU'ETE.† adj. [mansuetus, Latin. The word is very old in our language, and not applied merely to animals in the sense of tame, and the like, as the solitary instance given from Ray by Dr. Johnson might induce the reader to suppose.] Mild; gentle; goodnatured; tame; not ferocious; not wild.

She said eke, she was fain with him to mete,
And stode forth stil, mild, muet, and mansuete.
Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. v. 194.

This holds not only in domestick and mansuete birds; for then it might be thought the effect of cicuration or institution, but also in the wild. Ray on the Creation.

MA'NSUETUDE.† n. s. [mansuetude, French; mansuetudo, Lat.] Mildness; gentleness; tameness. Dr. Johnson has unjustly confined this word also to animals.

Arm in arm with magnificence goeth magnanimity, waited upon by mansuetude. Bryskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606,) p. 223.

Mansuetude, or mildness, tempereth the fury of anger. Ibid. p. 223.

I use all mildness or mansuetude in admonishing. Hammond of Fraternal Admonit. § 15.

The angry lion did present his paw,
Which by consent was given to mansuetude;
The fearful hare her ears, which by their law
Humility did reach to fortitude. Herbert.

To MA'NSWEAR.* See To MAINSWEAR.

MA'NTEL.† n. s. [mantel, old French; or rather the German word mantel. "Germanis mantel non pallium modò significat, sed etiam id omne quod aliud circumdat: hinc murus arcis atque structura quæ focum investit mantel ipsis dicitur." V. Ducange in V. MANTUM.] Work raised before a chimney to conceal it, whence the name, which originally signifies a cloak. See MANTLE.

From the Italians we may learn how to raise fair mantels within the rooms, and how to disguise the shafts of chimnies. Wotton, Architecture.

If you break any china on the mantletree or cabinet, gather up the fragments.

MA'NTELET.† n. s. [mantelet, French.]

1. A small cloak worn by women, Dr. Johnson says. It was also a short mantle worn by men.

A mantelet upon his shoulders hanging. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. [In fortification.] A kind of movable penthouse, made of pieces of timber sawed into planks, which being about three inches thick, are nailed one over another to the height of almost six feet: they are generally cased with tin, and set upon little wheels; so that in a siege they may be driven before the pioneers, and serve as blinds to shelter them from the enemy's small shot; there are other mantelets covered on the top, whereof the miners make use to approach the walls of a town or castle. Harris.

MANTI'GER.† n. s. [not from man and tiger, as Dr. Johnson pronounces it; but a misapprehension of the Lat. mantichora, Fr. manticore, which means a furious beast of a very different kind. "That word (man-tiger), replied Martin, is a corruption of the mantichora of the ancients, the most noxious animal that ever infested the earth," &c. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl. Mantiger is sometimes written mantegar.] A large monkey or baboon.

Near these was placed — the black prince of Monomotapas; by whose side were seen the glaring cat-a-mountain, and the man-mimicking mantiger. Arbuthnot and Pope.

MA'NTLE.† n. s. [mæntel, Saxon; mantel, old French; mantellum, Latin, supposed to be from the Greek μανδύας, a word adopted from the Persian, and denoting a kind of military vestment. See also MANDIL.] A kind of cloak or garment thrown over the rest of the dress.

We, well-cover'd with the night's black mantle,
At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,
And seize himself. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Poor Tom drinks the green mantle of the standing pool. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth. Shakspeare.

Their actions were disguised with mantles, very usual in times of disorder, of religion, and justice. Hayward.

The herald and children are clothed with mantles of sattin; but the herald's mantle is streamed with gold. Bacon.

By which the beauty of the earth appears,
The divers colour'd mantle which she wears. Sandys.

Before the sun,
Before the heavens thou wert, and at the voice
Of God, as with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite. Milton, P. L.

Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated. L'Estrange.

Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours; gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,
That set the unhappy Phaeton to view;
The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,
And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd. Addison.

To MA'NTLE.† v. a. [from the noun; manteler, old French.] To cloke; to cover; to disguise.

The mantled meadows mourne;
Their sundry colours tourne. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov.

As the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness; so their rising senses,
Begin to chace the ign'rant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason. Shakspeare, Tempest.

I left them
I' the filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chins. Shakspeare, Tempest.

To MA'NTLE. v. n. [The original of the signification of this word is not plain. Skinner considers it as relative to the expansion of a mantle: as, the hawk mantleth; she spreads her wings like a mantle.]

1. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton, P. L.

2. To joy; to revel.

My frail fancy fed with full delight
Doth bathe in bliss, and mantleth most at ease;
Ne thinks of other heaven, but how it might
Her heart's desire with most contentment please. Spenser.

3. To be expanded; to spread luxuriantly.

The pair that clad
Each shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast
With regal ornament. Milton, P. L.

The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps
Luxuriant. Milton, P. L.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of yon small hill,
Plucking ripe clusters. Milton, Comus.

You'll sometimes meet a fop of nicest tread,
Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head. Gay.

And where his mazy waters flow,
He gave the mantling vine, to grow
A trophy to his love. Fenton, Ode to Lord Gower.

4. To gather any thing on the surface; to froth.

There are a sort of men whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stilness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shakspeare.

It drinketh fresh, flowereth, and mantleth exceedingly. Bacon.

From plate to plate your eye-balls roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope, Horace.

5. To ferment; to be in sprightly agitation.

When mantling blood
Flow'd in his lovely cheeks; when his bright eyes
Sparkled with youthful fires; when every grace
Shone in the father, which now crowns the son. Smith.

MA'NTLING.* n. s. In heraldry, the representation of a mantle, or any drapery, that is drawn about a coat of arms.

MA'NTO.* n. s. [Italian.] A robe; a cloak.

He presents him with a white horse, a manto or black coole, [cowl,] a pastoral staff, &c. Ricaut, State of the Gr. Ch. p. 96.

MA'NTUA.† n. s. [this is perhaps corrupted from manteau, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — It is directly from the Greek μανδύας, or μανδύα, as mantle is. See MANTLE.] A lady's gown.

Not Cynthia, when her mantua's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair. Pope.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, ruffles, and mantuas. Swift.

MA'NTUAMAKER. n. s. [mantua and maker.] One who makes gowns for women.

By profession a mantuamaker: I am employed by the most fashionable ladies. Addison, Guardian.

MA'NUAL. adj. [manualis, Latin; manuel, Fr.]

1. Performed by the hand.

The speculative part of painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to that perfection which is its object. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. Used by the hand.

The treasurer obliged himself to procure some declaration under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

Ma'nual. n. s. A small book, such as may be carried in the hand.

This manual of laws, stiled the confessor's laws, contains but few heads. Hale, Comm. Law of England.

In those prayers which are recommended to the use of the devout persons of your church, in the manuals and offices allowed them in our own language, they would be careful to have nothing they thought scandalous. Stillingfleet.

Ma'nuary.* adj. [manuarius, Lat.] Performed by the hand.

Xenophon hath given us a very pregnant instance, but in a manuary art; yea, and that one of the meanest, to wit, the art of shoemaking. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 192.

To one the knowledge of liberal arts; to another the exquisiteness of manuary skill. Bp. Hall, Breathings of the Devout Soul, § 28.

Manu'bial. adj. [manubiæ, Latin.] Belonging to spoil; taken in war. Dict.

MANU'BRIUM. n. s. [Latin.] A handle.

They mock our scant manuring, and require
More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth.
Milton, P. L.

2. To dung; to fatten with composts.

Fragments of shells, reduced by the agitation of the sea to powder, are used for the manuring of land. Woodward.

3. To fatten as a compost.

Revenge her slaughter'd citizens,
Or share their fate: the corps of half her senate

Manure the fields of Thessaly, while we Sit here, deliberating in cold debates. Addison, Cato.

MANU'RE. n. s. [from the verb.] Soil to be laid on lands; dung or compost to fatten land.

When the Nile from Pharian fields is fled,
The fat manure with heav'nly fire is warm'd. Dryden.

Mud makes an extraordinary manure for land that is sandy. Mortimer, Husbandry.

MANU'REMENT. n. s. [from manure.] Cultivation; improvement.

The manurement of wits is like that of soils, where before the pains of tilling or sowing, men consider what the mould will bear. Wotton on Education.

MANU'RER. n. s. [from the verb.] He who manures land; a husbandman.

MA'NUSCRIPT. n. s. [manuscrit, French; manuscriptum, Lat.] A book written, not printed.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick, and sought in the most remote parts by the diligence of Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, were upon sale to the jesuits. Wotton.

Her majesty has perused the manuscript of this opera, and given it her approbation. Dryden.

MA'NUTENENCY.* n. s. [manutentia, Lat.] Support; maintenance.

Mercy first, that God spared us, and preserved us so long. For without his divine manutenency, our strongest fabricks had fallen immediately upon their very builders. Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 83.

MA'NY. adj. comp. more, superl. most. [mæniᵹ, Sax.]

1. Consisting of a great number; numerous; more than few.

Our enemy, and the destroyers of our country, slew many of us. Judg. xvi. 24.

When many atoms descend in the air, the same cause which makes them be many, makes them be light in proportion to their multitude. Digby on the Soul.

Sufficient that thy prayers are heard, and death,
Thus due by sentence, when thou did'st transgress,
Defeated of his seizure many days
Giv'n thee of grace, wherein thou may'st repent,
And one bad act with many deeds well done

The apostles never give the least directions to Christians to appeal to the bishop of Rome for a determination of the many differences which, in those times, happened among them. Tillotson.

2. Marking number indefinite, or comparative.

Both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, brought bracelets. Exod. xxxv. 22.

This yet I apprehend not, why to those
Among whom God will deign to dwell on earth,
So many and so various laws are given;
So many laws argue so many sins. Milton, P. L.

3. Powerful: with too, in low language.

They come to vie power and expence with those that are too high and too many for them. L'Estrange, Fab.

MA'NY.† n. s. [This word is remarkable in the Saxon for its frequent use, being written with twenty variations: mæneᵹeo, mæneᵹo, mæniᵹeo, mæniᵹo, mæniᵹu, mænio, mæniu, mænyᵹeo, maneᵹeo, maniᵹu, maniᵹe, maniᵹo, meneᵹeo, meneᵹo, meneᵹu, meniᵹeo, meniᵹo, meniᵹu, menio, meniu. Lye. — "Many is supposed by Lye to be derived from man; 'ac propriè de hominum multitudine usurpatum:' and thence, according to him, transferred to other things. But many is merely the past participle of the Sax. menᵹan, miscere, to mix, to mingle: it means mixed or associated (for that is the effect of mixing) understand company, or any uncertain and unspecified number of any things." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 386. — Many is the Gothick manag, whence also the Germ. manige, as well as the Saxon and Eng. words.]

1. A multitude; a company; a great number; people.

After him the rascal many ran,
Heaped together in rude rabblement. Spenser, F. Q.

O thou fond many! with what loud applause
Did'st thou beat heav'n with blessing Bolingbroke. Shakspeare.

I had a purpose now
To lead our many to the holy land;
Lest rest and lying still might make them look
Too near into my state. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A care-craz'd mother of a many children. Shakspeare.

The vulgar and the many are fit only to be led or driven, but by no means fit to guide themselves. South.

There parting from the king, the chiefs divide,
And wheeling East and West, before their many ride. Dryden.

He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life. Tillotson.

Seeing a great many in rich gowns, he was amazed to find that persons of quality were up so early. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Retinue of servants; household; family. [old Fr. magnie, maisnie, mesnie, meinie, a family: in this sense the Saxon is not found.] It is more properly written meiny. See MEINY.

His meinie, which that herden this affray,
Came leping in. Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

The kings before their many rode. Dryden.

3. Many, when it is used before a singular noun, seems to be a substantive. In conversation, for many a man they say a many men. In the north of England a many, and a many people, is common.

Thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear. Shakspeare.

He is beset with enemies, the meanest of which is not without many and many a way to the wreaking of a malice. L'Estrange, Fab.

Broad were their collars too, and every one
Was set about with many a costly stone. Dryden.

Many a child can have the distinct clear ideas of two and three long before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

4. Many is used much in composition.

MA'NYCOLOURED. adj. [many and colour.] Having various colours.

Hail manycoloured messenger, that ne'er
Do'st disobey the voice of Jupiter. Shakspeare, Tempest.

He hears not me, but on the other side
A manycolour'd peacock having spied,
Leaves him and me. Donne.

The hoary majesty of spades appears;
Puts forth one manly leg, to sight reveal'd,
The rest his manycolour'd robe conceal'd. Pope.

MA'NYCORNERED. adj. [many and corner.] Polygonal; having corners more than twelve: the geometricians have particular names for angular figures up to those of twelve corners.

Search those manycorner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds. Dryden.

MA'NYHEADED. adj. [many and head.] Having many heads.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the manyheaded tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Musidorus their chief. Sidney.

The proud Duessa came
High mounted on her manyheaded beast. Spenser, F. Q.

The manyheaded beast hath broke,
Or shaken from his head, the royal yoke. Denham.

Those were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood to subdue
The hydra of the manyheaded hissing crew. Dryden.

MA'NYLANGUAGED.* adj. [many and language.] Having many languages.

Seek Atrides on the Spartan shore;
He, wandering long, a wider circle made,
And manylanguag'd nations has survey'd. Pope, Odyss.

Ma'nypeopled. adj. [many and people.] Numerously populous.

They are Roman catholick in the device and legend, which are both manytimes take out of the Scriptures. Addison.

MAP. n. s. [mappa, low Lat.] A geograhical picture on which lands and seas are delineated according to the longitude and latitude.

Zelmane earnestly entreated Dorus, that he would bestow a map of his little world upon her, that she might see whether it were troubled with such unhabitable climes of cold despairs, and hot rages, as her's was. Sidney.

I will take the map of Ireland, and lay it before me, and make mine eyes my schoolmasters, to give my understanding to judge of your plot. Spenser on Ireland.

Old coins are like so many maps for explaining the ancient geography. Addison on Anc. Coins.

O'er the map my finger taught to stray,
Cross many a region marks the winding way;
From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a mere geographer by love. Tickell.

To Map† v. a. [from the noun.] To delineate; to set down.

I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have mapp'd it right. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

He thinks it not needful to map out before the traveller every town and village of all the shires, through which he should pass; but only sets down those that lie in his road. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 387.

Ma'ple tree. n. s. [acer.]

The maple tree hath jagged or angular leaves; the seeds grow two together in hard-winged vessels: there are several species; the greater maple is falsly called the sycamore tree: the common maple is frequent in hedge-rows. Miller.

The platane round,
The carver holme, the maple seldom inward sound. Spenser, F. Q.

Of the rottenest maple wood burnt to ashes they make a strong lye. Mortimer, Husb.

Ma'ppery. n. s. [from map.] The art of planning and designing. Hanmer.

The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike
When fitness calls them on;
They call this bedwork, mappery, closet war. Shakspeare.

To MAR.† v. a. [amẏppan, Saxon, from map, damage, loss.] To injure; to spoil; to hurt; to mischief; to damage.

Loss is no shame, nor to be less than foe,
But to be lesser than himself, doth mar
Both loser's lot, and victor's praise also. Spenser, F. Q.

The master may here only stumble, and perchance fall in teaching, to the marring and maiming of the scholar in learning. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

When priests are more in words than matter,
When brewers mar their malt with water. Shakspeare.

I pray you mar no more trees with writing songs in their barks.
— I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favouredly. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Beware thine honour, be not then disgrac'd,
Take care thou mar not when thou think'st to mend. Fairfax.

Aumarle became the man that all did mar,
Whether through indiscretion, chance, or worse. Daniel.

The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and mars business, when great in dependencies. Bacon, Essays.

O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring!
How mutually they link'd and folded are:
And hear how oft one disagreeing string
The harmony doth rather make than mar! Davies.

Ire, envy, and despair,
Marr'd all his borrow'd visage, and betray'd
Him counterfeit. Milton, P. L.

Had she been there, untimely joy through all
Men's hearts diffus'd, had marr'd the funeral. Waller.

Mother!
'Tis much unsafe my sire to disobey:
Not only you provoke him to your cost,
But mirth is marr'd, and the good cheer is lost. Dryden.

Pope — has not only misrepresented the story, but marred the character of the poem. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 396.

Mar.* n. s.

1. A blot; an injury. [from the verb.]

My will to write shall match the mars I make in it, [the letter.] Ascham, Lett. (1551.)

2. [mir, Goth. mare; myra, Su. palus. Serenius.] A mere or small lake. North. Grose.

MARANA'THA. n. s. [Syriack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St. Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha, which is as much as to say, May'st thou be devoted to the greatest of evils, and to the utmost severity of God's judgements; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes. Calmet.

Mara'smus. n. s. [μαρασμὸς, from μαραίνω.] A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance. Quincy.

Pining atrophy,

A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat. Harvey.

MARA'UDER.* n. s. [maradeur, French, from the old word maraud, a scoundrel, a rogue, a vagabond, a beggar. Cotgrave. It has been pretended, that the word has its name from a Count de Merodé, a brutal and licentious officer, in the time of Gustavus Adolphus; and that it should be written merodeurs. Harte's Life of Gustavus Adolphus, vol. ii. p. 70. But the word was common long before that time, as the dictionary of Cotgrave shews. Roquefort cites the still more ancient French word marander, i. e. "marauder, chercher à voler, à escroquer, chercher des aventures, chercher de quoi vivre; les soldats dise encore, aller en maraude, ou marauder, pour piller, escroquer." Marauder is therefore the orthography. Coles has marrow for a knave or beggarly rascal. Dict. 1685.] A plunderer; a pillager.

We ought to write merodeurs, [from the pretended etymology of Merodé,] and not marauders. Harte, Hist. of Gust. Adolphus.

Mara'uding.* adj. [marauder, Fr.] Roving about in quest of plunder; robbing; destroying.

Marave'di.* n. s. [Arab.] A small Spanish copper coin, of less value than our farthing.

MA'RBLE. n. s. [marbre, French; marmor, Lat.]

1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat calcining into lime.

He plies her hard, and much rain wears the marble. Shakspeare.

Thou marble hew'st, ere long to part with breath,
And houses rear'st, unmindful of thy death. Sandys.

Some dry their corn infected with the brine,
Then grind with marbles, and prepare to dine. Dryden.

The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; not that the parts of the diamond are more solid, but because the parts of water being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble. Locke.

2. Little balls supposed to be of marble, with which children play.

Marbles taught them percussion, and the laws of motion; nut-crackers the use of the leaver. Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription; as, the Oxford marbles.

MA'RBLE. adj.

1. Made of marble.

Pygmalion's fate revers'd is mine,
His marble love took flesh and blood,
All that I worshipp'd as divine,
That beauty, now 'tis understood,
Appears to have no more of life,
Than that whereof he fram'd his wife. Waller.

2. Variegated, or stained like marble.

Shall I see far-fetched inventions? shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts? or rather, though the pureness of my virgin-mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word. Sidney.

The appendix shall be printed by itself, stitched, and with a marble cover. Swift.

To MA'RBLE. v. a. [marbrer, French, from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.

Very well slecked marbled paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall with an equal diffusion. Boyle.

Marian
Marbled with sage the hardening cheese she press'd,
And yellow butter Marian's skill profess'd. Gay, Pastorals.

MA'RBLEHEARTED. adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; insensible; hard-hearted.

Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

MA'RCASITE. n. s.

The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bismuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallick. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, naturally found among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it. Hill.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I restrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures. Woodward, Met. Fossils.

The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, and metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals. Newton, Opticks.

Here marcasites in various figures wait,
To ripen to a true metallick state. Garth, Dispens.

MARCH. n. s. [from Mars.] The third month of the year.

March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect, a helmet upon his head, to shew this month was dedicated to Mars. Peacham on Drawing.

To MARCH. v. n. [marcher, Fr. for varicare, Menage; from Mars, Junius.]

1. To move in military form.

Well march we on,
To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd. Shakspeare.

He marched in battle array with his power against Arphaxad. Jud. i. 13.

Maccabeus marched forth, and slew five-and-twenty thousand persons. 2 Mac. xii. 26.

My father, when some days before his death
He ordered me to march for Utica,
Wept o'er me. Addison, Cato.

2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.

Plexirtus finding that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march. Sidney.

Doth York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm? Shakspeare.

Our bodies, every footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at last they die. Davies.

Like thee, great son of Jove, like thee,
When clad in rising majesty,
Thou marchest down o'er Delos' hills. Prior.

The power of wisdom march'd before. Pope, Odyss.

To MARCH. v. a.

1. To put in military movement.

Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of snow, the dazzling splendour of its whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers. Boyle on Colours.

2. To bring in regular procession.

March them again in fair array,
And bid them form the happy day;
The happy day design'd to wait
On William's fame, and Europe's fate. Prior.

To MARCH.* v. n. To border; to join. See the fifth sense of MARCH.

That was in a stranger londe,
Which marcheth upon Chimerie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

MARCH.† n. s. [marcher, French.]

1. Military movement; journey of soldiers.

These troops came to the army harassed with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments, and fought in their shirts. Bacon, War with Spain.

Who should command, by his Almighty nod,
These chosen troops, unconscious of the road,
And unacquainted with the appointed end,
Their marches to begin, and thither tend. Blackmore.

2. Grave and solemn walk.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestick march, and energy divine. Pope.

3. Deliberate or laborious walk.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison on Italy.

4. Signal to move.

The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly. Knolles.

5. Marches, without singular. [marka, Gothick; mearc, Saxon; marche, French. Barbazan and Roquefort assert that this word undoubtedly comes from the Latin margine, the ablative case of margo, a margin; but it is from the Gothick word in the sense of a mark defining a boundary; and thus we use landmark.] Borders; limits; confines.

They of those marches —
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shakspeare.

The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them. Davies.

It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas. Davies on Ireland.

MA'RCHER. n. s. [from marcheur, French.] President of the marches or borders.

Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own use; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties. Davies on Ireland.

MA'RCHING.* n. s. [from march.] Military movement; passage of soldiers.

All that heard the noise of their multitude, and the marching of the company, and the rattling of the harness, were moved; for the army was very great and mighty. 1 Macc. vi. 41.

MA'RCHIONESS.† n. s. [feminine, formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchio. Dr. Johnson. — The old Fr. marchioness is used for marquisat. Our marchioness was formerly marquisse, as in the genuine edition of Bacon's Apophthegms; in which Dr. Johnson has given the word, from a modernized one, marchioness. And in Chaucer, markisesse. See MARQUIS.] The wife of a marquis; a lady raised to the rank of marquis.

The king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing
Than marchioness of Pembroke. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

No marchioness, but now a queen.
Milton, Epit. M. of Winchester.

The lady marchioness, his wife, solicited very diligently the timely preservation of her husband. Clarendon.

MA'RCHPANE.† n. s. [massepane, French; in which language the word is old; supposed to be from the Latin massa pura.] A kind of sweet bread or biscuit, such as we now call a macaroon; a sort of confection.

Along whose ridge such bones are met,
Like comfits round in marchpane set. Sidney.

Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

This marchpane is very good to procure sleep, and it refresheth and nourisheth the body withal.
Ferrand on Love Melancholy, (1640,) p. 362.

MA'RCID. adj. [marcidus, Latin; lean; pining; withered.

A burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adustion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever. Harvey.

He on his own fish pours the noblest oil;
That to your marcid dying herbs assign'd,
By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind. Dryden.

MA'RCOUR n. s. [marcor, Latin.] Leanness; the state of withering; waste of flesh.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of venery in some, the extenuation and marcour in others, it much abridgeth our days. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A marcour is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure. Harvey.

MARD.* See MERD.

MARE. n. s. [maɲe, Saxon.]

1. The female of a horse.

A pair of coursers born of heavenly breed,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial sire,
By substituting mares, produc'd on earth,
Whose wombs conceiv'd a more than mortal birth. Dryden.

2. [from mara, the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stagnation, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.

Mab, his merry queen by night,
Bestrides young folks that lie upright,
In elder times the mare that hight,
Which plagues them out of measure. Drayton, Nymphid.

Mushrooms cause the incubus, or the mare in the stomach.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MARE.* Used for more in the north of England. [maɲe, Sax.]

MA'RESCHAL.† n. s. [mareschal, French, derived by most etymologists from mere, Teut. equus, equa, a horse or mare, and scalc, a servant, and so came to denominate the distinguished officer called master of the horse, and thence a commander in chief. See MARSHALL.] A chief commander of an army.

O William, may thy arms advance,
That he may lose Dinant next year,
And so be mareschal of France. Prior.

MA'RGARITE.† n. s. [margarita, Latin; marguerite, French.] A pearl.

Like to a marchaunt that seketh gode margaritis.
Wicliffe, St. Matt. xiii.

The one, the margarite or pearl; the other, the cabinet or ark to keep this jewell. Bp. King, Vine Palatine, (1614,) p. 6.

Silver is the second metal, and signifies purity; among the planets it holdeth with luna, among precious stones with the margarite or pearl. Peacham on Blazoning.

MA'RGARITES. n. s. [bellis.] An herb. Ainsworth.

MARGE.
MA'RGENT. } n. s. [margo, Latin; marge, French.]
MA'RGIN.

Of his sevenfolded shield away it took. Spenser, F. Q.

Never since
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
Or on the beachy margent of the sea. Shakspeare.

An airy crowd came rushing where he stood,
Which fill'd the margin of the fatal flood. Dryden, Æn.

2. The edge of a page left blank, or filled with a short note.

As much love in rhime,
As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper
Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all. Shakspeare.

Reconcile those two places, which both you and the margins of our Bibles acknowledge to be parallel. Hammond.

He knows in law, nor text, nor margent. Swift.

3. The edge of a wound or sore.

All the advantage to be gathered from it is only from the evenness of its margin, the purpose will be as fully answered by keeping that under only. Sharp, Surgery.

To MA'RGENT.* } v. a. [from the noun.]
To MA'RGIN.

1. To mark or note in the margin of a book.

I present it in one whole entire hymne, distinguishing it only by succession of yeares, which I have margented through the whole storie. Mir. for Mag. p. 774.

2. To border.

Its water was clear and limpid, and beautifully margin'd with the tender grass. Bourne, Antiq. of the Comm. People, p. 65.

MA'RGINAL. adj. [marginal, French; from margin.] Placed, or written on the margin.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of these words than pope Leo himself expoundeth them, whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

What remarks you find worthy of your riper observation, note with a marginal star, as being worthy of your second year's review. Watts, Logick.

MA'RGINALLY.* adv. [from marginal.] In the margin of the book.

Such quotations of places to be marginally set down, as shall serve for the fit reference of one scripture to another.

In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.
— I aim'd so near when I suppos'd you lov'd.
— A right good marksman. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Whom nothing can procure,
When the wide world runs bias from his will,
To writhe his limbs, and share, not mend the ill:
This is the marksman, safe and sure,
Who still is right, and prays to be so still. Herbert.

An ordinary marksman may know certainly when he shoots less wide at what he aims. Dryden.

2. One who cannot write his name, but makes his mark or sign for it.

In the original Solemn League and Covenant, which hath been lately discovered, and is now in the British Museum, there are abundance of marksmen, all of whom, from their abhorrence of popery at that time, leave the cross unfinished, and sign in the shape of the letter T.
Nicolson and Burn, Hist. of Cumberland, (1777,) p. 324.

MARL. n. s. [marl, Welsh; mergel, Dutch; marga, Latin; marle, marne, Fr. in Saxon, meȝ is marrow, with an allusive signification, marl being the fatness of the earth.]

Marl is a kind of clay, which is become fatter, and of a more enriching quality, by a better fermentation, and by its having lain so deep in the earth as not to have spent or weakened its fertilizing quality by any product. Marl is supposed to be much of the nature of chalk, and is believed to be fertile from its salt and oily quality. Quincy.

We understand by the term marls simple native earths, less heavy than the boles, or clays, not soft and unctuous to the touch, nor ductile while moist, dry and crumbly between the fingers, and readily diffusible in water. Hill.

Marl is the best compost, as having most fatness, and not heating the ground too much. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Uneasy steps
Over the burning marl, not like those steps
On heaven's azure. Milton, P. L.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow. Shakspeare.

The French king would have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception, that he should not marry her himself. Bacon.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do better please God than some virgins in their state of virginity: they, by giving great example of conjugal affection, by preserving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, please God in a higher degree than those virgins whose piety is not answerable to their opportunities. Taylor.

I propose that Palamon shall be,
In marriage join'd with beauteous Emily. Dryden.

Ma'rriage is often used in composition.

In a late draught of marriage-articles, a lady stipulated with her husband, that she shall be at liberty to patch on which side she pleases. Addison, Spect.

I by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur claim this land for mine. Shakspeare.

To these whom death again did wed,
This grave's the second marriage-bed:
For though the hand of fate could force
'Twixt soul and body a divorce,
It could not sever man and wife,
Because they both liv'd but one life. Crashaw.

There on his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.

Thou shalt come into the marriage-chamber. Tob. vi. 16.

Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wont to endear affection, could fetter his fickleness; but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to wife Baccha, of whom she complained. Sidney.

Virgin, awake! the marriage-hour is nigh. Pope.

Give me, to live and die,
A spotless maid, without the marriage-tie. Dryden.

Ma'rriageable.✝ adj. [from marriage.]

Thus have you shunn'd the married state. Dryden.

MA'RROW. n. s. [mepȝ, Saxon; smerr, Erse; smergh, Scottish.]

All the bones of the body which have any considerable thickness have either a large cavity, or they are spongious, and full of little cells; in both the one and the other there is an oleagenous substance, called marrow, contained in proper vesicles or membranes, like the fat: in the larger bones this fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small bladders, and enters some narrow passages, which lead to some fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supple the fibres of the bones, and render them less apt to break. Quincy.

Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring. Shakspeare.

The skull hath brains as a kind of marrow within it: the back-bone hath one kind of marrow, and other bones of the body hath another: the jaw-bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon.

Pamper'd and edified their zeal
With marrow puddings many a meal. Hudibras.

He bit the dart, and wrench'd the wood away,
The point still buried in the marrow lay. Addison, Ov.

Ma'rrow.✝ In the Scottish dialect, to this day, a fellow, companion, or associate, as also an equal match; he met with his marrow; from mari, husband, French. Dr. Johnson. — It is also a word of the north of England. "These gloves or shoes are not marrows, i. e. are not fellows." Coles, Ray, and Grose.]

Though buying and selling doth wonderful wel,
Yet chopping and changing I cannot commend
With theef or his marrow for fear of il end. Tusser.

To Ma'rrow.* v. a. To fill as it were with marrow and fatness; to glut.

What mean these strict reformers thus to spend their hour-glasses, and bawl against our harmless cups? to call our meetings riots, and brand our civil mirth with styles of loose intemperance? whilst they can sit at a sister's feast, devour and gormandize beyond excess, and wipe the guilt from off their marrowed mouths, and clothe their surfeits in the long fustian robes of a tedious grace! Quarles, Judg. and Mercy, The Drunkard.

Ma'rrowbone.✝ n. s. [bone and marrow.]

1. Bone boiled for the marrow.

A cook they hadden with them for the nones,
To boile the chickenes and the marie bones. Chaucer, T. C. Prol.

2. In burlesque language, the knees. Dr. Johnson.— I'll bring him down upon his marrow-bones, that is, I'll make him bend his knees as he does to the Virgin Mary. See also Marry. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

What men could have held laughing to have seen an Egyptian on his maribones adoring a dog, or praying to an oxe? Lightfoot, Miscell. (1629,) p. 182.

Upon this he fell down upon his marrowbones, and begged of Jupiter to give him a pair of horns. L'Estrange.

Down on your marrowbones, upon your allegiance; and make an acknowledgement of your offences; for I will have ample satisfaction. Dryden, Span Friar.

MA'RROWFAT. n. s. A kind of pea.

MA'RROWISH.* adj. [from marrow.] Of the nature of marrow.

The brain is a soft, marrowish, and white substance. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 19.

MA'RROWLESS. adj. [from marrow.] Void of marrow.

Avaunt!
Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

MA'RROWY.* adj. [from marrow.] Pithy; full of strength or sap. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

MA'RRY.* interj. A term of asseveration in common use; which was originally, in popish times, a mode of swearing by the Virgin Mary, q. d. by Mary. Brand.

Mary, I defy that false monk dan John. Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

Cal. Wilt thou be pleas'd
To hearken once again the suit I made thee?
Ste. Marry will I: kneel and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Marry, once before he won it of me with false dice. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

The zodiacke of his life is like that of the sun; marry, not half so glorious. Overbury, Prisoner.

How do you like me now?
—— Like you? marry — I don't know. Southerne, Oroonoko.

To MA'RRY. v. a. [marier, French; maritor, Lat.]

1. To join a man and woman; as performing the rite.

What! shall the curate control me? Tell him, that he shall marry the couple himself. Gay, What d'ye call it.

2. To dispose of in marriage.

When Augustus consulted with Mecænas about the marriage of his daughter Julia, Mecænas took the liberty to tell him, that he must either marry his daughter to Agrippa, or take away his life; there was no third way, he had made him so great. Bacon, Ess.

3. To take for husband or wife.

You'd think it strange if I should marry her. Shakspeare.

As a mother shall she meet him, and receive him as a wife married of a virgin. Ecclus. xv. 2.

To MA'RRY. v. n. To enter into the conjugal state.

He hath my good will,
And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. Shakspeare.

Let them marry to whom they think best. Num. xxxvi. 6.

Virgil concludes with the death of Turnus; for after that difficulty was removed, Æneas might marry, and establish the Trojans. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

MARS.* n. s. [Latin.]

1. One of the planets.

Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens,
So in the earth to this day is not known. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

2. Among chymists, the term for iron.

MARSH, MARS, MAS, } are derived from the Saxon merc, a fen, or fenny place. Gibson's Camden.

MARSH. n. s. [merc, Sax. See MARISH.] A fen; a bog; a swamp; a watery tract of land.

In their courses make that round,
In meadows and in marshes found,
Of them so call'd the fayry ground,
Of which they have the keeping Drayton, Nymphid.

Worms for colour and shape, alter even as the ground out of which they are got; as the marsh worm and the stag worm Walton, Angler.

We may see in more conterminous climates great variety in the people thereof; the up-lands in England yield strong, sinewy, hardy men; the marsh-lands, men of large and high stature. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Your low meadows and marsh-lands you need not lay up till April, except the spring be very wet, and your marshes very poachy. Mortimer, Husbandry.

MARSH-MALLOW. n. s. [althæa, Latin.] It is in all respects like the mallow, but its leaves are more soft and woolly. Miller.

MARSH-MARIGOLD. n. s. [populago, Latin.] This flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose, in the middle of which rises the pointal, which becomes a membranaceous fruit, in which there are several cells, for the most part bent downwards, collected into little heads and full of seeds. Miller.

And set soft hyacinths with iron-blue,
To shade marsh-marigolds of shining hue. Dryden.

MA'RSHAL.† n. s. [mareschal, Fr. See MARESCHAL. Serenius calls it "Antiq. Franc. vox, à Goth. mar, equus, and skall vel skale, servus, administrator." So Selden: "The name of marshal or mareschal is agreed to descend from two Teutonick words, (which was the same with the old French,) mare, which signified as much as our general name of horse, and scalck, that in the old German and Gothick tongues signified a servant." Duello, ch. 9. "Marshal was at first the name of a smith, farrier, or one that dressed horses; but it climbed by degrees to that height, that the chiefest commanders of the gendarmery and militia of France are come to be called marshals; which about a hundred years since were but two in all, whereas now they are twelve." Howell, Lett. iv. 19.]

1. The chief officer of arms.

The duke of Suffolk claims
To be high steward; next the duke of Norfolk
To be earl marshal. Shakspeare.

2. An officer who regulates combats in the lists.

Dares their pride presume against my laws,
As in a listed field to fight their cause?
Unask'd the royal grant; no marshal by,
As kingly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

3. Any one who regulates rank or order at a feast, or any other assembly.

Through the hall there walked to and fro
A jolly yeoman, marshal of the same,
Whose name was Appetite; he did bestow
Both guests and meats, whenever in they came,
And knew them how to order without blame. Spenser, F. Q.

4. An harbinger; a pursuivant; one who goes before a prince to declare his coming, and provide entertainment.

Her face, when it was fairest, had been but as a marshal to lodge, the love of her in his mind, which now was so well placed as it needed no help of outward harbinger. Sidney.

5. A commander in chief of military forces.

Marshal Harcourt and the duke of Berwick were preparing to go into Alsace and Dauphiné, but their troops were in want of all manner of necessaries. Tatler, No. 5.

To MA'RSHAL. v. a [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire, that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or sound. Bacon.

It is as inconceivable how it should be the directrix of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should marshal an army. Glanville, Scepsis.

Anchises look'd not with so pleas'd a face,
In numb'ring o'er his future Roman race,
And marshalling the heroes of his name,
As in their order, next to light they came. Dryden.

2. To lead as an harbinger.

Thou marshal'st me the way that I was going. Shakspeare.

MA'RSHALLER. n. s. [from marshal.] One that arranges; one that ranks in order.

Dryden was the great refiner of English poetry, and the best marshaller of words. Trapp, Pref. to the Æneis.

MA'RSHY. adj. [from marsh.]

1. Boggy; wet; fenny; swampy.

Though here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields. Dryden, Virg.

It is a distemper of such as inhabit marshy, fat, low, moist, soils, near stagnating water. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. Produced in marshes.

Feed
With delicates of leaves and marshy weed. Dryden.

MART. n. s. [contracted from market.]

1. A place of publick traffick.

Christ could not suffer that the temple should serve for a place of mart, nor the apostle of Christ that the church should be made an inn. Hooker.

If any born at Ephesus
Be seen at Syracusan marts and fairs,
He dies. Shakspeare.

Ezechiel, in the description of Tyre, and the exceeding trade that it had with all the East, as the only mart town, reciteth both the people with whom they commerce, and also what commodities every country yielded. Raleigh.

Many come to a great mart of the best horses. Temple.

The French, since the accession of the Spanish monarchy, supply with cloth the best mart we had in Europe. Addison.

2. Bargain; purchase and sale.

I play a merchant's part,
And venture madly on a desperate mart. Shakspeare.

3. Letters of mart. See MARK.

To MART.† v. a. [from the noun.] To traffick; to buy or sell.

Sooth when I was young I wou'd have ransack'd
The pedlar's silken treasury, you've let him go,
And nothing marted with him. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Cassius, you yourself,
Do sell and mart your offices for gold
To undeservers. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Poor brats were slaves, of bondmen that were born,
And marted, sold. Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599,) i. 2.

Your christening of bells, marting of pardons, tossing of beads. Bp. Hall, Epist. D. i. Ep. 1.

To MART.* v. n. To trade dishonourably.

If he shall think it fit,
A saucy stranger, in his court, to mart
As in a stew. Shakspeare, Cymb.

MA'RTAGON.* n. s. A kind of lily.

The roscid and honey drops observable in the flowers of martagon. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 20.

To MA'RTEL.* v. n. [martellare, Italian; martelo, low Lat. marteler, Fr. from malleus, Lat. a hammer.] To strike; to make a blow.

Her dreadful weapon she to him addrest,
Which on his helmet martelled so hard,
That made him low incline his lofty crest,
And bow'd his batter'd visour to his brest. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 42.

MA'RTEN. } MA'RTERN. } n. s. [marte, martre, Fr. martes, Lat.]

1. A large kind of weesel, whose fur is much valued.

2. [martelet, Fr.] A kind of swallow that builds in houses; a martlet.

A churchwarden, to express St. Martin's in the Fields, caused to be engraved, on the communion cup, a martin, a bird like a swallow, sitting upon a mole-hill between two trees. Peacham on Blazoning.

MA'RTIAL. adj. [martial, French; martialis, Lat.]

1. Warlike; fighting; given to war; brave.

Into my feeble breast
Come gently, but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troopes thou dost infest,
And hearts of great heroes dost enrage. Spenser, F. Q.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them. Chapman, Iliad.

It hath seldom been seen, that the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise; whereby it is manifest, that the northern tract of the world is the more martial region. Bacon, Ess.

His subjects call'd aloud for war;
But peaceful kings o'er martial people set,
Each other's poize and counterbalance are. Dryden.

2. Having a warlike show; suiting war.

See
His thousands, in what martial equipage
They issue forth! Steel bows and shafts their arms,
Of equal dread in flight or in pursuit. Milton, P. R.

When our country's cause provokes to arms,
How martial musick every bosom warms. Pope.

3. Belonging to war; not civil; not according to the rules or practice of peaceable government.

Let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

They proceeded in a kind of martial justice with enemies offering them their law before they drew their sword. Bacon, Holy War.

4. Borrowing qualities from the planet Mars.

The natures of the fixed stars are astrologically differenced by the planets, and esteemed martial or jovial according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown.

5. Having parts or properties of iron, which is called Mars by the chymists.

MA'RTIALISM.* n. s. [from martial.] Bravery; chivalry; warlike exercises.

Such a young Alexander for affecting martialism and chivalrie; such a young Josiah for religion and piety. Prince, Creation of the Prince of Wales, (1610,) D. 2.

MA'RTIALIST.† n. s. [from martial.] A warriour; a fighter.

While those bold martialists, that for their fame
In skill of warre-affaires were so renown'd,
Did by their swords immortalize her name. Mir. for Mag. p. 853.

He was a swain, whom all the Graces kist,
A brave, heroick, worthy martialist. Browne, Brit. Past. i. 5.

He was indeed one of the queen's martialists, and did very good service in Ireland. Naunton, Fragm. Regalia, of Ld. Sussex.

Many brave adventurous spirits fell for love of her; amongst others the high-hearted martialist, who first lost his hands, then one of his chiefest limbs, and lastly his life. Howell.

MA'RTINET.† } MA'RTLET. } n. s. [martinet, French.]

1. A kind of swallow. Barret notices martinet in this sense, Alv. 1580.

This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet does approve
By his lov'd mansionry, that heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here. No jutting frieze,
Buttress, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

2. In military language, a martinet is a precise or strict disciplinarian; so called from an officer of that name, whom Voltaire describes as the regulator of the French infantry under Louis the fourteenth. It is modern in English, and has the accent on the last syllable.

MA'RTINGAL. n. s. [martingale, French.] It is a broad strap made fast to the girths under the belly of a horse, and runs between the two legs to fasten the other end, under the noseband of the bridle. Harris.

MA'RTINMAS.† n. s. [Mapꞇinur-mæꞅꞅa, Saxon; Martin and mass.] The feast of St. Martin; the eleventh of November: commonly corrupted to martelmass or martlemass.

Martelmas beefe doth bear good tacke,
When countrey folke do dainties lacke. Tusser, Husb.

The Turks their butchers, and themselves the martinmass beeves. Fuller, Holy War, p. 135.

MA'RTNETS. n. s. They are small lines fastened to the leetch of the sail, to bring that part of the leetch which is next to the yard-arm close up to the yard, when the sail is to be furled. Bailey.

MA'RTYR.† n. s. [maꞃꞇẏꞃ, Saxon, μάρτυς, Greek.] One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn; if not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr. King Charles.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced. Brown.

Nearer heav'n his virtues shone more bright,
Like rising flames expanding in their height,
The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight. Dryden.

To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ; but the witnessing of the truth was then so generally attended with persecution, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death. South, Serm.

The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered. Addison on the Christian Religion.

Socrates,
Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thomson.

To MA'RTYR.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put to death for virtue or true profession.

The primitive Christians — before the face of their enemies would acknowledge no other title but that, though hated, revil'd, tormented, martyred for it. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

2. To torment; to murder; to destroy.

Me, and wretched Palamon,
That Theseus martireth in prison. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Amoret, whose gentle heart
Thou martyrest with sorrow and with smart. Spenser, F. Q.

You could not beg for grace.
Hark wretches, how I mean to martyr you:
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shakspeare.

If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.

Martyr'd with the gout. Pope.

MA'RTYRDOM. n. s. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr; the honour of a martyr; testimony born to truth by voluntary submission to death.

If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom? Hooker.

Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

Herod, whose unblest
Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness? tore
A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,
The blooms of martyrdom. Crashaw.

Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd; chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havock fabled knights
In battles feign'd; the better fortitude
Of patience and heroic martyrdom
Unsung. Milton, P. L.

What mists of providence are these,
So saints, by supernatural power set free,
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.

To MA'RTYRIZE.* v. a. [martyriser, Fr.] To offer as a sacrifice.

To her my heart I nightly martyrize. Spenser, Colin Clout.

MA'RTYROLOGE.* n. s. [martyrologe, Fr. μάρτυς, a martyr, and λόγος, discourse, narration.] A catalogue or register of martyrs.

Add that old record from an ancient martyrologe of the church of Canterbury. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 335.

MARTYROLO'GICAL.* adj. [from martyrology.] Registering as in a martyrology; containing a list.

If once you render yourself a pupil to whining love, he will read you such contrary politicks, as shall persuade you to make a league with misery, and embrace beggary for a friend: and after this you are capable of no higher honour, than to be registered in one of his martyrological ballads, and sung by dairy-maids to a pitiful tune. Osborne, Advice to a Son, (1658,) p. 70

MARTYRO'LOGIST.† n. s. [martyrologiste, French.] A writer of martyrology.

It is recorded by Fox, the martyrologist, as a memorable occurrence. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 436.

MARTYRO'LOGY. n. s. [martyrologie, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.] A register of martyrs.

In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out. Stillingfleet.

MA'RVEL.† n. s. [merveille, French.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.

A marvel it were, if a man could espy, in the whole Scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

I am scarce in breath, my lord.
— No marvel, you have so bestirr'd your valour; you cowardly rascal! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

No marvel
My lord protector's hawks do towre so well. Shakspeare.

The praises of knightly heroism, the marvels of romantic fiction, and the complaints of love. Warton.

MA'RVEL of Peru.† A flower. Ainsworth.

The marvel of the world comes next in view,
At home, but stil'd the Marvel of Peru. Tate's Cowley.

To MA'RVEL. v. n. [merveiller, French.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.

You make me marvel. Shakspeare.

Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. Shakspeare.

— The army marvelled at it. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The countries marvelled at thee for thy songs, proverbs, and parables. Ecclus. xlvii. 17.

MA'RVELLOUS.† adj. [merveilleux, French.]

1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing.

She has a marvellous white hand, I must confess. Shakspeare.

This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. Psalms.

2. Surpassing credit.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

3. The marvellous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.

4. Formerly used adverbially for exceedingly, wonderfully.

He hath shewed me marvellous great kindness in a strong city. Ps. xxxi. 23.

She finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

MA'RVELLOUSLY. adv. [from marvellous.] Wonderfully; strangely.

You look not well, seignior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd. Shakspeare.

The encouragement of his too late successes, with which he was marvellously elated. Clarendon.

MA'RVELLOUSNESS. n. s. [from marvellous.] Wonderfulness; strangeness; astonishingness.

MA'RY-BUD.* n. s. The marigold.

And winking mary-buds begin
To ope their golden eyes. Shakspeare, Cymb.

MA'SCLE.* n. s. An heraldick figure; a lozenge as it were perforated.

To MA'SCULATE.* v. a. [from masculus, Latin. This is an old and proper word, in opposition to our emasculate, to effeminate.] To make strong. Cockeram.

MA'SCULINE.† adj. [masculin, French; masculinus, Latin.]

1. Male; not female.

Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long! Shakspeare.

His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements, exercising their operation upon nature being the feminine. Peacham on Drawing.

O! why did God,
Creator wise! that peopled highest heaven
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? Milton, P. L.

2. Resembling man; virile; powerful; not soft; not effeminate.

Queen Anne, your mother, a lady of a great and masculine mind. Wotton, Paneg. on K. Ch. I. Rem. p. 144.

This has altogether as masculine an influence upon the manners and practices of men. South, Serm. ix. 76.

You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of Virtue. Addison.

Notwithstanding his eloquent and masculine defence, he [the earl of Surrey] was condemned. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 9.

3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.

The English language, with singular propriety, following nature alone, applies the distinction of masculine and feminine only to the names of animals; all the rest are neuter. Lowth.

MA'SCULINELY. adv. [from masculine.] Like a man.

Aurelia tells me, you have done most masculinely,
And play the orator. B. Jonson, Catiline.

MA'SCULINENESS. n. s. [from masculine.] Mannishness; male figure or behaviour.

MASH.† n. s. [masche, Dutch.]

1. The space between the threads of a net, commonly written mesh.

To defend against the stings of bees, have a net knit with so small mashes, that a bee cannot get through. Mortimer.

2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguished, or confused body. [from mischen, Dutch, to mix, or mascher, French.]

I have made a fair mash on't!
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

3. A mixture for a horse.

Put half a peck of ground malt into a pail, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm: this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour. Farrier's Dict.

When mares foal, they feed them with mashes, and other moist food. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To MASH. v. a. [mascher, French.]

1. To beat into a confused mass.

The pressure would be intolerable, and they would even mash themselves and all things else apieces. More.

To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without mashing the meat. Swift, Dir. to the Footman.

2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.

What was put in the first mashing-tub draw off, as also that liquor in the second mashing-tub. Mortimer, Husbandry.

MA'SHY.* adj. [from mash.] Produced by crushing, or pressure.

Then comes the crushing swain; the country floats,
And foams unbounded with the mashy flood,
That by degrees fermented, and refin'd,
Round the rais'd nations pours the cup of joy.
Thomson, Autumn.

MASK. n. s. [masque, French.]

1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.

Now Love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prisoner. Sidney.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And throw her sun-expelling mask away;
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakspeare.

Could we suppose that a mask represented never so naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.

2. Any pretence or subterfuge.

Too plain thy nakedness of soul espy'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide,
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Prior.

3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night. Shakspeare.

4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild bustle.

They in the end agreed,
That at a masque and common revelling,
Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed. Daniel.

This thought might lead me through the world's vain mask,
Content, though blind, had I no other guide. Milton, Sonnet.

5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick style without attention to rules or probability.

Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peacham.

To MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]

1. To disguise with a mask or visor.

What will grow of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.

'Tis not my blood
Wherein thou see'st me masked. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakspeare.

The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw an antique statue masked, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the Eunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.

2. To cover: to hide.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
As when a piece of wanton lawn,
A thin aerial veil is drawn
O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
More sweetly shows the blushing bride:
A soul whose intellectual beams
No mists do mask, no lazy steams. Crashaw.

To MASK.† v. n.

1. To revel; to play the mummer.

Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;
What masking stuff's here! Shakspeare.

These ladies maskers toke each of them one of the Frenchemen to daunce, and to maske. Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame. Prior.

2. To be disguised any way.

The shadie woods, in which the birds to build their nests were seene,
Whose waving heads in air shot up were crown'd with youthfull greene,
Now clad in coate of motlie hue did maske in poore array;
Rough Boreas with his blustering blasts had blown their leaves away. Mir. for Mag. p. 555.

MA'SKER. n. s. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.

Tell false Edward,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel it with him and his new bride. Shakspeare.

Let the scenes abound with light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down. Bacon.

The maskers come late, and I think will stay,
Like fairies, till the cock crow them away. Donne.

MA'SKERY.* n. s. [from masker.] The dress or disguise of a masker.

Methinks I hear swart Martius cry,
Souping along in war's feign'd maskerie,
By Lais' starric front he'll forthwith die!
Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599,) iii. 8.

MA'SKHOUSE.* n. s. [mask and house.] Place where masks are performed. Masks were so much the fashion in the times of the first James and Charles, that maskhouse was then probably as common as playhouse.

If it were but some maskhouse, wherein a glorious (though momentany) show were to be presented, neither white staves nor halberts could keep you out. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

MA'SLIN.† adj. [corrupted from miscellane. Dr. Johnson.—It is more probably from the Sax. mistlic, various; mistus, Lat. mixed; Teut. masteluyn, farrago. See MASTLIN.] Composed of various kinds; as, maslin bread, made of wheat and rye.

MA'SON.† n. s. [maçon, French; machio, low Latin. Latin etymologists refer the word to machina, a scaffold for building. Sheringham, our countryman, in his Origines Britannicæ, as Serenius has also observed, would carry it to the Scyth. mossyn, ædes, a house; and M. Huet has also offered mas, an old word for a house; but Du Cange considers maceria, an enclosure of stone, as the origin of the word.]

1. A builder with stone.

Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth. Wotton.

A mason that makes a wall meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work. More.

2. One of a society bearing the epithet of free and accepted; of which the origin is pretended to be as early as the building of Solomon's temple, and the insignia are principally a builder's tools.

The lawyers, like the free-masons, may be supposed to take an oath not to tell the secret. Ld. Halifax.

I reckon, next week we shall hear you are a free-mason. Gray to Walpole.

MASO'NICK.* adj. [from mason.] Relating to the society of free-masons.

MA'SONRY.† n. s. [maçonnerie, French.] The craft or performance of a mason.

Wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry.
Shakspeare, Sonnet 55.

MA'SORAH.* n. s. [masora, Lat. from the Hebrew; which is "from masar, he delivered; spoken of things which men commit to the charge of another, yet reserving a power to have it recovered again." Mather, Vindic. of the Holy Bible, 1723, p. 256.] In the Jewish theology, a work on the Bible by several learned rabbins.

These sections of the law are quoted, by the masorah, instead of chapters. Mather, Vind. of the H. Bible, p. 60.

The masorah is a critical learning of the wise men among the ancient Jews, relating to the Hebrew text of the Old Testament; by which the verses, words, and letters of the text are numbered; and every variety is taken notice of in the proper place, in order to preserve its genuine reading. Ibid. p. 256.

MASORE'TICAL.* adj. [from masorah.] Belonging to the masorah; denoting the labour of those who composed that work.

They observed, that these scribes had noticed five words, where vau is redundant. This masoretical note is mentioned in the Talmud. Mather, Vind. of the H. Bible, p. 258.

MA'SORITE.* n. s. [masoretha, Lat. from masorah.] One of those who composed the masorah.

The Masorites extended their care to the vowels, that none might irregularly point the divine books; they did the same as to the accents. Mather, Vind. of the H. Bible, p. 257.

The Masorites seem to have been a succession of criticks, professing a traditionary science of reading the Scripture, as the Cabalists did of interpreting it.
Gray on the Old Test. Introduct. n.

MASQUERA'DE.† n. s. [not from masque, French, as Dr. Johnson states it, but from mascarade; or rather from the Italian mascherata, mascarata, as that is from the Arab. mascara, buffoonery. Hence our old word was masquerada, and meant a ridiculous exhibition. Dr. Johnson cites, under the first sense, only the example from Pope.]

1. A diversion in which the company is masked; a piece of mummery.

The name only being left to serve for a part of the masquerada of an high mass.
Harmar, Transl. of Beza, (1587,) p. 134.

All this statelie masquerada. Ibid. p. 155.

What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treacherous friend, and daring spark,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark. Pope.

2. A kind of Spanish diversion on horseback.

The masquerade is an exercise they learned from the Moors; performed by squadrons of horse, seeming to charge each other with great fierceness, with bucklers in their left hands, and a kind of cane in their right. Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 223.

3. Disguise.

I was upon the frolick this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest, is forced to gain admittance in disguise, and court us in masquerade.
Felton on the Classicks.

To MASQUERA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go in disguise.

A freak took an ass in the head, and he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin. L'Estrange.

2. To assemble in masks.

I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.

To MA'SQUERADE.* v. a. To put into disguise.

His next shift therefore is to change its [sin's] complexion, to masquerade vice, and to make it wear the habit and shape of that virtue it most resembles. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 229.

MASQUERA'DER.† n. s. [from masquerade.] A person in a mask; a buffoon.

The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masqueraders under the vizor of friends. L'Estrange.

The late masquerader in the Haymarket did not, could not, more effectually expose them both.
Bp. Nicolson to Bp. Hoadly, Collect. of Papers, p. 4.

The dreadful masquerader, thus equipt,
Out sallied on adventures. Young, Night Th. 5.

MASS.† n. s. [masse, French; massa, Latin.]

1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.

If it were not for these principles, the bodies of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton, Opt.

Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outsides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. A large quantity.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakspeare, Hen VI.

He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Ralegh, Ess.

He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army. Davies on Ireland.

3. Bulk; vast body.

The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.

The whole knowledge of groupes, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the sight. Dryden.

At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;
They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.

Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison, Freeholder.

5. Gross body; the general; the bulk.

Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon, Ess.

Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryden.

The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curio. Swift.

If there is not sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

6. [missa, Latin; mæꞅꞅe, Saxon; as mæꞅꞅe-boc, mæꞅꞅe-bꞃeohꞇ, the mass-book, mass-bread. "Missa idem ac missio, sicut remissam pro remissione dicebant antiqui. — Ex allatis satis constat missam à missione dici, et populi dimissionem significare. Frustra nititur Genebrardus hanc missæ etymologiam convellere quasi nimis frigidam, et modicæ reverentiæ erga tantum mysterium." V. Cardinal. Bona de Rebus Liturg. p. 6.] The service of the Romish church at the celebration of the eucharist: at first used for the dismission or sending away the people, either before or after the communion.

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert herein. Peacham on Drawing.

He infers, that then Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.

This is to prevent the solitary masses, which had been introduced by the church of Rome, where the priest says mass, and receives the sacrament himself, though there be none to communicate with him. Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. ch. 6. § 30.

7. A festival. [mæꞅꞅe, Saxon.] See LAMMAS. Retained also in Candlemas, Michaelmas, and Martinmas.

To MASS.† v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.

He was accused of his cardinals, that he massed without consecration. Bale, Acts of Eng. Vot. P. i. (1560,) fol. 59. b.

Abolishinge or putting downe the massing sacrifices for the dead. Hunting of Purgatory, (1561,) fol. 5.

He cannot love the Lord Jesus with his heart, which lendeth one ear to his apostles, and another to false apostles; which can brook to see a mingle-mangle of religion and superstition, ministers and massing priests, light and darkness, truth and errour, traditions and Scriptures. Hooker, Serm. 1. On St. Jude.

Their massing furniture they took from the law, lest having an altar and a priest, they should want vestments. Hooker.

To MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.

They feared the French might, with filling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven. Hayward.

MA'SSACRE. n. s. [massacre, French, from mazzare, Italian.]

1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.

Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men. Milton, P. L.
Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

2. Murder.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

To MA'SSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, French, from the noun.] To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family. Shakspeare.

Christian religion, now crumbled into fractions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not countermine us, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love. Decay of Chr. Piety.

After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterbury.

MA'SSACRER.* n. s. [massacreur, Fr.] One who commits butchery, or indiscriminate destruction.

Jurors and presidents of revolutionary tribunals, regicides, assassins, massacrers. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

MA'SSER.* n. s. [from mass.] A priest who celebrates mass. Obsolete.

A good masser, and so forth; but no true gospel-preacher. Bale, Yet a Course, (1543,) fol. 38.

MA'SSETER.* n. s. [masseter, Fr. Cotgrave; from the Gr. μασσάομαι, to eat.] A muscle of the lower jaw.

One wonderful pair of muscles, called the masseters, — inserted into this lower mandible, and so are able to move it upward; to the right, to the left; forward, backward, and consequently round about; and so performing that action which we call mastication or chewing. Smith on Old Age, p. 77.

The strength of the crural and masseter-muscles in lions and tigers. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

MA'SSICOT. n. s. [French.]

Massicot is ceruss calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold-coloured massicot still more. Trevoux.

MA'SSINESS.† } n. s. [from massy, massive; Fr. mas-
MA'SSIVENESS. } sivité, which Cotgrave renders massiveness; but the English word is also in the older dictionary of Huloet.] Weight; bulk; ponderousness.

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hakewill.

The block of stone in which the basin of immersion is excavated, is of unusual massiness.
Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 15.

MA'SSIVE. } adj. [massif, French.] Heavy:
MA'SSY. } weighty; ponderous; bulky; continuous.

If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine. Gov. of the Tongue.

No sideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes dress'd. Congreve, Juv.

The more gross and massive parts of the terrestrial globe, the strata of stone, owe their order to the deluge.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

If these liquors or glasses were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton, Opt.

The intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war. Pope, Statius.

MAST.† n. s. [mast, mât, French; mæꞅꞇ, Saxon.]

1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden, Hom.

2. The fruit of the oak and beech. It has in this sense no plural termination. [Saxon, mæꞅꞇe, nuts, berries, acorns, by metathesis from mats, Gothick, food. Lye, edit. Manning.]

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips:
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Shakspeare, Timon.

Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some mast. L'Estrange, Fab.

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit. Temple, Miscell.

Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they brouze,
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs. Dryden.

MA'STED. adj. [from mast.] Furnished with masts.

MA'STER.† n. s. [meester, Dutch; maistre, French; magister, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Saxon, mæꞅꞇeꞃ, used as early as in the reign of Alfred, Dr. Jamieson says; and may be from mæꞅꞇ, most, greatest, as the Latin magister is evidently from magis, more; thus separating our word from etymological dependence on the Latin.]

1. One who has servants: opposed to man or servant.

But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours, my lord. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Take up thy master. Shakspeare, K. L.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it;
The boy, his clerk, begg'd mine;
And neither man nor master would take aught
But the two rings. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. A director; a governour.

If thou be made the master of a feast, be among them as one of the rest. Ecclus. xxxii. 1.

O thou my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet, and the song. Pope.

3. Owner; proprietor; with the idea of governing.

An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyrick on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetorick in the praise of Bucephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the master. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. A lord; a ruler.

Wisdom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house. Guardian.

There Cæsar, grac'd with both Minervas, shone,
Cæsar, the world's great master, and his own. Pope.

Excuse
The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul:
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity, and to own a master. Philips.

5. Chief; head.

Chief master-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace. Shakspeare.

As a wise master-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. 1 Cor. iii. 10.

The best sets are the heads got from the very tops of the root; the next are the runners, which spread from the master roots. Mortimer, Husbandry.

6. Possessor.

When I have thus made myself master of a hundred thousand drachms, I shall naturally set myself on the foot of a prince, and will demand the grand vizier's daughter in marriage. Addison, Spect.

The duke of Savoy may make himself master of the French dominions on the other side of the Rhone. Addison.

7. Commander of a trading ship.

An unhappy master is he that is made cunning by many shipwrecks; a miserable merchant, that is neither rich nor wise, but after some bankrouts. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

A sailor's wife had chesnuts in her lap;
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' th' Tiger. Shakspeare.

8. One uncontrolled.

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

9. A compellation of respect, formerly; but now generally applied to an inferiour.

Master doctor, you have brought those drugs. Shakspeare.
Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king. Shakspeare.
Masters play here, I will content your pains,
Something that's brief; and bid, good morrow. Shakspeare.

10. A young gentleman.

If gaming does an aged sire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice. Dryden.

Master lay with his bedchamber towards the south sun: miss lodged in a garret, exposed to the north wind. Arbuthnot.

Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are impediments to the diversions of the servants; the remedy is to bribe them that they may not tell tales. Swift.

11. One who teaches; a teacher: correlative to scholar or learner.

Very few men are wise by their own counsel, or learned by their own teaching; for he that was only taught by himself had a fool to his master. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

To the Jews join the Egyptians, the first masters of learning. South.

Masters and teachers should not raise difficulties to their scholars; but smooth their way, and help them forwards. Locke.

12. A man eminently skilful in practice or science.

The great mocking master mock'd not then,
When he said, Truth was buried here below. Davies.

Spenser and Fairfax, great masters of our language, saw much farther into the beauties of our numbers than those who followed. Dryden.

A man must not only be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too; he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own. Dryden.

He that does not pretend to painting, is not touched at the commendation of a master in that profession. Collier.

No care is taken to improve young men in their own language, that they may thoroughly understand, and be masters of it. Locke on Education.

13. A title of dignity in the universities; as, master of arts.

14. An official title in the law: as, master of the rolls; a master in chancery.

To MA'STER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To be a master; to rule; to govern.

Ay, good faith,
And rather father thee, than master thee. Shakspeare.

2. To conquer; to overpower; to subdue.

Thrice blessed they that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage. Shakspeare.

The princes of Germany did not think him sent to command the empire, who was neither able to rule his insolent subjects in England, nor master his rebellious people of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

Then comes some third party, that masters both plaintiff and defendant, and carries away the booty. L'Estrange.

Honour burns in me, not so fiercely bright,
But pale as fires when master'd by the light. Dryden.

Obstinacy and wilful neglects must be mastered, even though it cost blows. Locke on Education.

A man can no more justly make use of another's necessity, than he that has more strength can seize upon a weaker, master him to his obedience, and, with a dagger at his throat, offer him death or slavery. Locke.

The reformation of an habitual sinner is a work of time and patience; evil customs must be mastered and subdued by degrees. Calamy, Serm.

3. To execute with skill.

I do not take myself to be so perfect in the transactions and privileges of Bohemia, as to be fit to handle that part: and I will not offer at that I cannot master. Bacon.

To MA'STER.* v. n. To excel in any thing; to be skilful in practice or science.

They talk of fencing, and the use of arms,
The art of urging and avoiding harms,
The noble science, and the mastering skill
Of making just approaches how to kill. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

MASTER-HAND. n. s. The hand of a man eminently skilful.

Musick resembles poetry, in each
Are nameless graces which no methods teach,
And which a master-hand alone can reach. Pope.

MASTER-JEST. n. s. Principal jest.

Who shall break the master-jest,
And what, and how, upon the rest. Hudibras.

MASTER-KEY. n. s. The key which opens many locks, of which the subordinate keys open each only one.

This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.

MASTER-SINEW. n. s.

The master-sinew is a large sinew that surrounds the hough, and divides it from the bone by a hollow place, where the wind-galls are usually seated, which is the largest and most visible sinew in a horse's body; this oftentimes is relaxed or restrained. Farrier's Dict.

MASTER-STRING. n. s. Principal string.

He touch'd me
Even on the tenderest point; the master-string
That makes most harmony or discord to me.
I own the glorious subject fires my breast. Rowe.

MASTER-STROKE. n. s. Capital performance.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace;
Tell how your search has here eluded been,
How oft amaz'd and ravish'd you have seen,
The conduct, prudence, and stupendous art,
And master-strokes in each mechanick part. Blackmore.

MASTER-TEETH. n. s. [master and teeth.] The principal teeth.

Some living creatures have their master-teeth indented one within another like saws; as lions and dogs. Bacon.

MASTER-TOUCH.* n. s. Capital or principal performance.

I have here only mentioned some master-touches of this admirable piece. Tatler, No. 156.

MASTER-WORK.* n. s. Principal performance.

Here, by degrees, his master-work arose,
Whatever arts and industry can frame. Thomson, Cast. of Indolence, ii. 19.

MA'STERDOM.† n. s. [from master. mægƿeþᵭom, Sax.] Dominion; rule. Not in use.

You shall put
This night's great business into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

MA'STERFUL.* adj. [master and full.]

1. Imperious; using the authority and power of a tyrant, lord, or master; employing violence.

Eithir they [husbands] ben ful of jelousie,
Or masterfull, or lovin novelrie. Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. ii. 756.

The masterful rebels were discomfited. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The hero's blood is not to be controll'd;
Ev'n in a child, 'tis madly masterful. Dryden.

2. Having the skill of a master; artful.

Variety (as both musick and rhetorick teacheth us) erects and rouses an auditory, like the masterful running over many chords and divisions. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

MA'STERLESS.† adj. [from master.]

1. Wanting a master or owner.

The wofull dwarfe, which saw his maister's fall,—
When all was past, took up his forlorne weed;
His mightie armour, missing most at need;
His silver shield, now idle, masterlesse. Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 19.

The foul opinion
You had of her pure honour, gains, or loses,
Your sword or mine; or masterless leave both
To who shall find them. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Where the commodity found hath no owner, it justly falls to the right of the first finder; for both the place and the thing are masterless. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. I. C. 4.

2. Ungoverned; unsubdued.

MA'STERLINESS. n. s. [from masterly.] Eminent skill.

MA'STERLY. adj. [from master.]

1. Suitable to a master; artful; skilful.

As for the warmth of fancy, the masterly figures, and the copiousness of imagination, he has exceeded all others. Dryden.

That clearer strokes of masterly design,
Of wise contrivance, and of judgement shine,
In all the parts of nature we assert,
Than in the brightest works of human art. Blackmore.

A man either discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author every time he peruses him. Addison, Spect.

2. Imperious; with the sway of a master.

MA'STERPIECE. n. s. [master and piece.]

1. Capital performance; any thing done or made with extraordinary skill.

This is the masterpiece, and most excellent part, of the work of reformation, and is worthy of his majesty. Davies.

'Tis done; and 'twas my masterpiece, to work
My safety, 'twixt two dangerous extremes:
Scylla and Charybdis. Denham, Sophy.

Let those consider this who look upon it as a piece of art, and the masterpiece of conversation, to deceive, and make a prey of a credulous and well-meaning honesty. South.

This wonderous masterpiece I fain would see;
This fatal Helen, who can wars inspire. Dryden, Aureng.

The fifteenth is the masterpiece of the whole metamorphoses. Dryden.

In the first ages, when the great souls, and masterpieces of human nature, were produced, men shined by a noble simplicity of behaviour. Addison.

2. Chief excellence.

Beating up of quarters was his masterpiece. Clarendon.

Dissimulation was his masterpiece; in which he so much excelled, that men were not ashamed with being deceived but twice by him. Clarendon.

MA'STERSHIP.† n. s. [from master.]

1. Dominion; rule; power.

2. Superiority; pre-eminence.

For Python slain he Pythian games decreed,
Where noble youths for mastership should strive,
To quoit, to run, and steeds and chariots drive. Dryden.

3. Chief work.

Two youths of royal blood, renown'd in fight,
The mastership of heav'n in face and mind. Dryden.

4. Skill; knowledge.

You were used
To say extremity was the trier of spirits;
That when the sea was calm all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating. Shakspeare, Coriol.

5. A title of ironical respect.

How now, Signior Lawrence? what news with your mastership? Shakspeare.

6. Headship of a college or hospital.

Not unwillingly to accept collegiate masterships in the university, rich lectures in the city. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 3.

Some of the former bishops of Winchester had preferred to it their nephews and kinsmen, not rightfully as to the mastership of an hospital, but as to an ecclesiastical benefice. Lowth, Life of Wykeham, § 3.

MA'STERWORT. n. s. [master, and pypt, Saxon.] A plant.

Masterwort is raised of seeds, or runners from the roots. Mortimer, Husb.

MA'STERY. n. s. [maistrie, French; from master.]

1. Dominion; rule.

If divided by mountains, they will fight for the mastery of the passages of the tops, and for the towns that stand upon the roots. Raleigh, Ess.

2. Superiority; pre-eminence.

If a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully. 2 Tim. ii. 5.

This is the case of those that will try masteries with their superiors, and bite that which is too hard. L'Estrange.

Good men I suppose to live in a state of mortification, under a perpetual conflict with their bodily appetites, and struggling to get the mastery over them. Atterbury.

3. Skill; dexterity.

Chief mast'ry to dissect,
With long and tedious havock, fabled knights,
In battles feign'd. Milton, P. L.

He could attain to a mastery in all languages, and sound the depths of all arts and sciences. Tillotson.

To give sufficient sweetness, a mastery in the language is required: the poet must have a magazine of words, and have the art to manage his few vowels to the best advantage. Dryden.

4. Attainment of skill or power.

The learning and mastery of a tongue being unpleasant in itself, should not be cumbered with other difficulties. Locke.

MA'STFUL. adj. [from mast.]* Abounding in mast, or fruit of oak, beech, or chesnut.

Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastful chesnut mates the skies. Dryden.

MASTICA'TION. n. s. [masticatio, Lat.] The act of chewing.

In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, and thence transferred into the gizzard. Ray on the Creation.

Mastication is a necessary preparation of solid aliment, without which there can be no good digestion. Arbuthnot.

MA'STICATORY. n. s. [masticatoire, Fr.] A medicine to be chewed only, not swallowed.

Remember masticatories for the mouth. Bacon.

Salivation and masticatories evacuate considerably; salivation many pints of phlegm in a day, and very much by chewing tobacco. Floyer on Humours.

MA'STICH.† }
MA'STICK. } n. s. [mastic, Fr.]

1. The lentisk tree; an evergreen of the Greek isles, Italy, and some parts of France. Unnoticed by Dr. Johnson; who confines also the second meaning to the gum of the trees in Scio.

Under what tree sawest thou them companying together? who answered, under a mastick tree. Hist. of Susanna, ver. 54.

The sight of a few date and mastick trees exceedingly refreshing us. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 126.

Knotty pines, fragrant masticks, kingly oaks. Ibid. p. 130.

2. A kind of gum gathered from trees of the same name.

Coriat's report, that mastick is found no where but in Scio, was here refuted. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 126.

This island [Scio] produces the most excellent mastick in the world: it proceeds from the lentiscus, which in other parts of the world produces the like gum.
Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 358.

We may apply intercipients, upon the temples, of mastich; frontals may also be applied. Wiseman, Surgery.

3. A kind of mortar or cement.

As for the small particles of brick and stone, the least moistness would join them together, and turn them into a kind of mastich, which those insects could not divide. Addison.

MA'STICOT. n. s. [marum, Lat.] See MASSICOTT.

Grind your masticot with saffron in gum water. Peacham.

Masticot is very light, because it is a very clear yellow, and very near to white. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

MA'STIFF.† n. s. mastives, plural. [mastin, French; mastino, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Jamieson pleasantly notices the etymology, in Manwood's Forest Laws, of this word, viz. mase or maze, and thief, i. e. to scare away robbers. He might have added the same quaint deduction from Lily's Euphues. But still the real etymon is wanting. Minsheu, (adverting to the Fr. mastin,) considers it as abbreviated from maison tenant, i. e. keeping the house; at the same time noticing another derivation from the Lat. miscendo, mistus, mixed, the mastiff being descended from a wolf and a dog. Florio, translating the Italian mastino, calls it a "mastie dog."] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dog kept to watch the house.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastives bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore. Spenser.

When rank Thersites opes his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear musick, wit, and oracle. Shakspeare.

When we knock at a farmer's door, the first answer shall be his vigilant mastiff. More, Antid. against Atheism.

Soon as Ulysses near th' enclosure drew,
With open mouths the furious mastives flew. Pope, Odyss.

Let the mastiffs amuse themselves about a sheep's skin stuffed with hay, provided it will keep them from worrying the flock. Swift.

MA'STLESS.† adj. [from mast.]

1. Having no mast.

Shall I, like a mastless ship at sea,
Go every way, and not the way I would?
Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

2. Bearing no mast.

Her shining hair, uncomb'd, was loosely spread,
A crown of mastless oak adorn'd her head. Dryden.

MA'STLIN.† n. s. [from mesler, French, to mingle; or rather corrupted from miscellane. Dr. Johnson. — More probably from the Sax. mıꝛtlic, various; mistus, Lat. mixed. See also MESLIN, and MISLIN.]

1. Mixed corn; as, wheat and rye.

The tother for one lofe hath twaine
Of mastlin, of rie, and of wheat. Tusser, Husb.

2. Mixed metal.

What's best to contain the quicksilver? —
It must not be iron, — nor brass, nor copper, nor mastlin, nor mineral. Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (1657,) E. 8. b.

MA'STRESS.* n. s. [maistresse, Fr. So our old word was written; maistress, mastress, mistress.] A mistress; a governess.

This maid, of which I tell my tale expresse,
She kept herself, her neded no maistresse. Chaucer, Doct. Tale.

Historyes are, as testyfyeth Cicero, the mastresses of lyfe and expo[s]ytours of tymes. Bale, Pref. to Leland's Itin. (1549.)

MA'STY.* adj. [from mast.] Full of mast; well stored with acorns. Not in use. Sherwood, and Cotgrave in V. GLANDEUX.

MAT. n. s. [meatte, Saxon; matte, German; matta, Lat.] A texture of sedge, flags, or rushes.

The women and children in the west of Cornwall make mats of a small and fine kind of bents there growing, which serve to cover floors and walls. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half hung,
The floors of plaister, and the walls of dung. Pope.

To MAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with mats.

Keep the doors and windows of your conservatories well matted, and guarded from the piercing air. Evelyn, Kalendar.

2. To twist together; to join like a mat.

I on a fountain light,
Whose brim with pinks was platted;
The banks with daffadillies dight,
With grass like sleave was matted. Drayton, Qu. of Cynthia.

Sometimes beneath an ancient oak,
Or on the matted grass he lies;
No god of sleep he did invoke,
The stream that o'er the pebbles flies,
With gentle slumber crowns his eyes. Dryden.

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eye-brows hung his matted hair. Dryden.

The spleen consisteth of muscular fibres, all matted, as in the skin, but in more open work. Grew, Cosmol.

MATA'CHIN.† n. s. [French.] An old dance; a kind of Pyrrhick or military dance, in the 16th century, according to Roquefort; both the dance, and the dancer, Cotgrave. "It was well known in France and Italy by the name of the dance of fools, or matachins; who were habited in short jackets with gilt-paper helmets, long streamers tied to their shoulders, and bells to their legs. They carried in their hands a sword and buckler, with which they made a clashing noise, and performed various quick and sprightly evolutions." Douce, Illustr. of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 435.

Whoever saw a matachin dance to imitate fighting: this was a fight that did imitate the matachin; for they being but three that fought, every one had two adversaries striking him who struck the third. Sidney.

MA'TADORE. n. s. [matador, a murderer, Spanish.] One of the three principal cards in the games of ombre and quadrille, which are always the two black aces, and the deuce in spades and clubs, and the seventh in hearts and diamonds.

Now move to war her sable matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors. Pope.

MATCH.† n. s. [meche, French; miccia, Italian; probably from mico, to shine, Latin: surely not, as Skinner conjectures, from the Saxon maca, a companion, because a match is a companion to a gun. Dr. Johnson. — It may seem strange that, after this plain statement, Dr. Johnson should have been so misunderstood in some modern publications of note, as in one to have his authority cited for the absurd etymon in this instance of maca, and in another to be abused for confounding it with that word: but so it is. Dr. Johnson had merely placed it as the first meaning of the substantive match, but with a sufficient discrimination of etymology from the rest; and is free from the mistake imputed to him. He might have added the Iceland. mak, unctura, from the Greek μύξα, mucus; which seems to be the etymon rather than the Lat. mico, to shine.] Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.

Try them in several bottles matches, and see which of them last longest without stench. Bacon.

He made use of trees as matches to set Druina a fire. Howell.

Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use. Boyle.

MATCH. n. s. [maca, Sax. See MAKE.]

1. One equal to another; one able to contest with another.

Government mitigates the inequality of power, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects. Addison.

The old man has met with his match. Spectator.

The natural shame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue. Rogers.

2. One that suits or tallies with another.

3. A marriage.

The match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities,
Beseeming such a wife as your fair daughter. Shakspeare.

Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making. Boyle.

With him she strove to join Lavinia's hand,
But dire portents the purpos'd match withstand. Dryden.

4. One to be married.

She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the West. Clarendon.

5. [From μάχη, a fight; or from maca, Saxon, one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.

Shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears? Shakspeare.

The goat was mine, by singing fairly won.
A solemn match was made; he lost the prize. Dryden.

To MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To be equal to.

No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And every measure fail me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. To shew an equal.

No history or antiquity can match his policies and his conduct. South.

3. To oppose as equal.

Eternal might
To match with their inventions they presum'd
So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn. Milton, P. L.

What though his heart be great, his actions gallant,
He wants a crown to poise against a crown,
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power. Dryden.

The Shepherd's Calendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language. Dryden.

4. To suit; to proportion.

Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Roscommon.

Mine have been still
Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes. Rowe.

Employ their wit and humour in chusing and matching of patterns and colours. Swift.

5. To marry; to give in marriage.

Great king,
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Thou dost protest thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her foe. Donne.

Them willingly they would have still retain'd,
And match'd unto the prince. Daniel, Civ. War.

When a man thinks himself matched to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast. South, Serm.

A senator of Rome, while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king. Addison.

To MATCH. v. n.

1. To be married.

A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blessing to match with some heroical-minded lady. Sidney.

I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shakspeare.

Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden, Span. Friar.

All creatures else are much unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.

2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.

MA'TCHABLE.✝ adj. [from match.]

1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.

Ye, whose high worths, surpassing paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none,
Why did ye stoop unto so lowly state? Spenser, Sonnet 66.

You shall not find one any way matchable with my beloved. Expos. of Solomon's Song, (1585,) p. 136.

Sir Walter Ralegh, so far as he hath gone in the History of the World, is matchable with the best of the ancients. Hakewill on Providence, p. 251.

2. Correspondent.

Those at land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no where but in the deepest parts of the sea. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

MA'TCHLESS.✝ adj. [from match.]

1. Having no equal.

This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious saint, a matchless queen. Waller.

Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse. Dryden.

2. Unequal; not matched; not alike. Not in use.

Als as she double spake, so heard she double,
With matchlesse eares deformed and distort:—
And as her eares, so eke her feet were odde,
And much unlike. Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 28.

MA'TCHLESSLY. adv. In a manner not to be equalled.

MA'TCHLESSNESS. n. s. [from matchless.] State of being without an equal.

MA'TCHMAKER. n. s. [match and make.]

1. One who contrives marriages.

You came to him to know
If you should carry me, or no;
And would have hir'd him and his imps,
To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras.

2. One who makes matches to burn.

MATE.✝ n. s. [maca, Saxon, a match, an equal; maet, Dutch; mate, Icel. a friend: from the Su. Goth. make, an equal, Wachter: from mota, to meet, to come together; and thus the Icel. motamant, a guest. Lye, and Serenius.]

1. A husband or wife.

I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy match for such immortal mate,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Spenser, F. Q.

2. A companion, male or female.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakspeare.

My competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war. Shakspeare.

You knew me once no mate
For you; there sitting where you durst not soar. Milton, P. L.

Damon, behold yon breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud:
There mounts Amyntas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way. Dryden.

Leave thy bride alone:
Go, leave her with her maiden mates to play
At sports more harmless, till the break of day. Dryden.

3. The male or female of animals.

Part single, or with mate;
Graze the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves
Of coral stray. Milton, P. L.

7. [mat, French. See CHECKMATE.] At the game of chess, the term used when the king is reduced to such a pass that there is no way for him to escape, and so the game is ended.

In bashfulness, the spirits do a little go and come; but with bold men, upon like occasion, they stand at stay; like a stale at chess, where it is no mate, but yet the game cannot stir.
Bacon, Ess. Of Boldness.

To MATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To match; to marry.

Ensample make of him, your hapless joy,
And of myself now mated as you see,
Whose prouder vaunt, that proud avenging boy,
Did soon pluck down, and curb'd my liberty. Spenser, F. Q.
The hind that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. Shakspeare, All's well.

2. To be equal to.

Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastful chesnut mates the skies. Dryden.
Parnassus is its name; whose forky rise
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:
High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion wafting moor'd his little skiff. Dryden.

3. To oppose; to equal.

I, i' the way of loyalty and truth,
Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

4. [mater, French; matar, Spanish.] To subdue; to confound; to crush. Not in use.

That is good deceit
Which mates him first, that first intends deceit. Shakspeare.

Why this is strange; go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shakspeare.

The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MA'TELESS.* adj. [mate and less.] Without a companion; wanting a mate.

Here Philomel doth her shrill treble sing;
The thrush a tenor; off a little space,
Some mateless dove doth murmur out the base.
Peacham, Minerv. Britan. (1612.)

MATE'RIAL. adj. [materiel, French, materialis, Latin.]

1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.

When we judge, our minds we mirrors make,
And as those glasses which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see. Davies.

That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers. Ralegh.

2. Important; momentous; essential: with to before the thing to which relation is noted.

We must propose unto all men certain petitions, incident and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker.

Hold them for catholicks or hereticks, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this question, material. Hooker.

What part of the world soever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the same, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour done to Christ. Hooker.

It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein, very material to the state of that government. Spenser.

The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material. Whitgift.

He would not stay at your petitions made;
His business more material. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I pass the rest, whose every race and name,
And kinds, are less material to my theme. Dryden, Virg.

As for the more material faults of writing, though I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them. Dryden.

I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose. Locke.

In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others. Swift.

3. Not formal: as, though the material action was the same, it was formally different.

MATE'RIALS. n. s. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; materiaux, French.] The substance of which any thing is made.

The West-Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials, have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree. Ralegh.

Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients. Brown, Vulg. Err.

David, who made such rich provision of materials for the building of the temple, because he had dipt his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.

That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone asbestus, which being once enkindled, will burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

The materials of that building very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.

Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection. Locke.

Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made
Materials for an house decay'd. Swift.

MATE'RIALISM.* n. s. [from material.] The opinions of a materialist.

I am sorry as you seem to be, that our acquaintance harped so much on the subject of materialism.
Gray, Lett. to Stonehewer.

MATE'RIALIST.† n. s. [from material.] One who denies spiritual substances.

He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist. Dryden.

The materialists, among modern philosophers, have maintained, that the soul is, like the body, mortal; that when the body ceases to live, the whole man ceases to exist; but the general belief of mankind has, in all ages and countries, been, that the soul existed after death.
Bp. Watson, Charge, 1798, p. 26.

MATERIA'LITY. n. s. [materialité, Fr. from material.] Corporeity; material existence; not spirituality.

Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals; and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species. Digby.

To MATE'RIALIZE.* v. a. [from material.] To form into matter or substance.

Having with wonderful art and beauty materialized, if I may so call it, a scheme of abstracted notions, and clothed the most nice refined conceptions of philosophy in sensible images.
Tatler, No. 154.

By this means we materialize our ideas. Guardian, No. 172.

MATE'RIALLY. adv. [from material.]

1. In the state of matter.

I do not mean that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it. Boyle.

2. Not formally.

Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil. South, Serm.

3. Importantly; essentially.

All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially; as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good. Spenser on Ireland.

MATE'RIALNESS.† n. s. [from material.]

1. State of being material.
2. Importance.

This affidavit is not sufficient as to the inability or materialness of the witnesses.

MATHEMA'TICAL. } adj. [mathematicus, Latin.]
MATHEMA'TICK. } Considered according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.

The east and west,
Upon the globe, a mathematick point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham, Sophy.

It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to or constitute a body. Boyle.

I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley.

MATHEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.

We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sun-beams, and is reciprocally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley.

MATHEMATI'CIAN. n. s. [mathematicus, Latin; mathematicien, French.] A man versed in the mathematicks.

One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Æneas's voyage by the map. Addison, Spect.

MATHEMA'TICKS. n. s. [μαθηματική.] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations. Harris.

The mathematicks and the metaphysicks
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you. Shakspeare.
See mystery to mathematicks fly. Pope.

MA'THER.* n. s.

Bran-liquors are used to mealy dying stuffs, such as mather is, being the powder or fecula of a root.
Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 193.

The winged choristers began
To chirp their mattins. Cleaveland.

By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques: the vigils are celebrated before them, and the nocturn and mattins, for the saints whose the reliques are. Stillingfleet.

That he should raise his mitred crest on high,
And clap his wings, and call his family
To sacred rites; and vex th' etherial powers
With midnight mattins, at uncivil hours. Dryden.

MA'TRASS. n. s. [matrass, French.]

Matrass is the name of a chemical glass vessel made for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually tapered into a conical figure. Quincy.

Protect from violent storms, and the too parching darts of the sun, your pennached tulips and ranunculus's, covering them with matrasses. Evelyn, Kalendar.

MA'TRICE.† n. s. [matrice, Fr. Cotgrave; matrix, Latin.]

1. The womb; the cavity where the fœtus is formed.

If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.

2. A mould; that which gives form to something inclosed.

Erpenius's printed books are already sold; and his matrices of the oriental tongues are bought by Elzevir the printer.
Abp. Usher to Dr. Ward, (1626,) Lett. 99.

Matro'ss. n. s.

Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, spunging, firing, and loading them: they carry firelocks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a waggon should break. Bailey.

MA'TTER. n. s. [matiere, French; materia, Lat.]

1. Body; substance extended.

It then the soul another soul do make,
Because her pow'r is kept within a bound,
She must some former stuff or matter take,
But in the soul there is no matter found. Davies.

It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportion to space as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive particles being solids are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them, even so very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Newton.

Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Watts, Logick.

2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

3. Subject; thing treated.

If chance herself should vary,
Observe how matters would miscarry. Prior.

6. Cause of disturbance.

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee? Shakspeare.

What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs. Shakspeare, Coriol.

7. Subject of suit or complaint.

Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me? — Marry, Sir, I have matter in my head against you. Shakspeare.

If the craftsman have a matter against any man, the law is open; let them implead one another. Acts, xix. 38.

In armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if tried by the gross, it would go on the other. Bacon.

8. Import; consequence; importance; moment.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor shew doth better. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

And please yourselves this day;
No matter from what hands you have the play. Dryden.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
No matter which, so neither of them lye,
From steepy Othrys' top to Pilus drove His herd. Dryden.

Pleas'd or displeas'd, no matter now 'tis past;
The first who dares be angry breathes his last. Granville.

9. Thing; object; that which has some particular relation, or is subject to particular consideration.

The king of Armenia had in his company three of the most famous men for matters of arms. Sidney.

MAUND.† n. s. [manđ, Saxon; mande, and menne, French; from manus, Lat. the hand.] A handbasket.

A thousand favours from a maund she drew,
Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet. Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

A maund charg'd with household merchandize. Bp. Hall. Sat. iv. 2.

Or many maunds full of his mellow fruit. Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 1.

There filling maunds with cowslips. Herrick, Hesperides.

To MAUND.* v. n. [mandagh, Gael. a stutterer; maundier, French, to beg; mendians, Norm. Fr. beggars.] To mutter, as beggars do; to mumble; to use unintelligible terms. Maunding, in the Canting Dictionary, is begging. See To MAUNDER.

A rogue,
A very canter, Sir, one that maunds
Upon the pad. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

To MA'UNDER.† v. n. [Dr. Johnson derives this word from maudire, Fr. to curse; Serenius, from the Su. Goth. mana, provocare, exorcizare. But see the etymology in To MAUND. This word is also written and pronounced mander.] To grumble; to murmur.

He made me many visits, maundering as if I had done him a discourtesy in leaving such an opening. Wiseman, Surgery.

MA'UNDER.* n. s. [from To maund.] A beggar. Gloucestershire. Pegge.

Springlove, the great commander of the maunders. Broome, Jovial Crew.

MA'UNDERER. n. s. [from maunder.] A murmurer; a grumbler.

MA'UNDERING.* n. s. [from maunder.] Complaint.

The maunderings of discontent are like the voice and behaviour of a swine, who, when he feels it rain, runs grumbling about, and by that indeed discovers his nature, but does not avoid the storm. South. Serm. ii. 604.

MAUNDY-THURSDAY.† n. s. [derived by Spelman from mande, a handbasket, in which the king was accustomed to give alms to the poor: by others from dies mandati, the day on which our Saviour gave his great mandate, That we should love one another.] The Thursday before Good-friday.

He treateth, in his secunde parte, the maundye of Chryste with his apostles upon Shere Thursday. More, Answ. to Tyndal on the Souper of our Lord, Pref.

Here the monks their maundie make, with sundrie solemne rights
And signs of great humilitie: ———
Each one the other's feete doth wash, &c. Tr. of Naogeorgus's Popish Kingdome, fol. 51.

This day is called [dies mandati] mandate or maundy Thursday, from the commandment which our Saviour gave his apostles to commemorate the sacrament of his supper, which he this day instituted after the celebration of the passover; — or from that new commandment which he gave them, to love one another, after he had washed their feet, in token of the love he bore to them. Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. ch. 5. § 14.

MAUSOLE'AN.* adj. [from mausoleum.] Monumental.

Herses, heralds, black mourners, solemnities, obelisks, and mausolean tombs. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 330.

MAUSOLE'UM.† n. s. [Latin; mausolée, French. A name which was first given to a stately monument erected by his queen Artemisia, to her husband Mausolus, king of Caria.] A pompous funeral monument.

Erect no mausoleums; for his best
Monument is his spouse's marbled breast. Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

MA'UTHER.* n. s. [moer, Danish, a girl; or rather from the Goth. mawi, the same.] A foolish young girl. Dr. Johnson notices mother as thus used, under the eighth sense of that word. It is a Norfolk word.

Kas. Away, you talk like a foolish mauther.
Sur. Sir, all is truth she says. B. Johnson, Alchemist.

MAW.† n. s. [maga, Sax.; mag, Su. Goth.]

1. The stomach of animals, and of human beings in contempt. Dr. Johnson. — Why Dr. Johnson should have said "in contempt," is difficult to guess. The word is very old in our language; and the citations which I add from Chaucer, Sackville, Bishop Hall, Purchas, Beaumont and Fletcher, and an admirable Discourse in 1644, as well as those before given, will shew that no particular contempt is implied in the usage of the word.

There is but litel Latin in my mawe. Chaucer, Shipm. Prol.

Satisfied from hunger of her maw. Sackville, Induct, Mir. for Mag.

So oft in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brings. Sidney.

We have heats of dungs and of bellies and mawes of living creatures, and of their bloods. Bacon.

To be jovial when God calls to mourning, to glut our maw, when he calls to fasting, to glitter when he would have us sack-clothed and squalid, he hates it to the death.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 69.

The remainder, by consuming one another, were (a strange remedy) preserved from consumption; every tenth man being by lot tythed to the shambles, and more returning to their fellows' mawes, than on their own legs.
Purchas, Pilgrim. (1617,) p. 403.

I have no maw to marriage, yet this rascal,
Tempts me extremely. Beaum. and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

Drinesse of bones, blackness of skin, wringing of mawes.
Seasonable Serm. (1644,) p. 17.

Though plenteous, all too little seems,
To stuff this maw, this vast unhidebound corps. Milton, P. L.

The serpent, who his maw obscene had fill'd,
The branches in his curl'd embraces held. Dryden.

2. The craw of birds.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill; their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it down by degrees into the stomach, where it is ground by two strong muscles; in which action they are assisted by small stones, which they swallow for the purpose. Arbuthnot.

3. An old game at cards.

The king being at the game of maw.
Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 111.

They respect not him, except it be to play a game at chess, primero, saunt, maw, or such like. Brewer, Com. of Ling. iii. 2.

MAWK.* n. s. [matk, Su. Goth. maddick, Dan. a worm and a maggot.]

1. A maggot. North. See also MAD. Grose.

2. A slattern. See MAUKIN. Called vulgarly, in several parts of England, a mawks.

MA'WKIN.* See MAUKIN.

MA'WKINGLY.* adj. [from mawk.] Slatternly; slovenly; like a mawks.

Some silly souls are prone to place much piety in their mawkingly plainness, and in their censoriousness of others who use more comely and costly curiosities.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 87.

MA'WKISH.† adj. [perhaps from maw.] Apt to give satiety; apt to cause loathing.

The same mawkish joys in the same track are found.
Dryden, Lucret.

Like a faint traveller, whose dusty mouth
Grows dry with heat, and spits a mawkish froth. Addison, Georg.

Flow, Welsted, flow, like thine inspirer, beer,
So sweetly mawkish, and so smoothly dull. Pope.

MA'WKISHNESS. n. s. [from mawkish.] Aptness to cause loathing.

MA'WKY.* adj. [from mawk.] Maggotty; full of maggots. North. Yorksh. Gloss. and Grose.

MA'WMET.† n. s. [or mammet; from mam or mother. Dr. Johnson. — It is a corruption of Mahomet; and mawmet, in contempt of that person, was first an idol, (then a puppet,) as mawmetry was the worship of idols. This word was also written mawment.] A puppet, anciently an idol.

Unleful worschipping of mawmetis. Wicliffe, 1 Pet. iv.

In all their temples the mawments shall fall down.
Parfre, Myst. of Candlemas-Day, (1512.)

Suche a mawment,
Carried in a tent. Skelton, Poems, p. 84.

There you shall find in every corner a maumet, at every door a beggar, in every dish a priest. Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 1. Ep. 5.

MA'WMETRY.* n. s. [from mawmet.] The religion of Mahomet: and thence employed for idolatry. Obsolete.

In destruction of Maumetrie,
And in encrease of Christes law dere,
They ben accorded so as ye may here.
Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

In his coffre is his maumet. And certes the sin of maumetrie is the first that God defended in the ten commandments, as bereth witnesse Exod. ch. 20. Thou shalt have no false goddes, &c. Chaucer, Pars. Tale.

Throwing away the rags of mawmetry.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 39.

MA'WMISH.† adj. [apparently from maw.] Provoking disgust; nauseous. The word is perhaps peculiar to L'Estrange.

It is one of the most nauseous, mawmish mortifications, for a man to have to do with a punctual, finical fop. L'Estrange.

The flesh was mawmish and rotten. L'Estrange.

MAW-WORM. n. s. [maw and worm.]

Ordinary gut-worms loosen, and slide off from, the intern tunick of the guts, and frequently creep into the stomach for nutriment, being attracted thither by the sweet chyle; whence they are called stomach or maw-worms. Harvey on Consumpt.

MA'XILLAR. } adj. [maxillaris, Latin.] Belonging
MA'XILLARY. } to the jaw-bone.

The greatest quantity of hard substance continued is towards the head; there is the skull, the teeth, and the maxillary bones. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MA'XIM. n. s. [maxime, French; maximum, Lat.] An axiom; a general principle; a leading truth.

This maxim out of love I teach. Shakspeare.

It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquest, till settled, are rather matters of burden than strength. Bacon.

Yet, as in duty bound, they serve him on;
Nor ease, nor wealth, nor life itself regard,
For 'tis their maxim, love is love's reward. Dryden.

That the temper, the sentiments, the morality of men, is influenced by the example and disposition of those they converse with, is a reflexion which has long since passed into proverbs, and been ranked among the standing maxims of human wisdom. Rogers.

*MA'XIMUM. n. s. [Latin.] In mathematicks, the greatest quantity attainable in any given case: opposed to minimum. Used also generally.

Good legislation is the art of conducting a nation to the maximum of happiness, and the minimum of misery.
Colquhoun on Indigence, p. 49.

MAY.† auxiliary verb, preterite might. [magan, Gothick; magan, Saxon; mogen, Dutch; maa, Danish.]

1. To be at liberty; to be permitted; to be allowed: as, you may do for me [per me licet] all you can.

He that is sent out to travel with the thoughts of a man, designing to improve himself, may get into the conversation of persons of condition. Locke on Education.

2. To be possible; in the words may be.

It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me. Shakspeare.

3. To be by chance.

Be the workmen what they may be, let us speak of the work.
Bacon, Essays.

How old may Phillis be, you ask,
Whose beauty thus all hearts engages?
To answer is no easy task,
For she has really two ages. Prior.

4. To have power.

This also tendeth to no more but what the king may do: for what he may do is of two kinds; what he may do as just, and what he may do as possible. Bacon.

Make the most of life you may. Bourne.

5. A word expressing desire.

May you live happily and long for the service of your country. Dryden, Ded. to the Æn.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

MAZE. n. s. [missen, Dutch, to mistake; mase, a whirlpool. Skinner.]

1. A labyrinth; a place of perplexity and winding passages.
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze. Milton, P. L.
The ways of Heaven are dark and intricate,
Puzzled with mazes and perplex'd with errour;
Our understanding searches them in vain. Addison.
He, like a copious river, pour'd his song
O'er all the mazes of enchanted ground. Thomson.

2. Confusion of thought; uncertainty; perplexity.
He left in himself nothing but a maze of longing, and a dungeon of sorrow. Sidney.
While they study how to bring to pass that religion may seem but a matter made, they lose themselves in the very maze of their own discourses, as if reason did even purposely forsake them, who of purpose forsake God, the author thereof. Hooker.

I have thrust myself into this maze,
Haply to wive and thrive as best I may. Shakspeare.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate,
Fix'd fate, free-will, foreknowledge absolute,
And found no end, in wandering mazes lost. Milton, P. L.

To MAZE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To bewilder; to confuse.

I foryete all that I can,
And stonde like a mased man. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

Steps me a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor. Shakspeare.

I, acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs. Shakspeare.

I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. It is sometimes used ungrammatically for I; as methinks.

Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy. Shakspeare.

4. A colloquial expression without for; as, do me such a thing; spell me such a word.

ME'ACOCK.† n. s. [mes coq, Fr. Skinner; others from meek.] An uxorious or effeminate man; a coward.

As stout as a stockfish, as meek as a meacock.
Apius and Virginia, (1575.)

A meacocke is he, who dread'th to see bloudshed.
Mir. for Mag. p. 418.

They are like my husband; mere meacocks, verily.
Glapthorne, Hollander.

ME'ACOCK. adj. Tame; timorous; cowardly.

'Tis a world to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curstest shrew. Shakspeare.

MEAD.† n. s. [miæd, Icel. meðo, meðu, Saxon; mede, meth, Germ. meethe, Dutch; meddeglyn, metheglin, Welsh; hydromeli, Lat.] A kind of drink made of water and honey.

Though not so solutive a drink as mead, yet it will be more grateful to the stomach. Bacon.

He sheers his over-burden'd sheep;
Or mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

MEAD.† } MEA'DOW. } n. s. [mæð, mæðepe, Saxon; madte, matte, Teut. from meida, Icel. to mow, Serenius; from mæpan, Sax. the same, Mr. H. Tooke.] Ground somewhat watery, not plowed, but covered with grass and flowers; pasture, or grass land, annually mown for hay. Mead is a word chiefly poetical.

Where all things in common do rest,
Corne feild with the pasture and mead,
Yet what doth it stand you in stead? Tusser, Husb.

A band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground. Milton, P. L.

Paints her, 'tis true, with the same hand which spreads,
Like glorious colours, through the flow'ry meads,
When lavish nature with her best attire
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire. Waller.

Yet ere to-morrow's sun shall shew his head,
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy bed. Dryden.

MEADOW-SAFFRON. n. s. [colchicum, Latin.] A plant.

The meadow-saffron hath a flower consisting of one leaf, shaped like a lily, rising in form of a small tube, and is gradually widened into six segments; it has likewise a solid, bulbous root, covered with a membranous skin. Miller.

MEADOW-SWEET. n. s. [ulmaria, Latin.] A plant.

MEADOW-WORT.* n. s. A plant; another name for the meadow-sweet.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

ME'AGER.† adj. [maigre, French: macer, Latin. Dr. Johnson.—The Sax. language has both mæᵹep and mæᵹpe; the writers, therefore, of meager or meagre are both justifiable.]

1. Lean; wanting flesh; starven.

[Thou] art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gate.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Now will the canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit. Shakspeare, K. John.

Meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones. Shakspeare.

Whatsoever their neighbour gets, they lose, and the very bread that one eats makes t'other meager. L'Estrange.

Fierce famine with her meagre face,
And fevers of the fiery race,

In swarms th' offending wretch surround,
All brooding on the blasted ground:
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.

2. Poor; hungry.

Canaan's happy land, when worn with toil,
Requir'd a sabbath year to mend the meagre soil. Dryden.

To ME'AGER.† v. a. [from the adjective.] To make lean.

A man meagred with long watching and painful labour. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

His ceaseless sorrow for the unhappy maid
Meagred his look, and on his spirits prey'd. Dryden, Ovid.

ME'AGERLY.* adv. [from meager.] Poorly; barrenly. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

O physick's power, which (some say) hath restrain'd
Approach of death, alas! thou helpest meagerly. Sidney, Arcad. b. 4.

ME'AGERNESS.† n. s. [from meager.]

1. Leanness; want of flesh.

2. A repast; the food eaten.

What strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee? Shakspeare, Tempest.

Give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

They made me a miser's feast of happiness,
And cou'd not furnish out another meal. Dryden.

3. A part; a fragment.

That yearly rent is still paid into the hanaper, even as the former casualty itself was wont to be, in parcel meal, brought in and answered there. Bacon.

4. [mælepe, Saxon; meel, Dutch; mahlen, to grind, German.] The flower or edible part of corn.

In the bolting and sifting of near fourteen years of such power and favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure and fine meal, but must have a mixture of padar and bran in this lower age of human fragility. Wotton.

An old weasel conveys himself into a meal-tub for the mice to come to her, since she could not go to them. L'Estrange.

To MEAL. v. a. [meler, French.] To sprinkle; to mingle.

Were he meal'd
With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous. Shakspeare.

ME'ALMAN. n. s. [meal and man.] One that deals in meal.

ME'ALY. adj. [from meal.]

1. Having the taste or soft insipidity of meal; having the qualities of meal.

The mealy parts of plants dissolved in water make too viscid an aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Besprinkled; as with meal.

With four wings, as all farinaceous and mealy-winged animals, as butterflies and moths. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Like a gay insect, in his summer shine,
The fop light fluttering spreads his mealy wings. Thomson.

MEALY-MOUTHED.† adj. [imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from mild-mouthed or mellow-mouthed: but perhaps from the sore mouths of animals, that, when they are unable to comminute their grain, must be fed with meal. Dr. Johnson. — This is not very probable. Our word at first was meal-mouthed: "Ye hypocrits, ye whited walls and painted sepulchres, ye meal-mouthed counterfeits, ye devourers of widows." Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Serm. 1587, p. 315. Again, in a very spirited description by Marston in his second satire, 1598.

" Who would imagine yonder sober man,
" That same devout meale-mouth'd precisian,
" That cries good brother, kind sister, makes a duck,
" After the antique grace; can always pluck
" A sacred booke out of his civil hose; —
" Says with a turn'd-up eye a solemne grace
" Of halfe an houre; then, with a silken face,
" Smiles on the holy crew; and then doth cry,
" O manners!"

These extracts serve to shew that meal-mouthed denoted one who employed soft, insinuating, artful, hypocritical language. And so Minsheu defines meal-mouthed, " fair spoken; cujus verba blanda sunt, et mollia, instar farinæ," i. e. whose words are as soft and as fine as meal.] Using soft words, concealing the real intention; speaking hypocritically.

He cannot away with tobacco; for he is persuaded (and not much amiss) that 'tis a sparer of bread-corn; which he could find in his heart to transport without licence; but, weighing the penalty, he grows mealy-mouthed, and dares not. Overbury, Charact. (1627,) sign. N.

The truth is, Clayton was false, meale-mouthed, and poor spirited. Life of A. Wood, p. 165.

She was a fool to be mealy-mouthed, where nature speaks so plain. L'Estrange.

MEALYMO'UTHEDNESS.† n. s. [from the adjective.] Hypocrisy in speaking.

MEAN.† adj. [mæne, Sax. common; minne, Icel. inferiour, less, Serenius; gemein, Germ. vile, from man, a multitude, a rabble, Wachter.]

1. Wanting dignity; of low rank or birth.

She was stricken with most obstinate love to a young man but of mean parentage, in her father's court, named Antiphilus; so mean, as that he was but the son of her nurse, and by that means, without other desert, became known of her. Sidney.

This fairest maid of fairer mind;
By fortune mean, in nature born a queen. Sidney.

Let pale fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow wings:
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakspeare.

2. Low-minded; base; ungenerous; spiritless.

The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,
More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
From every meaner man. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Can you imagine I so mean could prove,
To save my life by changing of my love? Dryden.

We fast not to please men, nor to promote any mean, worldly interest. Smalridge, Serm.

3. Contemptible; despicable.

The Roman legions, and great Cæsar found
Our fathers no mean foes. Philips.

4. Low in the degree of any good quality; low in worth; low in power.

Some things are good, yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that many are only not disproved nor disallowed of God for them. Hooker.

French wheat is bearded, and requireth the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty; and not wheat, so termed because it is unbearded, is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain. Carew.

The lands be not holden of her majesty, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service at the most. Bacon.

By this extortion he suddenly grew from a mean to a mighty estate, insomuch that his ancient inheritance being not one thousand marks yearly, he became able to dispend ten thousand pounds. Davies on Ireland.

To peaceful Rome new laws ordain;
Call'd from his mean abode his sceptre to sustain. Dryden.

I have sacrificed much of my own self-love, in preventing not only many mean things from seeing the light, but many which I thought tolerable. Pope.

5. [moyen, French.] Middle; moderate; without excess.

He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best-graced men that ever I saw, being of middle age and a mean stature. Sidney.

Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Education.

6. Intervening; intermediate.

In the mean while the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. 1 Kings, xviii. 45.

MEAN.† n. s. [moyen, French.]

1. Mediocrity; middle rate; medium.

He tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means;
Did place them all in order, and compell
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamantine chains. Spenser.

Oft 'tis seen
Our mean secures us; and our mere defects
Prove our commodities. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Temperance with golden square,
Betwixt them both can measure out a mean. Shakspeare.

There is a mean in all things, and a certain measure wherein the good and the beautiful consist, and out of which they never can depart. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

But no authority of gods or men
Allow of any mean in poesie. Roscommon.

Against her then her forces prudence joins,
And to the golden mean herself confines. Denham.

2. Measure; regulation. Not used, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the following passage from Spenser, in which the word signifies (as it was formerly much used, and is not yet entirely out of use,) the tenor part of a musical composition; and not measure, or regulation.

The rolling sea resounding soft,
In his big base them fitly answered,
And on the rock the waves, breaking aloft,
A solemn mean unto them measured. Spenser, F. Q.

A new voluntary descant, so farre out of tune, that it agreeth neither with the tenour, nor meane.
Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 105.

The treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest. Bacon.

Now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant;
There wanteth but a mean to fill your song.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. Ver.

The base and treble married to the mean.
Drayton, Barons' Wars, C. 3.

3. Interval; interim; mean time.

But sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been,
Reserve her cause to her eternal doom,
And in the mean vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Spenser.

In the mean, (turning to the officer who scourged him,) while he and I dispute this matter, mind you your business on his back. Dryden, Life of Plutarch.

4. Instrument; measure; that which is used in order to any end.

Pamela's noble heart would needs gratefully make known the valiant mean of her safety. Sidney.

As long as that which Christians did was good, and no way subject to just reproof, their virtuous conversation was a mean to work the heathens' conversion unto Christ. Hooker.

It is no excuse unto him who, being drunk, committeth incest, and alledgeth that his wits were not his own; in as much as himself might have chosen whether his wits should by that mean have been taken from him. Hooker.

I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. Shakspeare, Othello.

No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar and by you cut off. Shakspeare.

Nature is made better by no mean,
But nature makes that mean; so over that art
Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The mean might be the easier attained.
Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular: the singular is in this sense now rarely used. Dr. Johnson. — The use of the word means, in English, is remarkable, and may be thought capricious. It seems to be of French extraction. The French have le moyen frequently, but seldom les moyens. We, on the contrary, prefer the plural termination, means; yet still for the most part, though not always, we use it as a noun of the singular number, or as the French le moyen. It is one of those anomalies, which use hath introduced and established, in spite of analogy. We should not be allowed to say — a mean of making men happy. Bp. Hurd, Notes on Addison, Freehold. No. 24.

The more base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions. Shakspeare.

By this means he had them the more at vantage, being tired and harrassed with a long march. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the sooner. Davies on Ireland.

Strong was their plot,
Their parties great, means good, the season fit,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not. Daniel.

By this means not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation will be bred up not perverted by any other hopes. Sprat, Serm.

Who is there that hath the leisure and means to collect all the proofs concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view. Locke.

A good character, when established, should not be rested in as an end, but only employed as a means of doing still farther good. Atterbury.

It renders us careless of approving ourselves to God by religious duties, and, by that means, securing the continuance of his goodness. Atterbury.

6. By all MEANS. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.

7. By no MEANS. Not in any degree; not at all.

The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as that on the other. Addison on Italy.

8. Means are likewise used for revenue; fortune; probably from desmenes.

Your means are slender, your waste is great. Shakspeare.

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,
Give you advancement. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Essex did not build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means. Wotton.

9. Mean-time. } In the intervening time: sometimes
Mean-while. } an adverbial mode of speech.

Mean-while
The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
New heav'n and earth. Milton, P. L.

Mean-time the rapid heavens roll'd down the light,
And on the shaded ocean rush'd the night. Dryden.

Mean-time her warlike brother on the seas,
His waving streamers to the winds displays. Dryden.

Mean-time, in shades of night Æneas lies;
Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes. Dryden.

Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
And, as I see occasion, favour thee. Addison, Cato.

The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths; mean-time the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and harrassed by inroads from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence. Swift.

To Mean.† v. n. [menan, Saxon.]

1. To have in the mind; to purpose.

These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live. Milton, L'All.

2. To think; to have the power of thought.

And he who now to sense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning. Pope.

To Mean. v. a.

1. To purpose; to intend; to design.

Ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to save much people alive. Gen. l. 20.

And life more perfect have attain'd than fate
Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot. Milton, P. L.

I practis'd it to make you taste your cheer
With double pleasure, first prepar'd by fear;
So loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.

2. To intend; to hint covertly; to understand.

When your children shall say, What mean you by this service? ye shall say, It is the passover. Exod. xii. 26.

I forsake an argument on which I could delight to dwell; I mean your judgement in your choice of friends. Dryden.

Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel. Locke.

MEA'NDER. n. s. [Meander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine winding; winding course.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and integrals of the body. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

'Tis well, that while mankind
Through fate's perverse meander errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.

While ling'ring rivers in meanders glide,
They scatter verdant life on either side;
The vallies smile, and with their flowery face,
And wealthy births confess the floods embrace. Blackmore.

Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Hocus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts. Arbuthnot.

To Mea'nder.* v. a. [from the noun.] To wind; to turn round; to make flexuous.

By their meander'd creeks. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 1.

Meander'd ways,
And labyrinth-like turnings. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

A waving glow the bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day,
With silver-quivering rills meander'd o'er.
Pope, Mor. Ess. Ep. 4.

2. Be Wit 'nder.* v. n. To run with a serpentine mals, a: to be winding, or intricate.

Whether we fringe the sloping hill,
Or smoothe below the verdant mead;
Whether we break the falling rill,
Or through meandering mazes lead. Shenstone.

Conducting them, as the ground naturally meanders, amidst a few forest trees. Graves, Recoll. of Shenstône, p. 59.

Thou only know'st
That dark meandering maze,
Where wayward Falsehood strays. Mason, Caractacus.

Mea'ndrian.* } adj. [from meander.] Winding;
Mea'ndry. } flexuous.

This serpent, surrepent generation, with their meandrian turnings and windings, their mental reservations.
Dean King, Serm. Nov. 5. 1608, p. 27.

The river Styx, with crooked and meandry turnings, encircleth the palace of the infernal Dis. Bacon.

Mea'ndrous. adj. [from meander.] Winding; flexuous.

Me'aning. n. s. [from mean.]

1. Purpose; intention.

I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning toward you. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Habitual intention.

Some whose meaning hath at first been fair,
Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair. Roscommon.

3. The sense; the thing understood.

The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
Not of the muses nine. Milton, P. L.

These lost the sense their learning to display,
And those explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.

No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood: however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended. Swift.

4. Sense; power of thinking.

He was not spiteful though he wrote a satyr,
For still there goes some meaning to ill-nature. Dryden.
—True no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

Me'anly.† adv. [from mean. Sax. mænelice.]

1. Moderately; not in a great degree.

Dr. Metcalfe, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly affectioned to set forward learning in others. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but painting eminently flourished. Dryden, Dufresnoy

2. Without dignity; poorly.

It was the winter wild,
While the heaven-born child,
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies. Milton, Ode Nativ.

The Persian state will not endure a king
So meanly born. Denham, Sophy.

3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.

Would you meanly thus rely
On power, you know, I must obey. Prior.

4. Without respect.

Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something desirable in them: we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts, Logick.

Me'anness. n. s. [from mean.]

1. Want of excellence.

The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of Common Prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.

This figure is of a later date by the meanness of the workmanship. Addison on Italy.

2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.

No other nymphs have title to men's arts,
But as their meanness larger hopes imparts. Waller.

Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good. South.

3. Lowness of mind.

The name of servants has been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South.

MEA

4. Sordidness; niggardliness.

MEANT. perf. and part. pass. of To mean.

By Silvia if thy charming self be meant;
If friendship be thy virgin vows extent:
O let me in Aminta's praises join;
Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.

MEASE.† n. s. Probably a corruption of measure: as, a mease of herrings is five hundred. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. — Serenius, however, rightly cites the German mass, a measure, as the etymon of this word. See MESS.

ME'ASLE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson takes no notice of the etymology of this word, merely mentioning the Latin expression of morbilli for the disorder called the measles, and has confined the word to the plural number, with no other signification than that of disease. And, in the first of them, the citation from Shakspeare belongs to the leper, and not to the disease. It is one of our oldest words, applied to a leper, as by Wicliffe, and in P. Plowman; and thus the adjective in the Ort. Vocab. 1514. "Mesell, full of lepre, leprosus; which is the modern measly. The old French has the same term mesel, a leper. Kelham. But it is from the Germ. mas, masel, a spot; whence masel, Su. pustules; maselen, Teut.]

1. A leper. Obsolete.

Rase ye dede men, cleanse ye mesels. Wicliffe, St. Matt. x.
Blind men seen, crokide goen, mesels be made clene. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xi.

So shall my lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those meazels
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought
The very way to catch them. Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. In the plural, a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice. Quincy.

Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbuthnot.

3. A disease of swine.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it: — nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed;—the swine died of the measles, the sheep of the rot. B. Johnson, Discoveries.

4. A disease of trees.

Fruit-bearers are often infected with the measles, by being scorched with the sun. Mortimer, Husb.

ME'ASLED. adj. [from measle.] Infected with the measles.

Thou vermin wretched,
As e'er in measled pork was hatched;
Thou tail of worship that dost grow
On rump of justice as of cow. Hudibras, i. ii.

ME'ASLEDNESS.* n. s. [from measled.] Diseased state of swine. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

ME'ASLY. adj. [from measles.] Scabbed with the measles.

Last trotted forth the gentle swine
To ease her against the stump,
And dismally was heard to whine,
All as she scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.

ME'ASURABLE.† adj. [from measure.]

1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.

God's eternal duration is permanent and invisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley, Serm.

2. Moderate; in small quantity.

A measurable mildness or mean in all things. North, Tr. of Philosopher at Court, (1575,) p. 91.

ME'ASURABLENESS. n. s. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.

ME'ASURABLY. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.

Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart. Ecclus, xxxi. 28.

ME'ASURE. n. s. [mesure, French; mensura, Lat.]

1. That by which any thing is measured.

A taylor's news,
Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of many a thousand. Shakspeare, K. John.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.

All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measure. Holder on Time.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetick, and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.

He lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other men's eyes and tongues. Bp. Taylor.

God's goodness is the measure of his providence. More.

I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville, Scepsis.

3. Proportion; quantity settled.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto: and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.

I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment, yet there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity: as, a measure of wine.

Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. Sufficient quantity.

I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shakspeare.

6. Allotment; portion allotted.

Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And every measure fail me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Cor. x. 13.

If else thou seek'st
Aught, not surpassing human measure, say. Milton, P. L.

Our religion sets before us, not the example of a stupid stoick, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson.

7. Degree; quantity.

I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Abbot, Descript. of the World.

There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over-scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Bp. Taylor, Guide to a Penitent.

The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and consummation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

8. Proportionate time; musical time.

Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.

9. Motion harmonically regulated.

My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport. Shakspeare.

As when the stars in their æthereal race,
At length have roll'd around their liquid space,

From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance. Dryden.

10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and anchentry. Shakspeare.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures. Shakspeare.

11. Moderation; not excess.

O love, be moderate, allay thy extacy;
In measure reign thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isa. vi. 14.

12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is the Greek Μέτρον.

Τρεῖς ἐτίων δεκάδας τριάδας δύο, μέτρον ἔθηκαν
Ἡμετέρες Βιοτῆς μάντιες αἰθέριοι·
Ἀρκῦμαι τύτοισιν.

Lord make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psal. xxxix. 4.

13. Any thing adjusted.

Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards. Smalridge, Serm.

14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.

I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measure, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.

The numbers themselves, though of the heroick measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pope.

15. Tune; proportionate notes.

The joyous nymphs, and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their musick sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet. Spenser.

16. Mean of action; mean to an end. The original of this phrase refers to the necessity of measuring the ground upon which any structure is to be raised, or any distant effect to be produced, as in shooting at a mark. Hence he that proportioned his means to his end was said to take right measures. By degrees measures and means were confounded, and any thing done for an end, and sometimes any transaction absolutely, is calld a measure, with no more propriety than if, because an archer might be said to have taken wrong measures when his mark was beyond his reach, we should say that it was a bad measure to use a heavy arrow.

His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.

17. To have hard measure; to be hardly treated.

To MEˊASURE. v. a. [mesurer, French; mensuro, Latin.]

1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Cheronea, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow, he would find it no longer than it was before his victory. Bacon, Apophthegms.

2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.

A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shakspeare.
I'll tell thee all my whole device
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. Shakspeare.

The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way. Dryden.

3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.

Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite
Thy pow'r! What thought can measure thee, or tongue
Relate thee? Milton, P. L.

4. To adjust; to proportion.

To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Bp. Taylor.

Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange that he measures the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.

5. To mark out in stated quantities.

What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Addison, Spect.

6. To allot or distribute by measure.

With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again. St. Matt. vii. 2.

The hearts and galls of pikes are medicinable. Walton.

Medici'nal.✝ adj. [medicinalis, Latin: this word is now commonly pronounced medícinal, with the accent on the second syllable; but more properly, and more agreeably to the best authorities, medicínal, on the third. Dr. Johnson. — This is not strictly the case. For Dr. Johnson has introduced an example from Milton, as if the great poet had countenanced medicínal, where the true reading is medcinal, namely in Samson Agonistes; which Milton also had before employed in Comus; though Dr. Johnson has not noticed it. See the edition of Milton's Poetical Works, 1809, vol. v. p. 396. In like manner, two examples from Donne, now added, will shew that medcinal was the pronunciation, even though written medicinal.]

1. Having the power of healing; having physical virtue.

Come with words as medicinal as true
Honest as either; to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Since herbs and roots by dying lose not all,
But they, yea ashes too, are medicinal. Donne, Poems, p. 215.
Of medicinal and aromatick twigs. Ibid. p. 263.

The medicinal bitterness hath its ingredients, truth and charity. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 247.

And yet more medcinal is it than that Moly. Milton, Comus.

Thoughts my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts;
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise,
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb
Nor medcinal liquor can assuage. Milton, S. A.

The second causes took the swift command,
The medicinal head, the ready hand;
All but eternal doom was conquer'd by their art. Dryden.

2. Belonging to physick.

Learn'd he was in med'cinal lore,
For by his side a pouch he wore,
Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank with solder. Butler.

Such are called medicinal days by some writers, wherein no crisis or change is expected, so as to forbid the use of medicines: but it is most properly used for those days wherein purging, or any other evacuation, is more conveniently complied with. Quincy.

Medicinal hours are those wherein it is supposed that medicines may be taken, commonly reckoned in the morning fasting, about an hour before dinner, about four hours after dinner, and going to bed; but times are to be governed by the symptoms and aggravation of the distemper. Quincy.

Medi'cinally.✝ adv. [from medicinal.] Physically.

Philosophically, medicinally, to shew the causes, symptoms, and several cures of it, [melancholy,] that it may be the better avoided. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

The witnesses that leech-like liv'd on blood,
Sucking for them were med'cinally good. Dryden.

ME'DICINE.† n. s. [medicine, French; medicina, Lat. It is generally pronounced as if only of two syllables, med'cine.]

1. Physick; any remedy administered by a physician.

O, my dear father! restoration, hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A merry heart doth good like a medicine; but a broken spirit drieth the bones. Prov. xvii. 22.

I wish to die, yet dare not death endure;
Detest the medicine, yet desire the cure. Dryden.

2. A physician. [medecin, Fr.] Not in use.

Meet we the medecin of the sickly weal;
And with him pour we, in our country's purge,
Each drop of us. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To ME'DICINE.† v. a. [medeciner, old French; from the noun.] To restore or cure by medicine: to apply medicine to. Not now perhaps in use.

Not all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'dst yesterday. Shakspeare, Othello.

Thus medicining our eyes, we need not doubt to see more into the meaning. Milton, Tetrachordon.

ME'DICK.† n. s.

1. A plant; a kind of trefoil. [medica, Latin; medique, Fr.]

MEDIO'CRITY. n. s. [mediocrité, French; mediocritas, Latin.]

1. Moderate degree; middle rate.

Men of age seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.

There appeared a sudden and marvellous conversion in the duke's case, from the most exalted to the most depressed, as if his expedition had been capable of no mediocrities. Wotton.

He likens the mediocrity of wit to one of a mean fortune, who manages his store with great parsimony; but who, with fear of running into profuseness, never arrives to the magnificence of living. Dryden, State of Innocence.

Getting and improving our knowledge in substances only by experience and history, is all that the weakness of our faculties in this state of mediocrity, while we are in this world, can attain to. Locke.

2. Moderation; temperance.

Lest appetite, in the use of food, should lead us beyond that which is meet, we owe obedience to that law of reason which teacheth mediocrity in meats and drinks. Hooker.

When they urge us to extreme opposition against the church of Rome, do they mean we should be drawn unto it only for a time, and afterwards return to a mediocrity. Hooker.

To ME'DITATE. v. a. [mediter, French; meditor, Latin.]

1. To plan; to scheme; to contrive.

Some affirmed that I meditated a war; God knows, I did not then think of war. King Charles.

With inward rage he meditates his prey. Dryden.

Before the memory of the flood was lost, men meditated the setting up a false religion at Babel. Forbes.

2. To think on; to revolve in the mind.

Them among
There set a man of ripe and perfect age,
Who did them meditate all his life long. Spenser, F. Q.

Blessed is the man that doth meditate good things in wisdom, and that reasoneth of holy things. Ecclus. xiv. 20.

To ME'DITATE. v. n. To think; to muse; to contemplate: to dwell on with intense thought. It is commonly used of pious contemplation.

His delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate night and day. Psal. i. 2.

I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of all thy doings. Psal. lxxvii. 12.

Meditate till you make some act of piety upon the occasion of what you meditate; either get some new arguments against a sin, or some new encouragements to virtue. Bp. Taylor.

To worship God, to study his will, to meditate upon him, and to love him; all these being pleasure and peace. Tillotson.

MEDITA'TION. n. s. [meditation, French; meditatio, Latin.]

1. Deep thought; close attention; contrivance; contemplation.

I left the meditations wherein I was, and spake to her in anger. 2 Esd. x. 5.

'Tis most true,
That musing meditation most affects
The pensive secresy of desert cell. Milton, Comus.

Some thought and meditation are necessary; and a man may possibly be so stupid as not to have God in all his thoughts, or to say in his heart, there is none. Bentley.

2. Thought employed upon sacred objects.

His name was heavenly contemplation;
Of God and goodness was his meditation. Spenser, F. Q.

Thy thoughts to nobler meditations give,
And study how to die, not how to live. Granville.

3. A series of thoughts, occasioned by any object or occurrence. In this sense are books of meditations.

ME'DITATIVE.† adj. [from meditate.]

1. Addicted to meditation. Ainsworth.

Abeillard was pious, reserved, and meditative.
Berington, Hist. of Abeillard.

2. Expressing intention or design.

MEDITERRA'NE.
MEDITERRA'NEAN. adj. [medius and terra, mediterranée, Fr.]
MEDITERRA'NEOUS.

1. Encircled with land.

In all that part that lieth on the north side of the mediterrane sea, it is thought not to be the vulgar tongue. Brerewood.

2. Inland; remote from the sea.

It is found in mountains and mediterraneous parts; and so it is a fat and unctuous sublimation of the earth. Brown.

We have taken a less height of the mountains than is requisite, if we respect the mediterraneous mountains, or those that are at a great distance from the sea. Burnet.

ME'DIUM.† n. s. [medium, Latin. Sometimes the Latin plural media is used, instead of the English mediums.]

1. Any thing intervening.

Whether any other liquors, being made mediums, cause a diversity of sound from water, it may be tried. Bacon.

The most barbarous nations, and unpolite people, who knew no arts or sciences, and consequently no artificial media, have known, acknowledged, and worshipped a God.
Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 547.

I must bring together
All these extremes; and must remove all mediums,
That each may be the other's object. Denham.

Seeing requires light and a free medium, and a right line to the objects; we can hear in the dark, immured, and by curve lines. Holder.

He, who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, often sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour the object. Addison, Spect.

The parts of bodies on which their colours depend, are denser than the medium which pervades their interstices. Newton, Opticks.

Against filling the heavens with fluid mediums, unless they be exceeding rare, a great objection arises from the regular and very lasting motions of the planets and comets in all manner of courses through the heavens. Newton, Opticks.

2. Any thing used in ratiocination, in order to a conclusion; the middle term in an argument, by which propositions are connected.

This cannot be answered by those mediums which have been used. Dryden, Juv.

We, whose understandings are short, are forced to collect one thing from another, and in that process we seek out proper mediums. Baker on Learning.

3. The middle place or degree; the just temperature between extremes.

The just medium of this case lies betwixt the pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Estrange.

ME'DLAR.† n. s. [from mæð, Saxon; mespilus, Lat.]

1. A tree.

The leaves of the medlar are either whole, and shaped like those of the laurel, as in the manured sorts; or laciniated, as in the wild sorts: the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruits are umbilicated, and are not eatable till they decay; and have, for the most part, five hard seeds in each. Miller.

Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit,
Which maids call medlars. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. The fruit of that tree.

You'll be rotten ere you be half ripe,
And that's the right virtue of the medlar. Shakspeare.

October is drawn in a garment of yellow and carnation; with a basket of services, medlars, and chesnuts. Peacham.

No rotten medlars, whilst there be Whole orchards in virginity. Cleaveland.

Men have gather'd from the hawthorn's branch
Large medlars, imitating regal crowns. Philips.

ME'DLEY. n. s. [from meddle for mingle.] A mixture; a miscellany; a mingled mass. It is commonly used with some degree of contempt.

Some imagined that the powder in the armory had taken fire; others, that troops of horsemen approached: in which medly of conceits they bare down one upon another, and jostled many into the tower ditch. Hayward.

Love is a medley of endearments, jars,
Suspicions, quarrels, reconcilements, wars;
Then peace again. Walsh.

They count their toilsome marches, long fatigues,
Unusual fastings, and will bear no more
This medley of philosophy and war. Addison, Cato.

Mahomet began to knock down his fellow citizens, and to fill all Arabia with an unnatural medley of religion and bloodshed. Addison.

There are that a compounded fluid drain
From different mixtures: and the blended streams,
Each mutually correcting each, create
A pleasurable medley. Philips.

ME'DLEY.† adj. Mingled; confused. Originally applied to mixed colours. "Medle coloure, mixtura." Prompt. Parv.

He rode but homely in a medlee cote. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

I'm strangely discompos'd;
Qualms at my heart, convulsions in my nerves,
Within my little world make medley war. Dryden.

To ME'DLE.† }
To ME'DLY. } v. a. To mingle. See To MEDDLE.

The things taught by Mahumed are so mixt and confused, that it is no easy task to range them under distinct heads: And yet they are not more medly'd in themselves, than disadvantageously represented by writers. L. Addison, Life of Mah. p. 83.

MEDU'LLAR. }
MEDU'LLARY. } adj. [medullaire, French; from medulla, Latin.] Pertaining to the marrow.

These little emissaries, united together at the cortical part of the brain, make the medullar part, being a bundle of very small, thread-like chanels or fibres. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

The back, for the security of that medullary substance that runs down its cavity, is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

MEED.† n. s. [með, Saxon; miete, Teutonick; from the Su. Goth. maeta, to recompense. Serenius.]

1. Reward; recompence. Now rarely used.

He knows his meed if he be spide,
To be a thousand deaths and shame beside. Spenser, F. Q.

Whether in beauties glory did exceed,
A rosy garland was the victor's meede. Spenser, F. Q.

Thanks to men
Of noble minds is honourable meed. Shakspeare.

He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton, Lycidas.

If so, a cloak and vesture be my meed,
Till his return no title shall I plead. Pope, Odyssey.

2. Present; gift.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward, no meed but he repays
Seven-fold above itself. Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

To MEED.* v. a. [from the noun.] To merit; to deserve. Not in use.

And yet thy body meeds a better grave. Heywood, Silver Age, (1613.)

MEEK.† adj. [miukr, miuk, soft, Icel. and Su. Goth. See To MEEK.]

1. Mild of temper; not proud; not rough; not easily provoked: soft: gentle.

Moses was very meek above all men. Numb. xii. 3.

But he her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-ey'd peace. Milton, Ode Nativ.

We ought to be very cautious and meek-spirited, till we are assured of the honesty of our ancestors. Collier.

2. Expressing humility and gentleness.

Both confess'd
Humbly their faults, and pardon begg'd, with tears
Watering the ground, and with their sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton, P. L.

To MEEK.* v. a. [moeka, Su. Goth. mykia, Icel. from miuk.] To humble.

He that higheth himself schall be mekid; and he that mekith himself schal be enhaunsid. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxiii.

Shall not God spare weyk and feble creatures mekyng themselfe, and knowynge theyr owne infyrmyte? Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 19.

To ME'EKEN.† v. a. [from meek.] To make meek; to soften. This word I have found no where else, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the last of the passages from Thomson. It had been in use more than a century before Thomson's time, and Thomson seems to have been fond of the word.

A journey tedious for a strength so young
I undertook;—
Climb'd mountains where the wanton kidling dallies,
Then with soft steps enseal'd the meeken'd vallies,
In quest of memory. Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 1.

Where meeken'd sense, and amiable grace,
And lively sweetness dwell. Thomson, Spring.

His sweetest beams
The sun sheds equal o'er the meeken'd day. Thomson, Autumn.
The glaring lion saw, his horrid heart
Was meeken'd, and he join'd his sullen joy. Thomson.

ME'EKLY. adv. [from meek.] Mildly; gently; not ruggedly; not proudly.

Be therefore, O my dear lords, pacify'd,
And this mis-seeming discord meekly lay aside. Spenser, F. Q.
No pride does with your rising honours grow,
You meekly look on suppliant crowds below. Stepney.

ME'EKNESS. n. s. [from meek.] Gentleness; mildness; softness of temper.

That pride and meekness mixt by equal part,
Do both appear t'adorn her beauty's grace. Spenser.
You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride. Shakspeare.

When his distemper attacked him, he submitted to it with great meekness and resignation, as became a Christian. Atterbury.

MEER. adj. [See MERE.] Simple; unmixed.

MEER. n. s. [See MERE.] A lake; a boundary.

ME'ERED. adj. Relating to a boundary; meer being a boundary or mark of division. Hanmer.

What, although you fled — why should he follow?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nickt his captainship; at such a point,
When half to half the world oppos'd, he being
The meered question. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

MEET.† adj. [of obscure etymology.]

1. Fit; proper; qualified: applied both to persons and things. Now rarely used.

Ah! my dear love, why do you sleep thus long,
When meeter were that you should now awake? Spenser.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every parish, would they chuse the meetest. Whitgift.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
To be known shortens my laid intent,
My boon I make it, that you know me not,
Till time and I think meet. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
What, at any time, have you heard her say?
— That, Sir, which I will not report after her.
— You may to me, and 'tis most meet you should. Shakspeare.
York is meetest man
To be your regent in the realm of France. Shakspeare.

The eye is very proper and meet for seeing. Bentley.

2. MEET with. Even with. [from meet the verb.] A very common expression in the midland counties, and signifies, he'll be your match, he'll be even with you. Steevens.

Niece, you tax Signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you. Shakspeare.

To MEET.† v. a. pret. I met; I have met; particip. met. [metan, Saxon, to find; moeten, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Gothick motjan, to meet.]

1. To come face to face; to encounter, by travelling in opposite directions.

Met'st thou my posts? Shakspeare.

His daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and dances. Judges, xi. 34.

Meanwhile our primitive great sire, to meet
His godlike guest, walks forth. Milton, P. L.

2. To encounter in hostility.

To meet the noise
Of his almighty engine, he shall hear
Infernal thunder. Milton, P. L.
So match'd they stood;
For never but once more was either like
To meet so great a foe. Milton, P. L.

3. To encounter unexpectedly.

So judge thou still, presumptuous, till the wrath
Which thou incurr'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sevenfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell. Milton, P. L.

4. To join another in the same place.

Chance may lead where I may meet
Some wandering spirit of Heaven by fountain side
Or in thick shade retired. Milton, P. L.
I knew not, till I met
My friends, at Ceres' now deserted seat. Dryden.
Not look back to see,
When what we love we ne'er must meet again. Dryden.

5. To close one with another.

The nearer you come to the end of the lake, the mountains on each side grow higher, till at last they meet. Addison.

6. To find; to be treated with; to light on.

Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.
Of vice or virtue, whether blest or curst,
Which meets contempt, or which compassion first. Pope.
To me no greater joy,
Than that your labours meet a prosperous end. Granville.

7. To assemble from different parts. This is the right place place for the example which follows from Milton, and which the folio editions partly exhibit. But in the quarto editions it is transferred to the third meaning of the neuter verb; and Mr. Malone says, that it surely belongs to the verb neuter. Such a mistake would not have been made, if the whole passage of the poet had been duly attended to: in which met is clearly the participle of the verb active meet, i. e. having been assembled together from different parts.

Those two massy pillars
With horrible convulsion to and fro
He tugg'd, he shook, till down they came and drew
The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder
Upon the heads of all who sat beneath,
Lords, ladies, captains, counsellors, or priests,
Their choice nobility and flower, not only
Of this but each Philistian city round,
Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton, S. A.

To MEET. v. n.

1. To encounter; to close face to face.

2. To encounter in hostility.

Then born to distance by the tides of men,
Like adamant and steel they meet again. Dryden.

3. To assemble; to come together.

They appointed a day to meet in together. 2 Mac.

The materials of that building happily met together, and very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.

4. To MEET with. To light on; to find: it includes, sometimes obscurely, the idea of something unexpected.

When he cometh to experience of service abroad, he maketh as worthy a soldier as any nation he meeteth with. Spenser.

We met with many things worthy of observation. Bacon.

Hercules' meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates. Addison.

What a majesty and force does one meet with in these short inscriptions: are not you amazed to see so much history gathered into so small a compass? Addison on Anc. Medals.

5. To MEET with. To join.

Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us. Shakspeare.

6. To MEET with. To suffer unexpectedly.

He, that hath suffered this disordered spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf. Shakspeare.
A little sum you mourn, while most have met
With twice the loss, and by as vile a cheat. Creech.

7. To MEET with. To encounter; to engage.

Royal mistress,
Prepare to meet with more than brutal fury
From the fierce prince. Rowe, Amb. Step-mother.

8. To MEET with. A latinism. To obviate; occurrere objecto.

Before I proceed farther, it is good to meet with an objection, which if not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the present will not be sound. Bacon.

9. To advance half way.

He yields himself to the man of business with reluctancy, but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of desire. South.

Our meeting hearts
Consented soon, and marriage made us one. Rowe.

10. To unite; to join: as, these rivers meet at such a place and join.

ME'ETER. n. s. [from meet.] One that accosts another.

There are beside
Lascivious meeters, to whose venom'd sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen. Shakspeare.

ME'ETING. n. s. [from meet.]

1. An assembly; a convention.

If the fathers and husbands of those, whose relief this your meeting intends, were of the household of faith, then their relicts and children ought not to be strangers to the good that is done in it, if they want it. Spratt, Serm.

Since the ladies have been left out of all meetings except parties at play, our conversation hath degenerated. Swift.

2. An interview.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, and lead him on with a fine baited delay. Shakspeare.

3. A conventicle; an assembly of Dissenters.

4. A conflux: as, the meeting of two rivers.

MEETING-HOUSE. n. s. [meeting and house.] Place where Dissenters assemble to worship.

His heart misgave him that the churches were so many meeting-houses; but I soon made him easy. Addison.

ME'ETLY.† adv. [from the adjective.] Fitly; properly.

You can do better yet; but this is meetly.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

See then all this contrariety of sects meetly well reconciled. Bp. Bedell, Cop. of Cert. Lett. p. 323.

ME'ETNESS.† n. s. [from meet.] Fitness; propriety.

This worthiness of meetness, fitness, or due disposition for the heavenly glory, comprehends a deep and profound sense of our own utter unworthiness of it. Bp. Bull, Works, i. 384.

ME'GACOSM.* n. s. [μέγας, great, and κόσμος, the world, Gr.] The great world.

I desire him to give me leave to set forth our microcosm, man, in some such deformed way, as he doth the megacosm, or great world.
Bp. H. Croft, Animadv. on Burnet's Theory, (1685,) p. 138.

MEGA'POLIS.* n. s. [μέγας, great, and πόλις, a city.] A principal city; metropolis. Not in use.

Amadavad — is at this present the megapolis of Cambaya.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 64.

ME'GRIM.† n. s. [from hemicrany; Lat. hemicrania; Gr. ἡμικρανία; Fr. migrain. Our own word at first was migrim. See Huloet's Dict.] Disorder of the head.

In every megrim or vertigo there is an obtenebration joined with a semblance of turning round. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
Spleen sighs for ever on her pensive bed,
Pain at her side, and megrim at her head. Pope.

He accused some of giving all their customers colicks and megrims. Tatler, No. 131.

To MEINE.† v. a. [Dr. Johnson merely introduces this word from Ainsworth, without etymology, and without example. It is one of our oldest; and is the Sax. menȝan, to mix.] To mingle. Obsolete. The participle, meint or ment.

Of love the sickenesse
Is meint with swete and bitternesse. Chaucer, Rom. R. 2296.

The salt Medway, that trickling stremes
Adowne the dales of Kent,
Till with his elder brother Themes
His brackish waves be meynt. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

Amongst the woods and thickets ment.
Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

ME'INY.† n. s. [mesnie, French. See the second sense of the substantive many. Wicliffe uses the adjective meyneal, "Greete ghe wel her meyneal chirche," which in our present version is "the church that is in their house," Rom. xvi. 5.] A family; a retinue; domestick servants.

When Jacob came to a forde, he made all his meyny to goo before. Lib. Festiv. fol. 18. b.

Whilest all the world consisted of a few householders, the elder (or father of the family) exercised authoritie over his meyney. Lambard, Arch. p. 2.

They summon'd up their meiny; strait took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The words are a meiosis, and import much more than they express. South, vol. iv. S. 10.

ME'LAMPODE.* n. s. [melampodium, Lat.] The black hellebore.

Here grows melampode every where,
And terebinth, good for goats. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

ME'LANAGOGUES. n. s. [from μέλανος and ἄγω.] Such medicines as are supposed particularly to purge off black choler.

ME'LANCHOLICK.† adj. [from melancholy.]

1. Disordered with melancholy; fanciful; hypochondriacal; gloomy.

Our melancholick friend, Propertius,
Hath clos'd himself up in his Cynthia's tomb;
And will by no intreaties be drawn thence.
B. Jonson, Poetaster.

If he be mad, or angry, or melancholick, or sprightly, he will paint whatsoever is proportionable to any one. Dryden.

The commentators on old Ari-
Stotle, tis urg'd, in judgement vary:
They to their own conceits have brought
The image of his general thought:
Just as the melancholick eye
Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Prior.

2. Unhappy; unfortunate: causing sorrow.

The king found himself at the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholick perplexities. Clarendon.

3. Dismal. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Like the black and melancholick yew-tree,
Dost think to root thyself in dead men's graves,
And yet to prosper? Webster, Vittoria Corombona.

I was tempted to it, by the melancholique prospect I had of it.
Dryden, Lett. ed. Malone, I. 8.

MELANCHO'LIAN.* } n. s.
ME'LANCHOLICK. }

1. A person diseased with melancholy.

We shall accordingly observe omens, the falling of salt, a dream of a funeral, an unlucky day or hour, the voice of the screech-owl, odd noises in the night, to command the most solemn regards of persons whose imagination is more active and busy than their reason; heathens, women, young persons, melancholicks, superstitious or infirm persons, the illiterate multitude. Spencer on Prodigies, (1665,) p. 75.

You may observe, in the modern stories of our religious melancholians, that they commonly pass out of one passion into another, without any manner of reasoning.
Scott, Works, (ed. 1718,) ii. 125.

2. A gloomy state of mind.

My condition is much worse than yours, and different I believe from any other man's; and will very well justify the melancholick that, I confess to you, possesses me.
Ld. Clarendon, Life, P. ii.

MEʹLANCHOLILY.* adv. [from melancholy.] In a melancholy manner.

On a pedestal — is set the statue of this young lady, reposing herself in a curious wrought osier chair, all of polished alabaster; melancholily inclining her cheek to her right hand.
Keepe, Monument. Westm. (1683,) p. 62.

MEʹLANCHOLINESS.* n. s. [from melancholy.] Disposition to gloominess; state of being melancholy.

When a boy, he was playsome enough; but withall he had then a contemplative melancholiness.
Aubrey, Acc. of Hobbes, Anecd. ii. 600.

This false persuasion in the quakers of being immediately inspired, arises from the melancholiness of their temper.
Hallywell, Acc. of Familism, (1673,) p. 105.

MELANCHOʹLIOUS.* adj. [melancolieux, old French.] Melancholy; gloomy; dismal. A word well authorized, but not now in use.

And am so melancolious. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.

However flat and melancholious it be, and must serve, though to the eternal disturbance and languishing of him that complains.
Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 3.

MEʹLANCHOLIST.* n. s. [from melancholy.] One disordered with melancholy; a fanciful or hypochondriacal person.

The melancholist was afraid to sit down for fear of being broken.
Glanville, Ess. iv.

As laughter is a faculty peculiar to the human species, the resolution of a religious melancholist entirely to discard it may be reckoned a little essay towards putting away the properties of a rational creature.
Bp. Lavington, Enthus. of Meth. and Pap. i. 20.

To MEʹLANCHOLIZE.* v. n. [from melancholy.] To become melancholy or gloomy.

They dare not come abroad all their lives after, but melancholize in corners, and keep in holes.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 99.

His phantasy is so restless, operative, and quick, that if it be not in perpetual action, ever employed, it will work upon itself, melancholize, and be carried away instantly with some fear, jealousy, discontent, suspicion, some vain conceit or other.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 290.

If we be not otherwise well employed, we shall be apt in our thoughts to melancholize, and doat upon our misfortunes; the sense of them will fasten upon our spirits, and gnaw our hearts.
Barrow, vol. iii. S. 5.

To MEʹLANCHOLIZE.* v. a. To make sad or melancholy. With the accent formerly on the second syllable, as it was also upon melancholy. See MELANCHOLY.

That thick cloud, you are now enveloped with, of melancholized old age, and undeserved adversity.
More, Song of the Soul, Dedicat. (1647.)

Like faithless wife, that by her frampared guise,
Peevish demeanour, sullen sad disdain,
Doth inly deep the spright melancholize
Of her aggrieved husband. More, Song of the Soul, i. iii. 40.

MEʹLANCHOLY.† n. s. [melancolie, Fr. from μέλανος and χολὴ, Greek.— This word was formerly accented on the second syllable by our poets, as by Spenser, B. Jonson, and Drayton; which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. Yet it was evidently poetick licence only; for Drayton thus uses the word, with the accent both on the first and second syllables:

" And, being rouz'd out of melánchollý,
" Fly, whirle-winde thoughts, unto the heavens, quoth he."
Drayton, Shepheard's Garland, (1593,) p. 4.

" But mélancholie grafted in thy braine."
Ibid. p. 5.

It may be added, that this word is rarely found in the plural number. An instance occurs in Lord Rivers's translation of the Dictes and Sayings of the Philosophers, printed by Caxton in 1477. " The maistre of a grete house hath many melancolyes," sign. F. vi.]

1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundance of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli. Quincy.

2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.

I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politick; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shakspeare, As you like it.

3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.

He protested, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him. Sidney.

All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;
What is it else but penury of soul,
A lazy frost, a numbness of the mind. Dryden.

In those deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heavenly-pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns. Pope.

MEʹLANCHOLY. adj. [melancolique, French.]

1. Gloomy; dismal.

Think of all our miseries
But as some melancholy dream, which has awak'd us
To the renewing of our joys. Denham.

If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
Burn on through death, and animate my shade. Pope.

2. Diseased with melancholy; fanciful; habitually dejected.

How now, sweet Frank; art thou melancholy? Shakspeare.

He observes Lamech more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Locke.

*MELAʹNGE. n. s. [French.] A mixture.

Our conversation was a strange melange of French and Italian. Drummond, Trav. Lett. 2. (1744.)

MELICEʹRIS. n. s. [μελικηρὶς.]

Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cystis, and consisting of matter like honey. If the matter resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a suety substance, steatomy. Sharp.

MEʹLILOT. n. s. [melilot, French; melilotus, Latin.] A plant.

To MEʹLIORATE. v. a. [meliorer, French; from melior.] To better; to improve.

Grafting meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock than in the crude earth. Bacon.

But when we graft, or buds inoculate,
Nature by art we nobly meliorate. Denham.

A man ought by no means to think that he should be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness. South.

Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. Graunt.

Much labour is requir'd in trees,
Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd,
New soil to make, and meliorate the rest. Dryden, Virg.

MELIORA'TION.† n. s. [melioration, French; from meliorate.] Improvement; act of bettering.

For the melioration of musick there is yet much left, in this point of exquisite consorts, to try. Bacon.

Which is found a notable way for melioration of the fruit. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 47.

A direct discouragement of melioration; as directly as if the law had said in express terms, Thou shalt not improve. Burke, Tracts on the Popery Laws.

MELIO'RITY. n. s. [from melior.] State of being better. A word very elegant, but not used.

Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despight of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the meliority above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

To MELL.† v. n. [meler, se meler, French.] To mix; to meddle. Obsolete.

Here is a great deal of good matter
Lost for lack of telling:
Now sicker I see thou dost but clatter,
Harm may come of melling. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Hence, ye profane, mell not with holy things! Bp. Hall, Sat.

MELL.* n. s. [mel, Latin.] Honey.

Her smiles were sober, and her lookes were chearfull unto all;
Even such as neither wanton seeme, nor waiward; mell, nor gall. Warner, Albion's England.

MELLI'FEROUS. adj. Productive of honey. Dict.

MELLIFICA'TION. n. s. [mellifico, Latin.] The art or practice of making honey; production of honey.

In judging of the air, many things besides the weather ought to be observed: in some countries, the silence of grasshoppers, and want of mellification in bees. Arbuthnot.

MELLI'FLUENCE.† n. s. [mel and fluo, Latin.] A honied flow; a flow of sweetness.

He was rather struck with the pastoral mellifluence of its lyric measures. Warton, Milton's Sm. Poems, Pref.

MELLI'FLUENT.† } adj. [mel and fluo, Latin.] Flowing with honey; flowing with sweetness.
MELLI'FLUOUS. }

A mellifluous voice, as I am a true knight. Shakspeare.

As all those things which are most mellifluous are soonest changed into choler and bitterness, so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrows. Ralegh.

Innumerous songsters, in the freshening shade
Of new sprung leaves, their modulations mix
Mellifluous. Thomson, Spring.

The freely flowing verse
In thy immortal praise, O form divine,
Smooths her mellifluent stream. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 1.

And thus I construed the mellifluent strain. Shenstone, Eleg. 6.

ME'LLOW.† adj. [meappa, soft, Saxon, Skinner: more nearly from mollis, molle, mollow, mellow; though r is indeed easily changed into l in common speech. Dr. Johnson. — Su. Goth. miell, miallr, facilè solubilis; miaellsoet, prædulcis. Serenius.]

1. Soft with ripeness; full ripe.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves. Shakspeare.

An apple in my hand works different effects upon my senses: my eye tells me it is green; my nose, that it hath a mellow scent; and my taste, that it is sweet. Digby.

A little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit, without a winter storm. Dryden.

2. Soft in sound.

Of seven smooth joints a mellow pipe I have,
Which with his dying breath Damætas gave. Dryden.

3. Soft; unctuous.

Camomile sheweth mellow grounds fit for wheat. Bacon.

4. Drunk; melted down with drink.

Greedy of physicians' frequent fees,
From female mellow praise he takes degrees. Roscommon.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a testy, touchy, pleasant fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.

To ME'LLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To ripen; to mature; to soften by ripeness; to ripen by age.

Lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death, and more than so, my father;
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years. Shakspeare.

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine. Addison.

2. To soften.

They plow in the wheat stubble in December; and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April. Mortimer, Husb.

3. To mature to perfection.

This episode, now the most pleasing entertainment of the Æneis, was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it. Dryden.

To ME'LLOW. v. n. To be matured; to ripen.

Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'st, what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good, till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there; we're stubborn clay. Donne.

ME'LLOWNESS.† n. s [from mellow.]

1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.

My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple. Digby of Bodies.

The Spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,
But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use:
So age a mature mellowness doth set
On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.

2. Maturity; full age.

3. Softness of sound.

This is that "suaviloquentia," that mellowness and sweetness of speaking, so much praised in some of the Roman orators, in opposition to the rusticity of noisy declaimers. Abp. Hort, Instruct. to the Clergy of Tuam.

ME'LLOWY.* adj. [from mellow.] Soft; unctuous.

Whose mellowy gleabe doth bear
The yellow ripen'd sheaf. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 10.

MELOCO'TON n. s. [melocotone, Spanish; malum, cotoneum, Lat.] A quince. Obsolete.

In apricots, peaches, or melocotones upon a wall, the greatest fruits are towards the bottom. Bacon.

MELO'DIOUS.† adj. [melodieux, Fr. Cotgrave.] Musical; harmonious.

Fountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs; warbling tune his praise. Milton, P. L.

And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
A musick more melodious than the spheres. Dryden.

Melo'diously.† adv. [from melodious.] Musically; harmoniously.

If Apollo will promise
Melodiously it to devise. Skelton, Poems, p. 239.

A voice, which, without being accompanied by any instrument, did resound so melodiously. Shelton, D. Quix. iii. 13.

He stopt to listen, and to see
Who sung there so melodiouslie.
Old Ballad, Percy's Rel. iii. i. 17.

Melo'diousness. n. s. [from melodious.] Harmoniousness; musicalness.

Me'lodrame.* n. s. [melodrame, French; from μέλος, a song, and δράμα, a drama, Greek.] A modern word for a dramatick performance, in which songs are intermixed.

MELODY.† n. s. [melodie, French; μελῳδία, Greek.] Musick; sweetness of sound.

Melody may be defined the means or method of ranging single musical sounds in a regular progression, either ascending or descending, according to the established principles. Avison on Musical Expression.

The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in musick also, judging them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him a number of divinely indited poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in public prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of men's hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God. Hooker.

Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. Ephesians.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And husht with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody. Shakspeare.

Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse. Thomson, Spring.

Me'lon. n. s. [melon, Fr. melo, Latin.]

1. A plant.

The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embrio; others are fruitful, growing upon the embrio, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three seminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Miller.

2. The fruit.

We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers and the melons. Num. xi. 5.

Melon-thi'stle. n. s. [melococtus, Latin.]

The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance. Miller.

Me'lrose.* n. s. [mell and rose.]

What I used was a mixture of mel-rose, with sixteen drops of the muriatic acid. Fordyce on the Mur. Acid, p. 8.

To MELT. v. a. [meltan, Saxon.]

1. To dissolve; to make liquid; commonly by heat.

How they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me! Shakspeare.

When the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil. Isa. lxiv. 2.

This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.

The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade. Pope.

If your butter when melted tastes of brass, it is your master's fault, who will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift.

2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.

To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.

3. To soften to love or tenderness.

The mighty master smil'd to see
That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryden, Alex. Feast.

Alas! the story melts away my soul. Addison, Cato.

4. To waste away.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.

To Melt. v. n.

1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.

Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psalms.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.

I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Dighton and Forrest;
Albeit, they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakspeare.

This said; the mov'd assistants melt in tears. Dryden.

Melting into tears, the pious man
Deplor'd so sad a sight. Dryden.

3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted as breath into the wind. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. Shakspeare.

4. To be subdued by affliction.

My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me. Psalms.

Melt.* n. s. See Milt.

Me'lter. n. s. [from melt.] One that melts metals.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore. Derham, Physico-Theol.

Me'ltingly. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.

Me'lting.* n. s. [melꞇunᵹ, Sax.] Act of softening; inteneration.

With the same bowels, and meltings of affection, with which any tender mother hears and bemoans the groanings of her sick child. South, Serm. ii. 63.

Zelmane lay upon a bank, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought she began meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river. Sidney.

Me'ltingness.* n. s. [from melting.] Disposition to be softened by love or tenderness.

Give me, O thou Father of compassion, such a tenderness and meltingness of heart, that I may be deeply affected with all the miseries and calamities, outward and inward, of my brethren, and diligently employ all my abilities for their succour and relief. Wh. Duty of Man, Coll. for Charity.

Me'lwel.† n. s. [mole, mialldr, Icel. piscis marini species. Serenius.] A kind of fish.

ME'MBER. n. s. [membre, French; membrum, Latin.]

1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Matth.

The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Jam. iii. 5.

If shape it might be call'd, that shape had none,
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton, P. L.

2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.

Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction in which the respondent denied it. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

3. Any part of an integral.

In poetry as in architecture, not only the whole but the principal members, should be great. Addison.

4. One of a community.

My going to demand justice upon the five members, my enemies loaded with obloquies. King Charles.

Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made
Me free, a member of the tuneful trade. Dryden.

Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done service to their country. Addison.

ME'MBERED.* adj. [from member, Fr. membru.] Having limbs: as, big-membered, big-limbed, strong. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. It is also a term of heraldry, applied to the beak and legs of a bird, when of a different tincture from the body.

ME'MBERSHIP.* n. s. [from member.] Community; society; union.

Men, whose mystick obligation
Of mutual membership doth them invite
To careful tenderness and free compassion.
Beaumont, Psyche, x. 245.

No advantages from external church membership, or profession of the true religion, can of themselves give a man confidence towards God. South, Serm. ii. 398.

ME'MBRANE. n. s. [membrane, Fr. membrana, Latin.] A membrane is a web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded. Quincy.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth after tear asunder. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They obstacle find none
Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:
Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,
Total they mix. Milton, P. L.

The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.

MEMBRANA'CEOUS. MEMBRA'NEOUS. ME'MBRANOUS. } adj. [membraneux, Fr. from membrana, Lat.] Consisting of membranes.

Lute-strings, which are made of the membraneous parts of the guts strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather. Boyle.

Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-how. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Such birds as are carnivorous have no gizzard, or musculous, but a membranous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranous stomach. Ray on Creation.

Anodyne substances, which take off contractions of the membranous parts, are diuretick. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

MEME'NTO. n. s. [Latin.] A memorial notice; a hint to awaken the memory.

Our master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is but a man, and seasonable memento's may be useful. Bacon.

Is not the frequent spectacle of other people's deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? L'Estrange.

MEMO'IR.† n. s. [memoire, French. The accent perhaps is now usually upon the first syllable, rather than upon the last as Dr. Johnson places it, and as Prior's poetry gives it.]

1. An account of transactions familiarly written.

Be our great master's future charge
To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs
High schemes of government and plans of wars. Prior.

2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

I set this memoire down, because A. W. had acquaintance with both of them.
Life of A. Wood, (under the year 1657,) p. 100.

There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected. Arbuthnot on Coins.

ME'MORABLE. adj. [memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.

Nothing I so much delight to recount, as the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes. Sidney.

From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
Which all men have surviving fame to gain,
By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds,
For she that this desires doth still remain. Davies.

Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In sight of what he durst not once defend;
But basely fled that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey.
Dryden.

ME'MORABLY. adv. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.

MEMORA'NDUM.† n. s. [Latin. In the plural, memoranda and memorandums.] A note to help the memory.

I resolved to new pave every street, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly. Guardian.

Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the schools. Swift.

The advice here given to the curious traveller of making all his memoranda on the spot, and the reasons for it, deserve our notice. Mason, Notes on Gray's Letters.

To ME'MORATE.* v. a. [memoro, Lat.] To make mention of a thing. Not in use. Cockeram.

ME'MORATIVE.* adj. [memoratif, Fr.] Tending to preserve memory of any thing.

The story of God's appearing to Jacob at Luz, Gen. 28., is so known a passage, so remarkable even to children by that memorative topick, the ladder and the angels, that I shall not need assist your memories. Hammond, Works, iv. 496.

MEMO'RIAL. adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Latin.]

1. Preservative of memory.

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kisses to it. Shakspeare.

May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it. Broome.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies raise;
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

2. Contained in memory.

The case is with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memories. Watts.

MEMO'RIAL. n. s.

1. A monument; something to preserve memory.

Churches have names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the Trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, saint, or martyr; many of all. Hooker.

A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord. Num. xvi. 43.

All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writing, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage. Hale.

In other parts like deeds deserv'd
Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought. Milton, P. L.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South, Serm.

Medals are so many monuments consigned over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost. Addison on Medals.

2. Hint to assist the memory.

He was a prince sad, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history. Hayward.

3. An address; reminding of services and soliciting reward.

MEMO'RIALIST. n. s. [from memorial.] One who writes memorials.

I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memorialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord. Spectator.

ME'MORIST.* n. s. [from memory.] One that causes things to be remembered.

Conscience, the punctual memorist within us. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 21.

To ME'MORIZE. v. a. [from memory.]

1. To record; to commit to memory by writing.

They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the same was supposed. Spenser on Ireland.

Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time; for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries. Wotton.

2. To cause to be remembered.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

ME'MORY.† n. s. [memoire, Fr. memoria, Latin.]

1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence; recollection.

Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.

The memory is perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may ruminate, when their present pasture fails. Addison, Spect.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth! Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. Time of knowledge.

Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
How first this world, and face of things, began,
And what, before thy memory, was done. Milton, P. L.

4. Memorial; monumental record.

Be better suited;
These weeds are memories of those worser hours:
I pr'ythee put them off. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Christ—did institute, and in his holy Gospel command us to continue, a perpetual memory of that his precious death, until his coming again. Communion Service.

The memory and monuments of good men
Are more than lives. Beaum. and Fl. Doub. Marriage.

A swan in memory of Cycnus shines;
The mourning sisters weep in wat'ry signs. Addison.

5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To ME'MORY.* v. a. To lay up in the memory. Obsolete.

Ful worthy ben thy wordes to memorie
To every wight, that wit and reson can. Chaucer, March. Tale.

MEN.† The plural of man. Men's is often used for the genitive plural; but is condemned by bishop Hurd. "It draws men's minds off from the bitterness of party." Addison, Spect. No. 262. We say, a man's mind; but we can only say, the minds of men; as Addison should have done in the passage cited.

Wits live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham.

For men, there are to be considered the valour and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldier's heart. Bacon, War with Spain.

He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war. Clarendon.

MEN-PLE'ASER. n. s. [men and pleaser.] One too careful to please others.

Servants be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. Eph. vi. 6.

To ME'NACE.† v. a. [menacer, Fr. from minax, minacis, Latin. At first our word was written manace, as by Wicliffe and Chaucer; but in 1486 Caxton writes it menace.] To threaten; to threat.

Who ever knew the heavens menace so? Shakspeare.
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale? Shakspeare.
My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. Shakspeare.

From this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

What shou'd he do? 'Twas death to go away,
And the god menac'd if he dar'd to stay. Dryden, Fab.

ME'NACE. n. s. [menace, Fr. from the verb.] Threat.

He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The Trojans view the dusty cloud from far,
And the dark menace of the distant war. Dryden, Æn.

ME'NACER. n. s. [menaceur, Fr. from menace.] A threatener; one that threats.

Hence, menacer! nor tempt me into rage:
This roof protects thy rashness. But begone! Philips.

ME'NACING.* n. s. [from menace.] Threat.

These, many times, instead of convincing the judgements of sober persons, like learned divines and serious Christians, fall to cavillings and menacings. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 66.

MENA'GE.† n. s. [French.]

1. A collection of animals.

I saw here the largest menage that I ever met with. Addison.

ME'NAGOGUE. n. s. [μῆνες and ἄγω.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menses.

ME'NALD, or ME'NILD.* adj. A term applied to deer, whose skins are beautifully variegated; and by Cotgrave to birds, under the Fr. Maillé. "Perdrix maillée, a maylde, menild, or spotted partridge." Perhaps it may be from the Sax. menᵹan, to mix.

To MEND. v. a. [emendo, Latin.]

1. To repair from breach or decay.

They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend the house. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 10.

2. To correct; to alter for the better.

The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives of the persons who composed it. Temple.

You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to mend the weakness of his constitution. Locke.

Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
Nay, show'd his faults — but when would poets mend? Pope.

Their opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended. Swift.

3. To help; to advance.

Whatever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and impairs others: and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong. Bacon.

If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum stans of the schools, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

Though in some lands the grass is but short, yet it mends garden herbs and fruit. Mortimer, Husb.

4. To improve; to increase.

Death comes not at call; Justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace, for prayer, or cries. Milton, P. L.

When upon the sands the traveller,
Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
While death behind him covers all the place. Dryden.

He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings. Dryden.

To MEND.† v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good; to be changed for the better.

Mend, when thou canst; be better at thy leisure. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

ME'NDABLE.† adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low, but old, word. Sherwood.

MENDA'CIOUS.* adj. [from mendax, mendacis, Lat.] False; lying.

MENDS for amends.

Let her be as she is: If she be fair, 'tis the better for her; and if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands. Shakspeare.

ME'NIAL.† adj. [from meiny or many; mesnie, old French.]

1. Belonging to the retinue, or train of servants.

Two menial dogs before their master press'd;
Thus clad, and guarded thus, he seeks his kingly guest. Dryden, Æn.

2. Swift seems not to have known the meaning of this word, Dr. Johnson says; but surely, in the passage cited, it means belonging to the office of a servant, and is perfectly intelligible. Swift means the lowest offices.

The women attendants perform only the most menial offices. Gulliver's Travels.

ME'NIAL.† n. s. One of the train of servants.

Menials are those servants, which live within their master's walls. Termes de la Ley.

Surely the great Housekeeper of the world, whose charge we are, will never leave any of his menials without the bread of sufficiency. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

ME'NDMENT.* n. s. [from mend.] Amendment.

Zealous he was, and would have all things mended;
But by that mendment nothing els he ment
But to be king; to that marke was his bent. Mir. for Mag. p. 355.

MENI'NGES. n. s. [μηνιγξ.] The meninges are the two membranes that envelope the brain, which are called the pia mater and dura mater; the latter being the exterior involucrum, is, from its thickness, so denominated.

2. Pertaining to a menstruum. [menstrueux, Fr.]

The dissents of the menstrual or strong waters hinder the incorporation, as well as those of the metal. Bacon.

ME'NSTRUOUS. adj. [menstruus, Lat.]

1. Having the catamenia.

O thou of late belov'd,
Now like a menstruous woman art remov'd. Sandys.

2. Happening to women at certain times.

Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstruous eruptions. Brown.

ME'NSTRUUM. n. s. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chymists, about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]

All liquors are called menstruums which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of ingredients by infusion, decoction. Quincy.

Enquire what is the proper menstruum to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrua will dissolve any metal. Bacon.

White metalline bodies must be excepted, which, by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in menstruums they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent. Newton.

MENSURABI'LITY. n. s. [mensurabilité, Fr.] Capacity of being measured.

ME'NSURABLE.† adj. [mensurable, Fr. Cotgrave; from mensura, Lat.] Measurable; that may be measured.

ME'NTAL. adj. [mentale, French; mentis, Latin.] Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power
This eye shoots forth? How big imagination
Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakspeare, Timon.

So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,
Even to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton, P. L.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that affects the palate. Addison.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them. Locke.

She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,
Of plastick forms, and mental pow'rs. Prior.

Those inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and mental ideas, belonging to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them. Watts.

ME'NTALLY. adv. [from mental.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically or externally, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body. Bentley.

ME'NTION. n. s. [mention, Fr. mentio, Lat.]

1. Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.

Think on me when it shall be well with thee; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh. Gen. xl. 14.

The Almighty introduces the proposal of his laws rather with the mention of some particular acts of kindness, than by reminding mankind of his severity. Rogers.

2. Cursory or incidental nomination.

Haply mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask. Milton, P. L.

To ME'NTION. v. a. [mentionner, Fr. from the noun.] To write or express in words or writing.

Charity casts out all other mercenariness.
Wh. Duty of Man, Sund. xvi.

To forego the pleasures of sense, and undergo the hardships that attend a holy life, is such a kind of mercenariness, as none but a resigned, believing soul is likely to be guilty of; if fear itself, and even the fear of hell, may be one justifiable motive of men's actions. Boyle.

ME'RCENARY. adj. [mercenaire, Fr. mercenarius, Lat.]

1. Venal; hired; sold for money.

Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie drown'd, and soak'd in mercenary blood. Shakspeare.

Divers Almains, who served in the garrisons, being merely mercenary, did easily incline to the strongest. Haywood.

2. Too studious of profit; acting only for hire.

The appellation of servant imports a mercenary temper, and denotes such an one as makes his reward both the sole motive and measure of his obedience. South, Serm.

'Twas not for nothing I the crown resign'd;
I still must own a mercenary mind. Dryden, Aurengz.

ME'RCENARY.† n. s. [mercenaire, Fr.] A hireling; one retained or serving for pay.

There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

He a poor mercenary serves for bread;
For all his travel, only cloth'd and fed. Sandys.

ME'RCER.† n. s. [mercier, French. Dr. Johnson.— Originally a mercer was a dealer in various articles; a sort of pedlar, as Cotgrave renders mercier, "a mean haberdasher of small wares, a tradesman that retails all manner of small wares, and hath no better than a shed or booth for his shop." The Spanish mercero is much the same. Both are from the Latin merx, mercis, any kind of merchandise. See also MERCERY.] One who sells silks.

The draper and mercer may measure religion as they please, and the weaver cast her upon what loom he please. Howell.

ME'RCERSHIP.* n. s. [from mercer.] Business of a mercer.

He confesseth himself to be an egregious fool to leave his mercership and go to be a musqueteer. Howell, Lett. ii. 62.

Me'rriness. n. s. [from merry.] Mirth; merry disposition.

The stile shall give us cause to climb in the merriness. Shakspeare.

ME'RRY.† adj. [Dr. Johnson has offered no etymology; it is the Sax. mýriᵹ, miriᵹe, meriᵹ, merie; of which an ancient sense is sweet, pleasant, agreeable; and so merry is used by our old authors. In Gen. xiii. 10. miriᵹe is applied to the plain of Jordan, where our present translation uses the words, "as the garden of God;" and a more ancient one, "paradise;" to denote a pleasant and fruitful country: and thus some of the old commentators, "sicut locus amœnissimus."]

1. Pleasant; sweet; agreeable; delightful; charming. Dr. Johnson has given, as a third illustration of this word, a single example from Dryden, with the definition of prosperous; which belongs to the present meaning, hitherto overpassed in our dictionaries. Spenser thus applies merry to wind and weather; i. e. pleasant, or agreeable, not foul, not tempestuous, fair.

The nightingale with so mery a note
Answer'd him, that alle the wood rong. Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

His vois was merier than the mery orgon,
On masse daies that in the churches gon. Chaucer, Nonnes Pr. Tale.

Till mery wind and weather call her thence away. Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 1.

The merry harp with the lute, [in the older version, pleasant harp.] Psalm lxxxi. 2.

In my small pinnace I can sail,
Contemning all the blustering roar;
And running with a merry gale,
With friendly stars my safety seek,
Within some little winding creek,
And see the storm ashore. Dryden.

2. Laughing; loudly cheerful; gay of heart.

They drank and were merry with him. Gen. xliii. 34.

The vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted sigh. Isa. xxiv.

Some that are of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company into which they come to be sad and ill-disposed; and others that are of a jovial nature, do dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Man is the merriest species of the creation; all above and below him are serious. Addison.

3. Causing laughter.

You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death;
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest. Shakspeare.

4. To make Merry. To junket; to be jovial.

Merry-andrew.† n. s. [This term is traced to a facetious practitioner in physick of Henry the Eighth's time, and who is said to have been the physician of that monarch. His name was Andrew Borde. "Dr. Borde was an ingenious man, and knew how to humour and please his patients, readers, and auditors. In his travels and visits, he often appeared and spoke in publick: and would often frequent markets and fairs, where a conflux of people used to get together, to whom he prescribed: and to induce them to flock thither the more readily, he would make humorous speeches, couched in such language as caused mirth, and wonderfully propagated his fame!—'Twas from the Doctor's method of using such speeches at markets and fairs, that in aftertimes those that imitated the like humorous, jocose language, were styled Merry Andrews; a term much in vogue on our stages." Hearne. Benedict. Abb. ed. Ox. 1735, tom. i. Præf. p. 50.] A buffoon; a zany; a jack-pudding.

He would be a statesman because he is a buffoon; as if there went no more to the making of a counsellor, than the faculties of a merry-andrew or tumbler. L'Estrange.

The first who made the experiment was a merry-andrew. Spectator.

MERRYMEETING.* n. s. [merry and meet.] A meeting for mirth; a festival.

It struck their fancy luckily, and maintained the merry-meeting. Bp. Taylor, House of Feasting.

MESERA'ICK. n. s. [μεσάραιον: mesaraique, French: analogy requires it mesaraick.] Belonging to the mysentery.

It taketh leave of the permanent parts at the mouths of the meseraicks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion into the siege. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The most subtile part of the chyle passeth immediately into the blood by the absorbent vessels of the guts, which discharge themselves into the meseraick veins. Arbuthnot.

MESE'EMS.† impersonal verb. [me and seems, or it seems to me: for this word it is now too common to use methinks or methought, an ungrammatical word. Dr. Johnson. — But see METHINKS.] I think; it appears to me; methinks.

Me semeth that the partye that forfayteth his maryage dooth ayenst the law of nature.

Boke of Good Maners, (Caxt. 1486,) f. iii. b.

Alas, of ghosts I hear the ghastly cries;
Yet there, meseems, I hear her singing loud. Sidney.

Meseemed by my side a royal maid,
Her dainty limbs full softly down did lay. Spenser, F. Q.

To that general subjection of the land meseems that the custom or tenure can be no bar nor impeachment.

Spenser on Ireland.

ME'SENTERY. n. s. [μεσεντέριον; mesentere, Fr.] That round which the guts are convolved.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden.

With all their mouths the nerves the spirits drink,
Which through the cells of the fine strainers sink:
These all the channell'd fibres every way,
For motion and sensation, still convey:
The greatest portion of the arterial blood,
By the close structure of the parts withstood,
Whose narrow meshes stop the grosser flood. Blackmore.

To MESH.† v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a net: to ensnare.

They were so meshed in this kynde of follie, that they knewe neither what they sayde, nor what they did.

North, Tr. of Philosoph. at Court, (1575,) p. 89.

The flies by chance mesht in her hair,
By the bright radiance thrown
From her clear eyes, rich jewels were,
They so like diamonds shone. Drayton.

ME'SHY. adj. [from mesh.] Reticulated; of network.

Some build his house, but thence his issue barre,
Some make his meashy bed, but reave his rest. Carew.

Their idle wings. Thomson.

ME'SLIN.† n. s. [from mesler, French, to mix; or rather corruptly pronounced for miscellane. See MASLIN. Dr Johnson. — It has been there observed, that the word is more probably of Goth. origin; mastelluyn, Teut. farrago; mỿſtlic, Sax. various.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

What reason is there which should but induce, and therefore much less enforce, us to think, that care of dissimilitude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than of charging them withal not to sow their fields with meslin. Hooker, iv. § 7.

If worke for the thresher ye mind for to have,
Of wheat and of mestlin unthreshed go save. Tusser.

MESOLEU'CYS. n. s. [μεσόλευκος.] A precious stone, black, with a streak of white in the middle. Dict.

MESO'LOGARITHMS. n. s. [μέσος, λόγος, and αριθμος.] The logarithms of the cosines and tangents, so denominated by Kepler. Harris.

MESO'MELAS. n. s. [μεσομέλας.] A precious stone with a black vein parting every colour in the midst. Bailey.

MESPRI'SE.† n. s. [mespris, French. Dr. Johnson gives the word mespise, supposing it to be an errour of the press in the first passage from Spenser, which only he has cited. It is indeed an errour made in the second edition of the Fairy Queen, which some editions have followed. But mesprise is repeated by the poet.] Contempt; scorn.

Mammon was much displeas'd, yet note he chuse
But bear the rigour of his bold mesprise,
And thence him forward led, him further to entice.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 39.

Then, if all fayle, we will by force it win,
And eke reward the wretch for his mesprise,
As may be worthy of his hainous sin. Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 9.

And Atè eke provokt him privily
With love of her, and shame of such mesprize.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 11.

MESS.† n. s. [mes, old French; messo, Italian; missus, Latin; mes, Gothick; meſe, Saxon, a dish. Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of the Sax. meſȳan, cibare, to furnish meat or food: in French mets; in Italian messo, from the same verb. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 327. — I differ both from Dr. Johnson and Mr. Tooke. Yet Dr. Johnson, in part of his etymology, is thus supported by bishop Patrick. "It was the ancient custom for great men to honour such as were in their favour, by sending dishes to them, which were first served up to themselves: from whence they were called missa, messes, things sent." Note on Genesis, xliii.

34. But I consider the word as denoting a measure or portion; and thus Sir John Chardin informs us that in Persia, Arabia, and the Indies a carver parts each dish, which is set before the master of the house, or the principal guest, or in the middle of the hall, into as many portions, put into different plates, as there are people to eat. And so Benjamin's mess, on which the learned bishop has made the preceding remark, is five portions, or five times as much of every thing as any of his brethren's. Our word, in this sense, is to be found in the Germ. mass, a measure: and thus, in our old lexicography, mess is explained "a mease of meat, a mease of pottage." Huloet's Dict. See also Mease.]

1. A dish; a quantity of food sent to table together.

The bounteous huswife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Shakspeare, Timon.

Now your traveller,
And his toothpick at my worship's mess. Shakspeare.

I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Herbs and other country messes,
Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses. Milton, L'All.

Had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes. Decay of Chr. Piety.

From him he next receives it thick or thin,
As pure a mess almost as it came in. Pope.

2. The ordinary of military men at a regulated price; the meal provided for a certain number. See To Mess.

To Mess.✝ v. n.

1. To eat; to feed. If this be the general sense of the word, of which however Dr. Johnson gives neither example nor etymon, it may be from the Saxon meꞅꞇian, to furnish meat or food.

2. To contribute to the common expence of the table in settled proportions; to eat and drink together at a regulated price. Chiefly a military phrase. [from the substantive.]

We will place them at an inn, where the officers of a regiment he had served in were messing. Pye, Sketches on Var. Subjects, (1796,) p. 10.

Me'ssage.✝ n. s. [message, Fr. q. d. med-saegen, à Suio-Goth. med, cum, with, and saega, dicere, to speak. Serenius.] An errand; any thing committed to another to be told to a third.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,
To bear the message of her gentle spright. Spenser.

May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears! Shakspeare.

She is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wonderous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakspeare.

Gently hast thou told
Thy message, which might else in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton, P. L.

Let the minister be low, his interest inconsiderable, the word will suffer for his sake; the message will still find reception according to the dignity of the messenger. South.

The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd;
'Twas to be wish'd and hop'd, but scarce believ'd. Dryden.

Me'ssenger.✝ n. s. [messager, French. Dr. Johnson. — And so our own word was at first written. "This messager turmented was, till he tellen plat and plain, &c." Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.] One who carries an errand; one who comes from another to a third; one who brings an account or foretoken of any thing; an harbinger; a forerunner.

Came running in, much like a man dismaid,
A messenger with letters, which his message said. Spenser.

Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakspeare.

The earl dispatched messengers one after another to the king, with an account of what he heard and believed he saw, and yet thought not fit to stay for an answer. Clarendon.

Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd
Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope.

MESSI'AH. n. s. [from the Hebrew.] The Anointed; the Christ; the Saviour of the world; the Prince of peace.

Great and publick opposition the magistrates made against Jesus, the man of Nazareth, when he appeared as the Messiah. Watts on the Mind.

Messi'ahship.* n. s. The office of the Messiah.

The Messiahship was pretended to by several imposters; but fallacy and falsehood being naturally weak, they still sunk and came to nothing. South, Serm. iii. 286.

Christ — gave as strong a proof of his Messiahship, as infinite power, joined with equal veracity, could give. South, Serm. iii. 382.

MESSI'EURS. n. s. [French, plural of monsieur.] Sirs; gentlemen.

Me'ssmate. n. s. [mess and mate.] One who eats at the same table.

Me'ssuage. n. s. [messuagium, law Latin; formed perhaps from mesnage by mistake of the n in court-hand for u, they being written alike, mesnage from maison, French.] The house and ground set apart for household uses.

Met, the preterite and part. of meet.

A set of well-meaning gentlemen in England, not to be met with in other countries, take it for granted they can never be wrong so long as they oppose ministers of state. Addison, Freeholder.

META'BASIS. n. s. [Greek.] In rhetorick, a figure by which the orator passes from one thing to another. Dict.

Meta'bola. n. s. [μεταβολή.] In medicine, a change of time, air, or disease.

Metaca'rpal. adj. [from metacarpus.] Belonging to the metacarpus. Dict.

It will facilitate the separation in the joint, when you cut the finger from the metacarpal bone. Sharp, Surgery.

Metaca'rpus. n. s. [μεταχάρπιον.] In anatomy, a bone of the arm made up of four bones, which are joined to the fingers. Dict.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis; as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wiseman, Surgery.

Meta'chronism.* n. s. [μετὰ and χρόνος, Gr.] A mistake in the computation of time.

Capellus laboureth to prove that it is a metachronism of six years, Kepler of five. Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 165.

An error committed herein [the designation of time] is called anachronism: and either saith too much, and that is a prochronism, or too little, and that is a metachronism. Ibid. p. 174.

Me'tage.* n. s. [from To mete.] Measurement of coals.

Metagra'mmatism. n. s. [μετὰ and γράμμα.]

Anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, is a dissolution of a name into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Camden.

METAL. n. s. [metal, French; metallum, Lat.]

1. We understand by the term metal a firm, heavy, and hard substance, opake, fusible by fire, and concreting again when cold into a solid body such as it was before, which is malleable under the hammer, and is of a bright, glossy, and glittering substance where newly cut or broken. The metals are six in number: 1. gold; 2. silver; 3. copper; 4. tin; 5. iron; 6. lead; of which gold is the heaviest, lead the second in weight, then silver, then copper, and iron is the lightest except tin: some have added mercury or quicksilver to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi metals. Hill, Mat. Med.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out. Moxon.

2. Courage; spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle.

Being glad to find their companions had so much metal, after a long debate the major part carried it. Clarendon.

3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of metal he prepar'd,
Either to give blows or to ward;
Courage and steel both of great force,
Prepar'd for better or for worse. Hudibras.

ME'TALLED.* See METTLED.

METALE'PSIS. n. s. [μεϊάληψις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations. Bailey.

METALE'PTICALLY.* adv. [from metalepsis.] By transposition.

The name of promises may metaleptically be extended to comminations. Bp. Sanderson, on Promiss. Oaths, i. § 9.

META'LLICAL. } adj. [from metallum, Lat. metallique,

The antients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or fusibility, seem to have resolved it to nobler use; an art now utterly lost. Wotton, Architecture.

The lofty lines abound with endless store
Of min'ral treasure, and metallick oar. Blackmore.

METALLI'FEROUS. adj. [metallum and fero, Latin.] Producing metals. Dict.

META'LLINE. adj. [from metal.]

1. Impregnated with metal.

Metalline waters have virtual cold in them; put therefore wood or clay into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.

2. Consisting of metal.

Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interspersed bubbles, yet having caused the air to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves. Boyle.

ME'TALLIST. n. s. [from metal; metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals; skilled in metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out; it is made of quick lime and ox blood. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

METALLO'GRAPHY. n. s. [metallum and γράφω.] An account or description of metals. Dict.

META'LLURGIST.† n. s. [metallurgiste, Fr. metallum and ἔργον.] A worker in metals.

META'LLURGY.† n. s. [metallurgie, French; metallum and ἔργον.] The art of working metals, or separating them from their ore.

Drayton personifies the Peak in Derbyshire, which he makes a witch skilful in metallurgy. Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

ME'TALMAN.* n. s. [metal and man.] A coppersmith; a tinman.

A smith, or a metalman, the pot's never from his nose. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 110.

To METAMO'RPHOSE. v. a. [metamorphoser, Fr. μεϊαμοςφόω.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time. Shakspeare.

They became degenerate and metamorphosed like Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast. Davies on Ireland.

The impossibility to conceive so great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphosed into travellers, with no train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton.

From such rude principles our form began;
And earth was metamorphos'd into man. Dryden, Ovid.

METAMO'RPHOSER.* n. s. [from To metamorphose.] One who changes the shape.

What shall I name this man but a beastly metamorphoser both of himself, and of others? Gascoigne, Delic. Dict. for Drunkards, (1576.)

METAMO'RPHOSICK.* adj. [from metamorphosis.] Transforming; changing the shape.

All the metamorphosic fables of the ancients, turning policied and commercial people into horrid and savage monsters, will, like clouds before the sun, dispel and evaporate before the light of truth. Pownall on Antiq. p. 69.

METAMO'RPHOSIS. n. s. [metamorphose, Fr. μεϊαμοςφωσις.]

1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Obscene talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the brutes did not only poetically but really speak. Gov. of the Tongue.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis! On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden, Span. Friar.

There are probable machines in epick poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men; but the less credible sort, such as metamorphoses, are far more rare. Broome.

2. It is applied by Harvey to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several to the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silk-worm and the like. Quincy.

ME'TAPHOR. n. s. [metaphore, Fr. μεϊάφορα.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put: as, he bridles his anger; he deadens the sound; the spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprized in a word; the spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epopœa delights. Dryden, Ded. to Virg. Æn.

One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.

METAPHO'RICAL. } adj. [metaphorique, Fr. from meta-
METAPHO'RICK. } phor.] Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The words which were do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use. Hooker.

METAPHO'RICALLY.* adv. [from metaphorical.] Figuratively; not literally.

Such as are improperly melancholy, or metaphorically mad, lightly mad. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

If strictly taken, it is not true; if metaphorically taken, though it be true, yet it is not pertinent. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

META'PHORIST.* n. s. [from metaphor.] A maker of metaphors.

Let the poet send to the metaphorist for his allegories. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scriblerus.

ME'TAPHRASE.† n. s. [μεῖάφρασις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another; a close interpretation.

Where the English metaphrase readeth, Thou shalt accept, &c. the Hebrew saith, Thou shalt consume. Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 224.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphrase. Dryden.

ME'TAPHRAST.† n. s. [metaphraste, Fr. μεῖάφραςης.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another; an interpreter.

He [Symeon] obtained the distinguishing appellation of the metaphrast, because, at the command and under the auspices of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, he modernised the more ancient narratives of the miracles and martyrdoms of the most eminent eastern and western saints for the use of the Greek church; or rather digested from detached, imperfect, or obsolete books on the subject, a new and more commodious body of the sacred biography. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 190.

METAPHRA'STICK.* adj. [from metaphrast.] Close in interpretation; literal.

Maximus Planudes has the merit of having familiarised to his countrymen many Latin classicks of the lower empire, by metaphrastick versions. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 169.

METAPHY'SICAL.† } adj.
METAPHY'SICK. }

1. Versed in metaphysicks; relating to metaphysicks.

He knew what's what, and that's as high
As metaphysick wit can fly. Hudibras, i. 1.

His ideas on that subject were much more Platonic and metaphysical. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 383.

2. In Shakspeare it means supernatural or preternatural. So metaphysicks were called "supernatural arts." Engl. Dict. by H. C. 1655.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear;
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

METAPHY'SICALLY.* adv. [from metaphysical.] In a metaphysical manner; with metaphysical distinction.

This argument seems metaphysically to conclude. South, Serm. viii. 261.

Supposing it were philosophically or metaphysically possible or conceivable. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 295.

METAPHYSI'CIAN.* n. s. [metaphysicien, Fr.] One versed in metaphysicks.

The pathetic or sublime strokes of Virgil would be but little relished by theologists and metaphysicians. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 340.

METAPHY'SICK.† } n. s. [metaphysique, Fr. μεταφυσικὴ, Gr. μετὰ τα φυσικὰ, the opening of Aristotle's chapter after that on physicks.] Ontology; the doctrine of the general ffections of substances existing.
METAPHY'SICKS. }

The mathematicks and the metaphysicks,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you. Shakspeare.

Call her the metaphysicks of her sex,
And say she tortures wits as quartans vex
Physicians. Cleaveland.

If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in, the form of contrary species should be received confusedly together, which how absurd it is, Aristotle shews in his metaphysicks. Peacham on Drawing.

See physick beg the Stagyrite's defence!
See metaphysick call for aid on sense! Pope, Dunciad.

The topicks of ontology or metaphysick, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign. Watts, Logick.

ME'TAPLASM. n. s. [μεῖαπλασμὸς.] A figure in rhetorick, wherein words or letters are transposed contrary to their natural order. Dict.

METASTA'SIS. n. s. [μεῖαςάσις.] Translation or removal.

His disease was a dangerous asthma; the cause a metastasis, or translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Consumptions.

METATA'RSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones, may be carious; in which case cut off only so much of the foot as is disordered. Sharp, Surgery.

METATA'RSUS. n. s. [μέτα and ταρσὸς.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot. Dict.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus. Wiseman, Surgery.

META'THESIS.† n. s. [μεῖάθεσις.] A transposition.

What a metathesis is this, that he who perhaps was born of royal blood, and kept company with kings and princes, shall now cry out with Job "to corruption, thou art my father; to the worm, thou art my mother and sister!" Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 105.

To METE. v. a. [metior, Lat.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth. Psalms.

To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure wherewith to mete it. Holder.

Though you many ways pursue
To find their length, you'll never mete the true,
But thus; take all that space the sun
Metes out, when every daily round is run. Creech.

ME'TEWAND. } n. s. [mete and yard, or wand.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.
ME'TEYARD. }

A true touchstone, a sure metewand lieth before their eyes. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in meteyard, weight, or measure. Lev. xix. 35.

To METEMPSY'CHOSE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To translate from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of usurers after their death, Lucian affirms to be metempsychosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones. Peacham on Blazoning.

METEMPSYCHO'SIS.† n. s. [μεῖεμψύχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Here, Philemon, at parting with the subject of the sacred animals, I may observe to you, that the doctrine of the metempsychosis, supposed by the Greek writers a native of Egypt, is by many people believed to owe its birth to this article of her theology. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 4.

ME'TEOR. n. s. [meteore, Fr. μεῖέωρα.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature.

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face? Shakspeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland; for there had the like meteor strong influence before. Bacon, Hen. VII.

These burning fits but meteors be,
Whose matter in thee soon is spent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament. Donne.

Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene. Dryden, Æn.

Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar? Dryden, All for Love.

O poet, thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

To ME'TEORIZE.* v. n. [from meteor.] To ascend in evaporation.

To the end the dews may meteorize, and emit their finer spirits. Evelyn, Pomona, ch. I.

METEOROLO'GICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Others are considerable in meteorological divinity. Brown.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be new-come guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Howell, Voc. Forest.

METEORO'LOGIST. n. s. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorologists observe, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creatures, there is a notable correspondency. Howell, Voc. Forest.

METEORO'LOGY. n. s. [μετέωρα and λέγω.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather. Brown, Vulg. Err.

METE'OROUS. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er hill
To their fixt station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as evening mist,

ME'TER. n. s. [from mete.] A measurer: as, a coal-meter, a land-meter.

METHE'GLIN.† n. s. [meddyglyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, to glue, Minsheu; or meddyg, a physician, and llyn, drink, because it is a medicinal drink. See MEAD, and MEATH.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
— Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.
— Nay then two treys; and if you grow so nice,
Metheglin, wort, and malmsey. Shakspeare.

To allay the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new metheglin join. Dryden.

Beneath its aspect warm
O'er well-rang'd hives the bees shall swarm,
From which, ere long, of golden gleam
Metheglin's luscious juice shall stream.
Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

METHI'NKS.† verb impersonal. [me and thinks. This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I. Dr. Johnson. — Here is no French corruption; it is the same as meseems, that is, it seems to me; so me is here the dative case, and the whole phrase means, it appears to me; as Lye repeatedly translates the Sax. me þincþ, mihi videtur, whence, he says, our methinketh, methinks. Our old language has also him thinketh, or thought; that is, he thinks or thought, it so appeared to him on consideration.] I think; it seems to me; meseems. See MESEEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used likewise meseems.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous. Spenser on Ireland.

If he choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it. Dryden.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Addison, Spect.

Methinks already I your tears survey. Pope.

ME'THOD. n. s. [methode, French; μέθοδος.]

Method, taken in the largest sense, implies the placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end. Watts.

To see wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties. Hooker.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your sconce. Shakspeare.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools. Locke on Education.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain. Addison, Spect.

METHO'DICAL. adj. [methodique, Fr. from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author. Addison, Spect.

Let me appear, great Sir, I pray,
Methodical in what I say. Addison, Rosamond.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

METHO'DICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

METHO'DICK.* adj. [methodique, Fr.]

1. Ranged or proceeding in just and due order.

Some native and methodick powers, and springs of motion in things. Spencer on Prod. (1665,) p. 137.

Aristotle strict, methodic, and orderly.
Harris, Hermes, iii. ch. 5.

2. Denoting those who follow the method of the ancient school of physicians, known by the name of methodists.

Thessalus, head of the methodick sect in the reign of Nero, [used to] brag, that he could make physicians without the help either of astrology or musick. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

Every animal body, according to the methodick physicians, is, by the predominance of some exuberant quality, continually declining towards disease and death. Johnson, Rambler, No. 156.

ME'THODISM.* n. s. The religious opinions of those who are called methodists. See the last sense of METHODIST.

Nor is this pedigree, which makes methodism of the younger house to independency, invented, like heraldic fictions, to ennoble my subject. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, ii. 186.

METHODIST.† n. s. [from method.]

1. An observer of method, generally speaking, without reference either to physick or religion. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

I dance little after method, because no methodist.
Hermeticall Banquet, &c. (1652.)

2. A physician who practises by theory.

As many more,
As methodist Musus kill'd with hellebore
In autumne last. Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599.)

[The] old sect of methodists resolved, that the laxum and strictum, the immoderate dissolution or constipation, were the principles and originals of all diseases in the world.
Hammond, Works, iv. 577.

Our wariest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and distempers. Boyle.

3. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson's lately arisen must be referred to the year 1729, when the term was applied to certain young men at Oxford of very methodical conduct; of whom it was said, in allusion to the ancient school of physicians, "there is a new sect of methodists sprung up;" and of which appellation it has since been with an absurd air of consequence pretended, that the word "being new and quaint, it took immediately, and the methodists were known all over the university." But we see that the word is at least nearly a century and a half older in our language, in the medical sense; and nearly a century, in a general sense. Mr. Wesley and Mr. Whitfield are those of this remarkable association, who are best known to fame; and who afterwards had their respective followers; those of Mr. Wesley being Arminians, those of Mr. Whitfield, Calvinists. The word is often vaguely and unjustly used of persons, who are no sectaries.

Mr. John Wesley, one among the present methodists, having already freed himself from the folly of Calvinism.
Whiston, Memoirs of Himself, (1749,) p. 138.

They, who now go under the name of methodists, were, in the days of our forefathers, called precisians.
Warburton, Doct. of Grace, ii 184.

When West's book was published, it was bought by some who did not know his change of opinion, in expectation of new objections against Christianity; and as infidels do not want malignity, they revenged the disappointment by calling him a methodist. Johnson, Life of West.

METHODI'STICAL.* adj. [from methodist.] Relating to the religious sect of methodists.

The precise number of methodistical marks you know best.
Bp. Lavington, Enth. of Meth. to Mr. Wesley, p. xii.

To ME'THODIZE. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
The royal spy retir'd again unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,
And methodize revenge. Dryden, Boccace.

The man who does not know how to methodise his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Spectator.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critick.
Addison, Spect.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodis'd. Pope.

METHO'UGHT.† the preterite of methinks. See METHINKS and MESEEMS. I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has meseemed, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from meseems. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson had forgotten meseemed in an example from Spenser, which he himself has cited under meseems. Addison has once used, improperly, methoughts. "Methoughts I returned to the great hall." Spect. No. 3.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey. Shakspeare.

Since I sought
By prayer the offended deity to appease;
Kneel'd, and before him humbled all my heart.
Methought, I saw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd
Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, 'That thy seed shall bruise our foe."
Milton, P. L.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden.

METI'CULOUS.* adj. [meticulosus, Latin.] Fearful; timid. Not in use. Coles.

METI'CULOUSLY.* adv. [from meticulous.] Timidly.

Move circumspectly, not meticulously.
Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 33.

METONY'MICAL.† adj. [from metonymy.] Put by metonymy for something else.

The verbal signification of these words being metonymical, it will be best to leave them to their own place.
Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, p. 61.

METONY'MICALLY. adv. [from metonymical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle on Colours.

ME'TONYMY. n. s. [metonymie, Fr. μετωνυμία.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the materiate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another.
Tillotson.

ME'TOPE.* n. s. [metope, Fr.] A square space between triglyphs in the frize of the Dorick order.
Sherwood.

The entablature and all its parts and ornaments, architrave, frieze, cornice, triglyphs, metopes, modiglions, and the rest, have each an use, or appearance of use, in giving firmness and union to the building, in protecting it from the weather, in casting off the rain, in representing the ends of the beams with their intervals, the production of the rafters, and so forth.
Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

METOPO'SCOPIST.* n. s. [from metoposcopy.] One versed in the study of physiognomy.

Among the whole tribe of metoposcopists, there is not so much as one who goes about to prove his assertions.
Philosoph. Letters on Physiognomy, (1751,) p. 206.

METOPO'SCOPY.† n. s. [metoposcopie, Fr. μέτωπον and σκέπτω.] The study of physiognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

Signs of melancholy from physiognomy, metoposcopy, chiromancy. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 56

Fac. Doctor, how canst thou know this so soon?
I am amus'd at that!
Sub. By a rule, captain,
In metaposcopy, which I do work by;
A certain star i' the forehead, which you see not.
B. Jonson, Alchemist.

There was a seam in the middle of his [K. Ch. I.] forehead, downwards; which is a very ill sign in metoposcopie.
Aubrey's Miscellanies, p. 38.

METRE. n. s. [metrum, Latin; μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Abuse the city's best good men in metre,
To laugh at lords. Pope.

Me'trical.† adj. [metricus, Latin; metrique, French.]

1. Pertaining to metre or numbers.

Let any the best psalmist of them all compose a hymn in metrical form, and sing it to a new tune with perfect and true musick. Bp. Taylor on Extemp. Prayer, § 29.

2. Consisting of verses: as, metrical precepts.

A voluminous metrical translation of Guido de Colonna. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 119.

Most of the old metrical romances are, from their nature, supposed to be incoherent rhapsodies. Ibid. p. 182.

Metri'cian.* } n. s. [from metre.] A writer of Me'trist. } verses. Two old and significant words.

Ye, that ben metriciens, me excuse. Chaucer, Court of Love.

Blind popish poetes, and dirtye metristes.
Bale on the Revel. P. ii. (1550,) sign. c. ii.

METRO'POLIS.† n. s. [metropolis, Latin; metropole, French; μήτηρ and πόλις, Gr. Very rarely found with a plural. Dr. Johnson has given no example. The learned Hammond affords one.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renown'd metropolis,
With glistering spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton, P. R.

Reduc'd in careful watch
Round their metropolis. Milton, P. L.

Many cities became metropoles, which formerly were not.
Hammond on the Ep. to the Philipp. i. 1.

We stopped at Pavia, that was once the metropolis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town. Addison on Italy.

Metropo'litan.† n. s. [metropolitanus, Latin.] A bishop of the mother church; an archbishop.

Gregorye — admitted him for the first metropolytane of all the whole realme, appointing his seate from thence forth at Canterbury. Bale, Acts of Eng. Vot. P. i. (1550,) p. 31.

He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.

Metropo'litan.† adj. Belonging to a metropolis.

Their patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forborn to institute metropolitan bishops. Ralegh.

Still to acknowledge God's ancient people their betters, and that language the metropolitan language.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

Metro'polite.* n. s. [from metropolis.] A metropolitan; an archbishop; a bishop of the mother church.

Other ancient synods style him metropolite; and to the metropolites of the principal cities they gave the title of archbishop. Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

The patriarch of Constantinople is elected by the metropolites, or bishops, according to the plurality of voices.
Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 95.

All the power he hath, is to constitute an archbishop over them, whose seat is at Careis, and another at Sidero-Copti, but subordinate to the metropolite of Thessalonica. Ibid. p. 250.

Metropoli'tical.† adj. [from metropolis.]

1. Chief or principal as applied to cities.

He fearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolitical city of Stiria. Knolles.

2. Denoting archiepiscopal dignity or power.

Having at that time a lawful archbishop of their own, legally established in the metropolitical chair.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 91.

The erection of a power in the person of Titus, a metropolitical power over the whole island of Crete.
Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 4.

Metropo'litick.* adj. Archiepiscopal. Not in use.

Kent — had the first English king; in it was the first Christianity among the English, and Canterbury then honoured with the metropolitique see. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 18.

ME'TTLE. n. s. [corrupted from metal, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]

1. Spirit; spriteliness; courage.

What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?
He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shakspeare.

I had rather go with sir priest than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the seditious.
Hayward, Edw. VI.

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.

'Tis more to guide than spur the muse's steed,
Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courser, like a gen'rous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope.

2. Substance: this at least should be metal.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puft,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shakspeare.

Me'ttled.† adj. [from mettle.] Spritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never. B. Jonson.

An ineffectual laziness is the seminary both of vice and infamy: it clouds the metalled mind, it mists the wit, and chokes up all the sciences. Feltham, Res ii. 49.

Nor would you find it easy to compose }
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows }
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. } Addison.

Me'ttlesome. adj. [from mettle.] Spritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.

Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Tatler, No. 61.

Me'ttlesomely. adv. [from mettlesome.] With spriteliness.

Me'twand.* n. s. See Metewand.

The golden metwand of the law.
Burke, Speech on the Middlesex Elect.

MEW.† n. s. [mue, French. Dr. Johnson. — The word mue denotes a change; "hence any casting of the coat or skin, as the muing of a hawk." Cotgrave. Then it came to denote a cage, in which the hawk was kept till he had moulted; and lastly a cage in general.]

1. A cage for hawks. The king's mews at Charing Cross is the place where formerly the king's hawks were kept.

By her beddes head she made a mew: —
Thus lete I Canace her hauk keping. Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

2. A cage; an inclosure; a place where any thing is confined.

Forth-coming from her darksome mew,
Where she all day did hide her hated hew. Spenser, F. Q.

There then she does transform to monstruous hues,
And horribly mis-shapes with ugly sights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron mews,
And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shews.
Spenser, F. Q.

Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dainty needle or nice thread;
She hated chambers, closets, secret mews,
And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead. Fairfax.

3. [Mæw, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.

Among the first sort we reckon coots, sanderlings, and meawes. Carew.

The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the mews in triumph ride. Dryden.

To MEW.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to inclose.

He in dark corners mew'd,
Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman. Shakspeare, K. John.

Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakspeare.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakspeare.

Feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air. Dryden, Juv.

It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Locke.

2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers. Dr. Johnson.— It is rather, I should suppose, from the original meaning of muer, to change, from the Latin mutare; thence to change or cast the skin or feathers.

Stand forth, transform'd Antonio, fully mew'd
From brown soar feathers of dull yeomanry,
To the glorious bloom of gentry. Albumazar, (1614.)

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty defac'd the royal stamp. Cleaveland.

Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length
With travel weary, unsupply'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb opprest,
Sabean fields afford her needful rest. Dryden.

3. [miauler, French; miaua, Icel.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. Shakspeare.

They are not improveable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew.

To MEW.† v. n. [muer, Fr.] To change; to put on a new appearance.

The foules about the field do syng; now every thing doth mewe,
And shifts his rustic winter robe. Turbervile, Ecl.

ME'WING.* n. s. [from mew.] The act of moulting. Cotgrave.

I should discourse of hawks, then treat of their ayries, mewings, casting and renovation of their feathers. Walton.

To MEWL. v. n. [miauler, French.] To squall as a child.

The infant
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms. Shakspeare.

ME'WLER.* n. s. [from mewl; Fr. miauleur.] One who squalls or mewls. Cotgrave.

MEZE'REON. n. s. A species of spurge laurel.

Mezereon is common in our gardens, and on the Alps and Pyrenean mountains: every part of this shrub is acrid and pungent, and inflames the mouth and throat. Hill.

*MEZZO-RELIEVO. n. s. [Italian.] Projection of figures between the proportion of those in alto and basso relievo; called also demi-relievo.

We saw antique figures of men, carved in the natural rock, in mezzo-relievo, and in bigness equal to the life. Maundrell, Trav. p. 37.

MEZZOTI'NTO. n. s. [Italian.] A kind of graving so named as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half-painted: It is done by beating the whole into asperity with a hammer, and then rubbing it down with a stone to the resemblance intended.

MEYNT.† adj. Mingled. See To MEINE. Obsolete.

MI'ASM. n. s. [from μιαίνω, inquino, to infect.] Such particles or atoms as are supposed to arise from distempered, putrefying, or poisonous bodies, and to affect people at a distance.

The plague is a malignant fever, caused through pestilential miasms insinuating into the humoral and consistent parts of the body. Harvey on Consumptions.

*MI'CA. n. s. [Latin.] In natural history, a genus of talcs.

Coloured micas generally contain some metallic matters, chiefly iron; and are much more fusible than those which are pure and colourless. Chambers.

MICA'CEOUS.* adj. [from mica.] Of the nature of mica; easily separable.

A reddish earth filled with friable micaceous nodules. Pennant.

MICE, the plural of mouse.

Mice that mar the land. 1 Sam. vi. 5.

MI'CHAELMASS. n. s. [Michael and mass.] The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twenty-ninth of September.

They compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmass for thirty pounds price. Carew.

To MICHE.† v. n. [a word of great age in our language, but of unknown etymology.]

1. To pilfer; to commit secret theft. " Mychyn or pryvely stelyn smale thyngs." Prompt. Parv.

What he may get of his michynge. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Miching or nightie thieves. Lambard, Eirenarch. (1610,) p. 186.

2. To be secret or covered; to lie hid; to lurk out of sight; to play truant. See MICHER.

Lest any of them should straggle up and downe the countrey, or mich in corners amongst their friends idlely. Spenser on Ireland.

Wherefore thus vainely in land Lybye mitche you? Stanyhurst, Virg. (1582.)

Marry, this is miching mallecho; it means mischief. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

MI'CHER.† n. s. [from miche.]

1. A thief; a pilferer. So used in Norfolk. See also MICHERY.

A micher forsworne. Chaucer, Rom. R. 6541.

Wanton wenches, and also mychers,
With many other of the devyll's officers. Old Morality of Hycke-Scorner.

2. A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of sight; a hedge-creeper. Mich or mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow. It is used in the western counties for a truant boy.

How tenderly her tender hands between
In ivory cage she did the micher bind. Sidney.

How like a micher he stands, as though he had truanted from honesty. Lily, Moth. Bombie, (1594.)

Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. Shakspeare, Hen IV.

MI'CHERY.* n. s. [from miche.] Theft; cheating.

With covetise yet I finde
A servant of the same kinde,
Which stelth is hote; and micherie
With him is ever in companie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Mi'ckle.† adj. [micel, Saxon; mikil, old Teut. mikel, Icel. μεγαλος, Greek. "Vox antiquissima," Serenius observes.] Much; great. Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced muckle.

This rede is rife, that oftentime
Great clymbers fall unsoft:
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his misse not mickle. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

Many a little makes a mickle. Camden, Rem.

If I to-day die don't with Frenchmen's rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

O, mickle is the pow'rful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakspeare.

All this tract that fronts the falling sun,
A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,
Has in his charge. Milton, Comus.

MI'CROCOSM. n. s. [μίκρ☉ and κόσμ☉.] The little world. Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shakspeare, Coriol.

She to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;
She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st this,
Thou know'st how lame a creeple this world is. Donne.

As in this our microcosm, the heart
Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part:
So Rome's victorious influence did disperse
All her own virtues through the universe. Denham.

Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politick. Swift.

Microco'smical.* adj. [from microcosm.] Pertaining to the microcosm.

Calculate thyself within; seek not thyself in the moon, but in thine own orb or microcosmical circumference. Brown, Chr. Mor.

Mi'crography. n. s. [μικρὸς and γράφω.] The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernible only with a microscope.

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter: a curious description and figure of the sting see in Mr. Hook's micrography. Grew, Mus.

MI'CROSCOPE. n. s. [μίκρ☉ and σκοπέω; microscope, French.] An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing, to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs. Bentley.

The critick eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Pope, Dunciad.

Micro'meter. n. s. [μίκρ☉ and μέτρον; micrometre, French.] An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

Microsco'pical. }
Microsco'pick. } adj. [from microscope.]

1. Made by a microscope.

Make microscopical observations of the figure and bulk of the constituent parts of all fluids. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. Assisted by a microscope.

Evading even the microscopic eye!
Full nature swarms with life. Thomson, Summer.

3. Resembling a microscope.

Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, Man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks given,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heaven? Pope.

MID.† adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon mıdd.]

1. Middle; equally between two extremes.

No more the mounting larks, while Daphne sings,
Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.

Ere the mid hour of night, from tent to tent,
Unweary'd, through th' num'rous host he past. Rowe.

2. It is much used in composition.

Mid-age.* n. s. [mid and age.]

1. The middle age of life.
2. Persons in that state.

Virgins and boys, mid-age, and wrinkled eld. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Mid-course. n. s. [mid and course.] Middle of the way.

Why in the East
Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white? Milton, P. L.

Mid-day. adj. [mid and day.] Meridional, being at noon.

Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush. Sidney.

His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. Shakspeare.

Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison.

Mid-day. n. s. Noon; meridian.

Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though toughly laboured, will be
Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Donne.

Mid-heaven. n. s. [mid and heaven.] The middle of the sky.

But the hot hell that always in him burns,
Though in mid-heaven, soon ended his delight. Milton, P. L.

Mid-sea. n. s. [mid and sea.] The Mediterranean sea.

Our Tyrrhene Pharos, that the mid-sea meets
With its embrace, and leaves the land behind. Dryden.

Mid-wood.* adj. [mid and wood.] In the middle of the wood.

Hence let me haste into the mid-wood shade. Thomson, Sum.

Mi'da.* n. s. [midas, Fr. μίδας, Greek.] A worm, or maggot, of which is produced the purple fly, found on bean-flowers, and thence called the bean-fly. Chambers.

Mi'dden.* }
Mi'dding. } n. s. [Sax. mıddınᵹ.] A dunghill. Used in the north of England.

Thought all their glory vain in knightly view. Spenser.

MI'DDLE. adj. [mıddel, Saxon.]

1. Equally distant from the two extremes.

The lowest virtues draw praise from the common people; the middle virtues work in them astonishment; but of the highest virtues they have no sense. Bacon, Ess.

A middle station of life, within reach of those conveniencies which the lower orders of mankind must necessarily want, and yet without embarrassment of greatness. Rogers.

To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle-sized brigantines. Arbuthnot on Coins.

I like people of middle understanding and middle rank. Swift.

2. Intermediate; intervening.

Will, seeking good, finds many middle ends. Davies.

3. Middle finger; the long finger.

You first introduce the middle finger of the left-hand. Sharp.

Mi'ddle. n. s.

1. Part equally distant from two extremities; the part remote from the verge.

There come people down by the middle of the land. Judges.

With roof so low that under it
They never stand, but lie or sit;
And yet so foul, that whoso is in,
Is to the middle leg in prison. Hudibras.

2. The time that passes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties are the end. Dryden.

Middle-aged. adj. [middle and age.] Placed about the middle of life.

A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown, took a fancy to marry two wives. L'Estrange.

The middle-aged support fasting the best, because of the oily parts abounding in the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

I found you a very young man, and left you a middle-aged one: you knew me a middle-aged man, and now I am an old one. Swift.

Middle-earth.* n. s. [Sax. middall-eaph.] The world; the place between the ethereal and lower regions.

And on the midland sea the French had aw'd. Dryden.

Mi'dleg. n. s. [mid and leg.] Middle of the leg.

He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white satten, loose coats to the midleg, and stockings of white silk. Bacon.

Mi'dlent.* n. s. [mid-lencten, Sax.] The middle of lent.

The fourth [Sunday in Lent] is with us generally called midlent Sunday. Wheatly on the Comm. Prayer, p. 227.

Mi'dlenting.* adj. Going about to visit parents at midlent. See Mothering.

A custom still retained in many parts of England, and well known by the name of midlenting or mothering.
Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. p. 227.

Mi'dmost.† adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemost: this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they seem to have a superlative degree. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon midmerta.] The middle. '

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hasting up behind. ' Dryden.

Hear himself repine
At fate's unequal laws, and at the clue,
Which, merciless in length, the midmost sister drew. Dryden.

What dulness dropt among her sons imprest,
Like motion, from one circle to the rest:
So from the midmost the nutation spreads
Round and more round o'er all the sea of heads. Pope.

Mi'dnight.† n. s. [mid and night; midniht, Sax.] Milton seems to have accented the last syllable, Dr. Johnson observes; which indeed was not peculiar to him. Shakspeare more than once has so accented it; and Mallet, in the first edition of his William and Margaret, thus gives it:

" When all was wrapt in dark midni'ght,
" And all were fast asleep:"

Which however he borrowed from elder poetry; and in a subsequent edition changed midnight and the two lines into the cold and quaint periphrasis of " the silent solemn hour, when night and morning meet."] The noon of night; the depth of night; twelve at night.

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go betimes. Shakspeare.

By night he fled, and at midnight return'd
From compassing the earth; cautious of day. Milton, P. L.

After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past. Stillingfleet.

In all that dark midnight of popery there were still some gleams of light, some witnesses that arose to give testimony to the truth. Atterbury.

They can tell what altitude the dog-star had at midnight or midnooon in Rome when Julius Cæsar was slain. Watts.

Mi'dnight. adj. Being in the middle of the night.

How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags?
What is't you do? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I hope my midnight studies, to make our countries flourish in mysterious and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects. Bacon.

Some solitary cloister will I chuse,
Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep,
Broke by the melancholy midnight bell. Dryden, Sp. Friar.

Mi'driff. n. s. [mıȝhrıȝe, Saxon.] The diaphragm.

The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities; the thorax and abdomen: it is composed of two muscles; the first and superior of these arises from the sternum, and the ends of the last ribs on each side. The second and inferior muscle comes from the vertebræ of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right side comes from the first, second, and third vertebræ of the loins; that on the left side is somewhat shorter, and both these productions join and make the lower part of the midriff. Quincy.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd
Smote him into the midriff with a stone
That beat out life. Milton, P. L.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carneous fibres of that muscular part are inflected. Ray.

Mi'dship.* n. s. [mid and ship.] A term of distinction, applied by shipwrights to several pieces of timber which lie in the broadest part of the vessel. Chambers.

Mi'dshipman. n. s. [from mid, ship, and man.]

Midshipmen are officers aboard a ship, whose station is some on the quarter-deck, others on the poop. Their business is to mind the braces, to look out, and to give about the word of command from the captain, and other superior officers: they also assist, on all occasions, both in sailing the ship, and in storing and rummaging the hold. Harris.

Midst. n. s. Middle.

All is well when nothing pleases but God, being thankful in the midst of his afflictions. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Arise, ye subtle spirits that can spy
When love is enter'd in a female's eye;
You that can read it in the midst of doubt,
And in the midst of frowns can find it out. Dryden.

Midst. adj. [contracted from middest, the superlative of mid.] Midmost; being in the middle.

On earth join all ye creatures to extol
Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end. Milton, P. L.

In the Slighted Maid, there is nothing in the first act but what might have been said or done in the fifth; nor any thing in the midst which might not have been placed in the beginning. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Midst.* prep. Sometimes poetically used for amidst, in all its senses.

Midstre'am. n. s. [mid and stream.] Middle of the stream.

The midstream's his, I creeping by the side,
And shoulder'd off by his impetuous tide. Dryden.

Mi'dsummer.† n. s. [mid and summer; Sax. mıȝ-ſumeр.] The summer solstice, reckoned to fall on June the twenty-first.

At eve last Midsummer no sleep I sought. Gay, Past.

Mi'dward.* adj. [mıȝȝeрearȝ, Sax.] Midst; being in the middle. Prompt. Parv.

Mi'dway. n. s. [mid and way.] The part of the way equally distant from the beginning and end.

No midway 'twixt these extremes at all. Shakspeare.

He were an excellent man that were made in the midway between him and Benedick; the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Pity and shame! that they, who to live well
Stood so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the midway faint! Milton, P. L.

The hare laid himself down about midway, and took a nap; for I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

How didst thou arrive at this place of darkness, when so many rivers of the ocean lie in the midway. Broome.

Mi'dway. adj. Being in the middle between two places.

How fearful
And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!
The crows and choughs that wing the midway air,
Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakspeare.

Mi'dway. adv. In the middle of the passage.

With dry eyes, and with an open look,
She met his glance midway. Dryden, Boccace.

Mi'dwife.† n. s. [This is derived, both by Skinner and Junius, from mıȝ or meed, a reward, and pıf, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — The interpretation of this etymology, which Verstegan also gives, is, "a woman of meed, deserving recompence." But this seems a forced meaning. May not the word be more naturally derived from the Saxon preposition mıȝ, with, and pıf, wife; implying the wife or woman who is attendant upon, that is, with the woman in childbirth?] A woman who assists women in childbirth.

When man doth die, our body, as the womb,
And as a midwife, death directs it home. Donne.

Without a midwife these their throes sustain,
And, bowing, bring their issue forth with pain. Sandys.

There saw I how the secret felon wrought,
And treason lab'ring in the traitor's thought,
And midwife time the ripen'd plot to murder brought.
Dryden, Kn. Tale.

I had as clear a notion of the relation of brothers between them, as if I had all the skill of a midwife. Locke.

But no man, sure! e'er left his house
And saddled Ball with thoughts so wild,
To bring a midwife to his spouse,
Before he knew she was with child. Prior.

To Mi'dwife. } v. a. [from the noun.]
To Mi'dwive. }

1. To assist in childbirth.

Without this ubiquity, how could she be seen at harvest, wiping the faces of reaping monks, whilst she is elsewhere burning villages, or in a rich abby midwiving an abbess, whom her steward had unfortunately gotten with child?
Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, (1674,) p. 86.

2. To produce.

This child of yours, born without spurious blot,
And fairly midwiv'd, as it was begot,
Doth so much of the parents' goodness bear,
You may be proud to own it for your heir.
Bp. H. King, Verses pref. to Sandys's Psalms, (1648.)

The soul, by the same strength, as opportunities do midwife them out, brings forth christian spiritual actions.
Hammond, Works, iv. 573.

Two severe fits of sickness did midwive them [two discourses] into the world.
Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, (1680,) Intr.

So hasty fruits, and too ambitious flowers,
Scorning the midwifry of rip'ning showers,
In spight of frosts spring from th' unwilling earth. Stepney.

There was never any thing propounded for public good, that did not meet with opposition; arising from the humour of such as would have nothing brought into the world but by their own midwifry. Child, Disc. on Trade.

Mi'dwinter.† n. s. [mid and winter; Sax. mıδpıncep. "Christmas-day is frequently called, in our old monuments, mıδpıncpa-δæʒ, midwinter-day, and mıδpınpep-mæsse, midwinter-masse: from whence, I suppose, it may reasonably be concluded, that, when that name was first applied to that day, the day whereon Christmas fell was in the calendar either coincident with, or not far removed from, the winter solstice." Hammond, Works, i. 651.] The winter solstice; December the twenty-first.

Begin when the slow waggoner descends,
Nor cease your sowing till Midwinter ends. Dryden.

Mien.† n. s. [mine, French. Dr. Johnson. — Mynd, Goth. the countenance. Serenius.] Air; look; manner.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale. Prior.

MI'LDEW. n. s. [milðeape, Sax.]

Mildew is a disease in plants, caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils the plant: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exsudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, found in great plenty, preying upon this exsudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the Spring and Summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun nor wind. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the East, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are inticed thereto. Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his sugared words. Fairfax.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Soon blasting mildews black'ned all the grain. Dryden.

To MI'LDEW. v. a. To taint with mildew.

Here is your husband, like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

He mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creatures of the earth. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A mildew'd Bacon, or Stagyra's sage. Gay, Trivia.

MI'LDLY.† adv. [milðelice, Sax.]

1. Tenderly; not severely.

Prince, too mildly reigning,
Cease thy sorrow and complaining. Dryden.

2. Gently; not violently.

The air once heated maketh the flame burn more mildly, and so helpeth the continuance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MI'LDNESS. n. s. [from mild.]

1. Gentleness; tenderness; mercy; clemency.

This milky gentleness and course of yours;
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmless mildness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The same majestic mildness held its place;
Nor lost the monarch in his dying face. Dryden.

I saw with what a brow you brav'd your fate;
Yet with what mildness bore your father's hate. Dryden.

His probity and mildness shows
His care of friends and scorn of foes. Addison.

2. Contrariety to acrimony.

MILE.† n. s. [mil, mila, Saxon; mille passus, Latin.] The usual measure of roads in England, one thousand seven hundred and sixty yards, or, five thousand two hundred and eighty feet.

We must measure twenty miles to-day. Shakspeare.

Within this three mile may you see it coming,
A moving grove. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

When the enemy appeared, the foot and artillery was four miles behind. Clarendon.

Millions of miles, so rapid is their race,
To cheer the earth they in few moments pass. Blackmore.

MI'LESTONE. n. s. [mile and stone.] Stone set to mark the miles.

MI'LFOIL. n. s. [millefolium, Latin.] A plant, the same with yarrow.

Milfoil and honey-suckles pound,
With these alluring savours strew the ground. Dryden.

MI'LIARY. adj. [milium, Latin, millet; miliare, Fr.] Small; resembling a millet seed.

The scarf-skin is composed of small scales, between which the excretory ducts of the miliary glands open. Cheyne.

MI'LIARY fever. A fever that produces small eruptions.

MILI'CE. n. s. [French.] Standing force. A word innovated by Temple, but unworthy of reception.

The two-and-twentieth of the prince's age is the time assigned by their constitutions for his entering upon the publick charges of their milice. Temple.

MI'LITANCY.* n. s. [from militant.] Warfare. A word worthy of revival.

All human life, especially the active part, is constituted in a state of continual militancy.
W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 122.

MI'LITANT. adj. [militans, Latin; militante, Fr.]

1. Fighting; prosecuting the business of a soldier.

Against foul fiends they aid us militant;
They for us fight; they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant. Spenser.

2. Engaged in warfare with hell and the world. A term applied to the church of Christ on earth, as opposed to the church triumphant.

Then are the publick duties of religion best ordered, when the militant church doth resemble, by sensible means, that hidden dignity and glory wherewith the church triumphant in heaven is beautified. Hooker.

The state of a Christian in this world is frequently compared to a warfare: and this allusion has appeared so just, that the character of militant has obtained as the common distinction of that part of Christ's church sojourning here in this world from that part of the family at rest. Rogers.

MI'LITAR. } adj. [militaris, Latin; militaire, Fr.
MI'LITARY. } Militar is now wholly out of use.]

1. Engaged in the life of a soldier; soldierly.

He will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. Suiting a soldier; pertaining to a soldier; warlike.

In the time of Severus and Antoninus, many, being soldiers, had been converted unto Christ, and notwithstanding continued still in that military course of life. Hooker.

Although he were a prince in militar virtue approved, yet his cruelties weighed down his virtues. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Numbers numberless
The city gates out-pour'd, light-armed troops
In coats of mail and military pride. Milton, P. R.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap
By active toil, and military sweat,
Pining incline their sickly leaves. Prior.

3. Effected by soldiers.

He was with general applause, and great cries of joy, in a kind of militar election or recognition, saluted king. Bacon.

MI'LITARY.* n. s. pl. The soldiery.

MI'LITARILY.* adv. [from military.] In a soldierly manner.

We were militarily affected.
Trial of the Regicides, (1660,) p. 135.

To MI'LITATE.* v. n. [milito, Lat.] To oppose; to operate against.

This consideration would militate with more effect against his hypothesis, than a thousand syllogisms.
Blackburn, Confessional.

MILI'TIA. n. s. [Latin.] The trainbands; the standing force of a nation.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia be good and valiant soldiers. Bacon, Ess.

The militia was so settled by law, that a sudden army could be drawn together. Clarendon.

Unnumbered spirits round thee fly,
The light militia of the lower sky. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

MILK.† n. s. [meolc, Saxon; melck, Dutch; melk, German; μέλκα, Gr. from ἀμέλγω, to milk; mulgeo, Latin; meolcian, melcan, Sax. We had formerly emulct for milked. See Cockeram's Vocab.]

1. The liquor with which animals feed their young from the breast.

Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I fear thy nature,
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness
To catch the nearest way. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Milk is the occasion of tumours of divers kinds. Wiseman.

Illustrious robes of satin and of silk,
And wanton lawns more soft and white than milk.
Beaumont, Psyche.

When milk is dry'd with heat,
In vain the milkmaid tugs an empty teat. Dryden.

I concluded, if the gout continued, to confine myself wholly to the milk diet. Temple, Miscel.

Broths and milk-meats are windy to stomachs troubled with acid ferments. Floyer on the Humours.

2. Emulsion made by contusion of seeds.

Pistachoes, so they be good and not musty, joined with almonds in almond milk, or made into a milk of themselves, like unto almond milk, are an excellent nourisher. Bacon.

To MILK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To draw milk from the breast by the hand.

Capacious chargers all around were laid
Full pails, and vessels of the milking trade. Pope, Odyss.

I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me. Shakspeare.

MI'LKEN. adj. [from milk.] Consisting of milk.

The remedies are to be proposed from a constant course of the milken diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

MI'LKER. n. s. [from milk.] One that milks animals.

His kine with swelling udders ready stand,
And lowing for the pail invite the milker's hand. Dryden.

MI'LKINESS. n. s. [from milky.] Softness like that of milk; approach to the nature of milk.

Would I could share thy balmy, even temper,
And milkiness of blood. Dryden, Cleomenes.

The saltness and oyliness of the blood absorbing the acid of the chyle, it loses its milkiness. Floyer on the Humours.

MI'LKLIVERED. adj. [milk and liver.] Cowardly; timorous; faint-hearted.

Milklivered man!
That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs. Shakspeare.

MI'LKMAID. n. s. [milk and maid.] Woman employed in the dairy.

When milk is dry'd with heat,
In vain the milkmaid tugs an empty teat. Dryden, Virg.
A lovely milkmaid he began to regard with an eye of mercy. Addison.

MI'LKMAN. n. s. [milk and man.] A man who sells milk.

MI'LKPAIL. n. s. [milk and pail.] Vessel into which cows are milked.

That very substance which last week was grazing in the field, waving in the milkpail, or growing in the garden, is now become part of the man. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

MI'LKPAN. n. s. [milk and pan.] Vessel in which milk is kept in the dairy.

Sir Fulke Grevil had much and private access to Queen Elizabeth, and did many men good; yet he would say merrily of himself, that he was like Robin Goodfellow; for when the maids spilt the milkpans, or kept any racket, they would lay it upon Robin: so what tales the ladies about the queen told her, or other bad offices that they did, they would put it upon him. Bacon, Apophthegms.

MILKPO'TTAGE. n. s. [milk and pottage.] Food made by boiling milk with water and oatmeal.

For breakfast and supper, milk and milkpottage are very fit for children. Locke.

MI'LKSCORE. n. s. [milk and score.] Account of milk owed for, scored on a board.

He is better acquainted with the milkscore than his steward's accounts. Addison.

MI'LKSOP.† n. s. [milk and sop.] A soft, mild, effeminate, feeble-minded man. This word of contempt is very old in our language.

Alas, she saith, that ever I was yshape
To wed a milksop, or a coward ape. Chaucer, Monk's Prologue.

Of a most notorious thief, which lived all his life-time of spoils, one of their bards will say, that he was none of the idle milksops that was brought up by the fire-side, but that most of his days he spent in arms, and that he did never eat his meat before he had won it with his sword. Spenser.

A milksop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

We have as good passions as yourself; and a woman was never designed to be a milksop. Addison, Spect.

But give him port and potent sack;
From milksop he starts up mohack. Prior.

MI'LKTOOTH. n. s. [milk and tooth.]

Milkteeth are those small teeth which come forth before when a foal is about three months old, and which he begins to cast about two years and a half after, in the same order as they grew. Farrier's Dict.

She a black silk cap on him begun
To set, for foil of his milkwhite to serve. Sidney.

Then will I raise aloft the milkwhite rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd. Shakspeare.

'The bolt of Cupid fell,
It fell upon a little western flower;
Before milkwhite, now purple with love's wound;
And maidens call it love in idleness. Shakspeare.

A milkwhite goat for you I did provide;
Two milkwhite kids run frisking by her side. Dryden.

MI'LKWORT. n. s. [milk and wort.] A bell-shaped flower.

MI'LKWOMAN. n. s. [milk and woman.] A woman whose business is to serve families with milk.

Even your milkwoman and your nursery-maid have a fellow-feeling. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

MI'LKY. adj. [from milk.]

1. Made of milk.

2. Resembling milk.

Not tasteful herbs that in these gardens rise,
Which the kind soil with milky sap supplies,
Can move the god. Pope.

Some plants upon breaking their vessels yield a milky juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Yielding milk.

Perhaps my passion he disdains,
And courts the milky mothers of the plains. Roscommon.

4. Soft; gentle; tender; timorous.

Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights. Shakspeare.

This milky gentleness and course of yours,
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

MILKY-WAY. n. s. [milky and way.] The galaxy.

The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itself in some places with a double path, but for the most part with a single one. Some of the ancients, as Aristotle, imagined that this path consisted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the telescopical observations of this age, it hath been discovered to consist of an innumerable quantity of fixed stars, different in situation and magnitude, from the confused mixture of whose light its whole colour is supposed to be occasioned. Harris.

Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies to find the milky-way:
It forcibly intrudes upon our sight. Creech, Manilius.

How many stars there must be, a naked eye may give us some faint glimpse, but much more a good telescope, directed towards that region of the sky called the milky-way. Cheyne.

MILL.† n. s. [μύλη, Gr. mola, Lat. melin, Welsh; myln, miln, Saxon; moulin, Fr. molen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Thus our word was formerly written milne or mylne, like the Saxon; and, in some parts of England, a miller is still called milner. Chaucer, " these milnestones," Tr. and Cress. ii. 1385. Serenius calls mill " vox antiquissima, multisque linguis communis;" and he deduces it from the Goth. malan, to grind.] An engine or fabrick in which corn is ground to meal, or any other body is comminuted. In general an engine in which any operation is performed by means of wind or water; sometimes it is used of engines turned by the hand, or by animal force.

The table, and we about it, did all turn round by water which ran under, and carried it about as a mill. Sidney.

Olives ground in mills their fatness boast. Dryden.

A miller had his arm and scapula torn from his body by a rope twisted round his wrist, and suddenly drawn up by the mill. Sharp, Surgery.

To MILL.† v. a. [from the noun; μυλεῖν, Gr.; melia, to beat, mala to grind, Icelandick.]

1. To grind; to comminute.
2. To beat up chocolate.
3. To stamp coin in the mints.

It would be better for your milled medals, if they carried the whole legend on their edges; but at the same time that they are lettered on the edges, they have other inscriptions on the face and the reverse. Addison.

Wood's halfpence are not milled, and therefore more easily counterfeited. Swift.

MILL-COG. n. s. [mill and cog.] The denticulations on the circumference of wheels, by which they lock into other wheels.

The errour of the millenaries was very rife. Hakewill on Providence, p. 499.

MI'LLENARY. adj. [millenaire, Fr. millenarius, Latin.] Consisting of a thousand.

The millenary sestertium, in good manuscripts, is marked with a line cross the top thus HS. Arbuthnot on Coins.

MI'LLENIST. n. s. [from mille, Lat.] One that holds the millennium.

MILLE'NNIAL. adj. [from millennium, Lat.] Pertaining to the millennium.

To be kings and priests unto God, is the characteristick of those that are to enjoy the millennial happiness. Burnet.

MILLE'NNIUM. n. s. [Latin.] A thousand years; generally taken for the thousand years during which, according to an ancient tradition in the church, grounded on a doubtful text in the Apocalypse, our blessed Saviour shall reign with the faithful upon earth after the resurrection, before the final completion of beatitude.

We must give a full account of that state called the millennium. Burnet, The. of the Earth.

MI'LLEPED.† n. s. [millepieds, French; mille and pes, Latin. This word is not commonly used in the singular number. Dr. Johnson has not even so noticed it. Other dictionaries have it.] A species of the wood-louse, so called from its numerous feet; the palmer-worm also has this name.

If pheasants and partridge are sick, give them millepedes and earwigs, which will cure them. Mortimer, Husb.

MI'LLER. n. s. [from mill.] One who attends a mill.

More water glideth by the mill
Than wots the miller of. Shakspeare.

Gillius, who made enquiry of millers who dwelt upon its shore, received answer, that the Euripus ebbed and flowed four times a day. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To give the square root of the number two, he laboured long in millesimal fractions, till he confessed there was no end. Watts on the Mind.

MI'LLET. n. s. [milium, Lat. mil and millet, Fr.]

1. A plant.

The millet hath a loose divided panicle, and each single flower hath a calyx, consisting of two leaves, which are instead of petals, to protect the stamina and pistillum of the flower, which afterwards becomes an oval, shining seed. This plant was originally brought from the eastern countries, where it is still greatly cultivated, from whence we are annually furnished with this grain, which is, by many persons much esteemed for puddings. Miller.

In two ranks of cavities is placed a roundish studd, about the bigness of a grain of millet. Woodward on Fossils.

Millet is diarrhetick, cleansing, and useful, in diseases of the kidneys. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A kind of fish; unless it be misprinted for mullet.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whiting, mackerel, millet. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

MI'LLINER.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson believes it to be Milaner, an inhabitant of Milan: others, Maliniere from Malines, as the French call Mechlin. Our lexicography defines the word, "a haberdasher of small wares."] One who sells ribbands and dresses for women.

He was perfumed like a milliner;
And, 'twixt his finger and his thumb, he held
A pouncet box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Ask from your courtier to your inns-of-court man,
To your meer milliner. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

The mercers and milliners complain of her want of publick spirit. Tatler.

The millener must be thoroughly versed in physiognomy; in the choice of ribbons she must have a particular regard to the complexion. Guardian, No. 149.

If any one asks Flavia to do something in charity, she will toss him half a crown, or a crown, and tell him, if he knew what a long milliner's bill she had just received, he would think it a great deal for her to give. Law.

MI'LLION. n. s. [million, Fr. milliogne, Italian.]

1. The number of an hundred myriads, or ten hundred thousand.

Within thine eyes, sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers. Shakspeare.

2. A proverbial name for any very great number.

That the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones, is a truth more evident than many of those propositions that go for principles; and yet there are millions who know not this at all. Locke.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know. Locke.

She found the polish'd glass, whose small convex
Enlarges to ten millions of degrees
The mite, invisible else. Philips.

Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd;
And glad all heaven with millions thou hast sav'd. Prior.

MI'LLIONED.* adj. [from million.] Multiplied by millions.

Time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in 'twixt vows, and change decrees of ki[illegible] Shakspeare.

Dryden.

Mi'llionth. adj. [from million.] The ten hundred thousandth.

The first embrion of an ant is supposed to be as big as that of an elephant; which nevertheless can never arrive to the millionth part of the other's bulk. Bentley.

Mi'llstone. n. s. [mill and stone.] The stone by which corn is comminuted.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge. Deut. xxiv. 6.

Æsop's beasts saw farther into a millstone than our mobile. L'Estrange.

Milt.† n. s. [mildt, Dutch.]

1. The sperm of the male fish.

You shall scarce take a carp without a melt, or a female without a roe or spawn. Walton, Angler.

MIME.† n. s. [mime, French; μῖμος; mimus, Lat.]

1. A buffoon who practises gesticulations, either representative of some action, or merely contrived to raise mirth.

Think'st thou, mime, this is great? B. Jonson.

Let him go now, and brand another man injuriously with the name of mime; being himself the loosest and most extravagant mime that hath been heard of, whom no less than almost half the world could serve for stage-room to play the mime in. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

2. A ludicrous composition; a farce.

Scaliger defines a mime to be a poem intimating any action to stir up laughter. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

Our farces are really what the Romans called mimes; — the intended end and effect of which was excessive laughter. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iii. 351.

To Mime.† v. n. To play the mime.

Acts old iniquity; and in the fit
Of miming, gets the opinion of a wit. B. Jonson, Epigr. 115.

In an ill hour hath this unfortunate rashness stumbled upon the mention of miming. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

Mi'mer.† n. s. [from mime.] A mimick; a buffoon. Dr. Johnson here cites, for an example, a line from Milton's Samson Agonistes, in which the word is not mimer, but mimick. By an errour of the press, in the first edition of Milton's poem, the word was printed mimirs; but the table of errata directs us to read mimics; which, however, few editions have regarded, and which Dr. Johnson overlooked.

Jugglers, and dancers, anticks, mummers, mimicks. S. A. ver. 1325.

Mime'tical.* adj. [μιμητικος, Greek.] Imitative.

If I were composing a dialogue in the old mimetical or poetic form, I should tell you, perhaps, the occasion that led us into this track of conversation. Hurd.

Mi'mical. adj. [mimicus, Latin.] Imitative; befitting a mimick; acting the mimick.

Man is of all creatures the most mimical in gestures, styles, speech, fashion, or accents. Wotton on Education.

A mimical daw would needs try the same experiment; but his claws were shackled. L'Estrange.

Singers and dancers entertained the people with light songs and mimical gestures, that they might not go away melancholy from serious pieces of the theatre. Dryden, Juv.

Mi'lkwor.† adv. [from mimical.] In imitation; in flower. ...nner.

As the sacrifices offered up to the true God of [illegible] were federal rites, and those that did partake of them did thereby enter into a covenant with God to become his servants, and obey his laws; so the airy principality hath mimically observed the same thing; and those that offered sacrifices to demons were supposed, by partaking of those sacrifices, to enter into a stricter league and familiarity with those evil spirits. Hallywell, Melampron, (1681,) p. 58.

Mi'mick.† n. s. [mimicus, Latin.]

1. A ludicrous imitator; a buffoon who copies another's act or manner so as to excite laughter: at first, simply an actor; a player.

No matter whether the scenes be good or no; the better they are, the worse do you distast them; and, being on your feete, sneke not away like a coward, but salute all your gentle acquaintance that are spred either on the rushes, or on stooles about you, and draw what troope you can from the stage after you: the mimicks are beholden to you, for allowing them elbow roome: their poet cries perhaps, a pox go with you; but care not you for that; there's no musick without frets. Dekker, Guls Hornebooke, (1609,) p. 31.

Juglers, and dancers, anticks, mummers, mimicks. Milton, S. A.

Like poor Andrew I advance,
False mimick of my master's dance:
Around the cord awhile I sprawl,
And thence, though slow, in earnest fall. Prior.

2. A mean or servile imitator.

Cunning is only the mimick of discretion; and may pass upon weak men, in the same manner as vivacity is often mistaken for wit, and gravity for wisdom. Addison, Spect. No. 225.

Mi'mick. adj. [mimicus, Latin.] Imitative.

In reason's absence mimick Fancy wakes
To imitate her; but, misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams. Milton, P. L.

The busy head with mimick art runs o'er
The scenes and actions of the day before. Swift.

To Mi'mick. v. a. [from the noun.] To imitate as a buffoon; to ridicule by a burlesque imitation.

Morpheus express'd
The shape of man, and imitated best;
The walk, the words, the gesture, could supply,
The habit mimick, and the mien belye. Dryden.

Who wou'd with care some happy fiction frame;
So mimicks truth, it looks the very same. Granville.

Mi'mickry. n. s. [from mimick.] Burlesque imitation.

By an excellent faculty in mimickry, my correspondent tells me he can assume my air, and give my taciturnity a slyness which diverts more than any thing I could say. Spectator.

Mimo'grapher.† n. s. [mimus and γράφω.] A writer of farces.

Some are poetasters or mimographers. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 331.

MINA'CIOUS. adj. [minax, Latin.] Full of threats.

Mina'city. n. s. [from minax, Latin.] Disposition to use threats.

Mi'naret.* n. s. A kind of spire in Saracen architecture.

There are likewise the ruins of a mosque, which must have been built by the Saracens, because the inscriptions on the minoret and tombstones are in their character. Drummond, Trav. (Lett. dat. 1747,) p. 211.

The mosques and other buildings of the Arabians are rounded into domes, and coved roofs, with now and then a slender square minaret terminating in a ball or pine-apple. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

Mi'natory.† adj. [minor, Latin.] Threatening.

The king made a statute monitory and minatory, towards justices of peace, that they should duly execute their office, inviting complaints against them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

There is another way of taking the words as plainly minatory or threatening. Pococke on Hosea, p. 209.

To MINCE.✝ v. a. [contracted, as it seems, from minish; or from mincer, Fr.; mince, French, small. Dr. Johnson. — Icel. minka, diminuere, à minna, minus. Serenius.]

1. To cut into very small parts.

She saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs. Shakspeare.

With a good chopping-knife mince the two capons as small as ordinary minced meat. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

What means the service of the church so imperfectly, and by halves, read over? What makes them mince and mangle that in their practice, which they could swallow whole in their subscription? South, Serm.

Revive the wits;
But murder first, and mince them all to bits. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To mention any thing scrupulously, by a little at a time; to palliate; to extenuate.

I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say I love you. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Shakspeare, Othello.

These gifts,
Saving your mincing, the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

I'll try to force you to your duty:
For so it is, howe'er you mince it,
Ere we part, I shall evince it. Hudibras.

Siren; now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase.
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden, Span. Friar.

If, to mince his meaning, I had either omitted some part of what he said, or taken from the strength of his expression, I certainly had wronged him. Dryden.

These, seeing no where water enough to effect a general deluge, were forced to mince the matter, and make only a partial one of it, restraining it to Asia. Woodward.

3. To speak with affected softness; to clip the words.

Behold yon simpering dame,
Whose face between her forks presageth snow;
That minces virtue, and does shake the head
To hear of pleasure's name. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To MINCE.✝ v. n.

1. To walk nicely by short steps; to act with appearance of scrupulousness and delicacy; to affect nicety.

Fast by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy. Spenser, F. Q.

I'll turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched-forth necks, and wanton eyes, walking, and mincing [in the margin, tripping nicely] as they go. Isaiah, iii. 16.

A harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye.
Pope, Dunciad.

2. To speak small and imperfectly.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are as much distinguished from each other, as the mincing lady prioress and the broad-speaking wife of Bath. Dryden, Fab.

MINCE-PIE.✱ } n. s. A pie made of meat minced or MINCED-PIE. } cut into very small pieces, with other ingredients; called also a christmas-pie, as being mostly in use about the time of Christmas.

Your petitioner is remarkable in his county for having dared to treat Sir P. P. a cursed sequestrator, and three members of the assembly of divines, with brawn and minced-pies upon New Year's day. Spect. No. 629.

We have never been witnesses of animosities excited by the use of mince-pies and plumb-porridge. Johnson, Life of Butler.

MI'NCINGLY.✝ adv. [from mince.]

1. In small parts; not fully.

Justice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with pressed and heaped, and even over-enlarged, measure. Hooker.

2. Affectedly.

Caraffa, in his theses, more mincingly terming their now pope, Paul the fifth, vice-deus, vice-god.
Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 278.

MIND.✝ n. s. [ȝemẏnd, Saxon; minde, Danish; from the Goth. ga-munan, to remember.]

1. The intelligent power.

I am a very foolish, fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding: which word, mind, we use also for opinion; as, I am of this or that mind: and sometimes for men's conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse: oftentimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences: but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object: or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be dissevered as eternal from that which is mortal. Ralegh.

I thought th' eternal Mind
Had made us masters. Dryden.

2. Intellectual capacity.

We say that learning's endless, and blame fate
For not allowing life a longer date,
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
He found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

3. Liking; choice; inclination; propension; affection.

Our question is, Whether all be sin which is done without direction by Scripure, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds without asking counsel of God. Hooker.

We will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our mind. Shakspeare.

Being so hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind.
Shakspeare.

I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shakspeare.

Be of the same mind one towards another. Rom. xii. 16.

Hast thou a wife after thy mind? forsake her not. Ecclus.

They had a mind to French Britain; but they have let fall their bit. Bacon, War with Spain.

Sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let the occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton, P. L.

Waller coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.

He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.

All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson, Serm.

Suppose that after eight years' peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make? Addison.

4. Quality; disposition. Not usual.

These trees, receiving grafts of other kind,
Or thence transplanted, change their savage mind.
Dryden, Georg. ii. 71.

Of vegetable woods are various kinds,
And the same species are of several minds.
Dryden, Georg. ii. 120.

5. Thoughts; sentiments.

The ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind exprest,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

6. Opinion.

The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you, it shook. Shakspeare.

These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space. Locke.

The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Granville.

7. Memory; remembrancy. "In all the proofs Johnson gives, a preposition is prefixed; in mind, to mind, out of mind. I question much if in English it is used, as with us." Dr. Jamieson. That is, in Scotland, without the preposition. But it appears to have been so used in old English: "As the bokes maken minde," i. e. remembrance. Gower, Conf. Am. See Tyrwhitt's Gloss. in V. MIND.

The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton, P. L.

These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path disus'd was out of mind. Dryden.

They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury, Serm.

A wholesome law, time out of mind;
Had been confirm'd by fate's decree. Swift.

To MIND.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark; to attend.

His mournful plight is swallow'd up unwares,
Forgetful of his own that minds another's cares. Spenser, F. Q.

Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoins,
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me! Milton, P. L.

If, in the raving of a frantick muse,
And minding more his verses than his way,
Any of these should drop into a well. Roscommon.

Cease to request me; let us mind our way;
Another song requires another day. Dryden.

He is daily called upon by the word, the ministers, and inward suggestions of the Holy Spirit, to attend to those prospects, and mind the things that belong to his peace. Rogers.

2. To put in mind; to remind.

Let me be punish'd, that have minded you
Of what you should forget. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

I desire to mind those persons of Saint Austin. Burnet.

This minds me of a cobbling colonel. L'Estrange.

I shall only mind him, that the contrary supposition, if it could be proved, is of little use. Locke.

3. To intend; to mean. Not in use.

As for me, be sure I mind no harme
To thy grave person. Chapman, Il. 24.

To MIND.† v. n. To incline; to be disposed.

When one of them mindeth to go into rebellion, he will convey away all his lordships to feoffees in trust. Spenser on Ireland.

Belike she minds to play the Amazon. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

MI'NDED. adj. [from mind.]

1. Disposed; inclined; affected.

We come to know
How you stand minded in the weighty diff'rence
Between the king and you. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Whose fellowship therefore unmeet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be so minded still. Milton, P. L.

If men were minded to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design, but very much for its advancement. Tillotson.

Pyrrhus is nobly minded; and I fain
Would live to thank him. Philips.

2. Minded is used in compounds: as, high-minded.

I am not high-minded, I have no proud looks. Psalms.

We say likewise low-minded.

MI'NDFUL. adj. [mind and full.] Attentive; heedful; having memory.

I acknowledge the usefulness of your directions, and I promise you to be mindful of your admonitions. Hammond.

MI'NDFULLY. adv. [from mindful.] Attentively; heedfully.

MI'NDFULNESS.† n. s. [from mindful.] Attention; regard. Sherwood.

MI'NDLESS. adj. [from mind.]

1. Inattentive; regardless.

Cursed Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forget now thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them. Shakspeare.

As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
Mindless of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.

2. Not endued with a mind; having no intellectual powers.

God first made angels, bodiless, pure minds;
Then other things which mindless bodies be,
Last he made man. Davies.

3. Stupid; unthinking.

Pronounce thee a gross lowt, a mindless slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

MIND-STRICKEN. adj. [mind and stricken.] Moved; affected in his mind.

He had been so mind-stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney.

MINE. pronoun possessive. [mŷn, Saxon; mein, German; mien, French; meus, Latin. It was anciently the practice to use my before a consonant, and mine before a vowel, which euphony still requires to be observed. Mine is always used when the substantive precedes: as, this is my cat; this cat is mine.] Belonging to me.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shakspeare.

A friend of mine is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him. St. Luke.

That palm is mine. Dryden.

MINE. n. s. [mine, French; mwyn or mwn, Welsh, from maen, lapis, in the plural meini.]

1. A place or cavern in the earth, which contains metals or minerals.

Though streighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Waller.

A workman, to avoid idleness, worked in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which was little esteemed. Boyle.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem, which he knows not what to make of. Boyle.

The heedless mine-man aims only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible. Boyle.

2. A cavern dug under any fortification that it may sink for want of support; or, in modern war, that powder may be lodged in it, which being fired at a proper time, whatever is over it may be blown up and destroyed.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd?
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower?
What sacrilege hath such a saint disgrac'd? Sidney.

Build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down, and fill up the mines that you have digged. Whitgift.

Others to a city strong
Lay siege, encamp'd; by battery, scale, and mine,
Assaulting. Milton, P. L.

To MINE.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dig mines or burrows; to form any hollows under ground.

The ranging stork in stately beeches dwells;
The climbing goats on hills securely feed;
The mining conies shroud in rocky cells. Wotton, Rem. p. 386.

Of this various matter the terrestrial globe consists from its surface to the greatest depth we ever dig or mine. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. To practise secret means of injury.

Mining fraud shall find no way to creep
Into their fenced ears with grave advice. Sackville, Gorboduc.

To MINE.† v. a. To sap; to ruin by mines; to destroy by slow degrees, or secret means.

If an housebande man wiste in what hour the theef would come, sotheli he schulde wake, and not suffre his house to be myned. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xii.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth; but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.

MI'NER. n. s. [mineur, French; from mine.]

1. One that digs for metals.

By me kings' palaces are push'd to ground,
And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found. Dryden.

2. One who makes military mines.

As the bombardeer levels his mischief at cities, the miner busies himself in ruining private houses. Tatler.

MI'NERAL. n. s. [minerale, Latin.] Fossile body; matter dug out of mines. All metals are minerals, but all minerals are not metals. Minerals in the restrained sense are bodies that may be melted, but not malleated.

She did confess, she had
For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and ling'ring
By inches waste you. Shakspeare, Cymb.

The minerals of the kingdom, of lead, iron, copper, and tin, are of great value. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton, P. L.

Minerals; nitre with vitriol; common salt with alum; and sulphur with vitriol. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

MINERAL. adj. Consisting of fossile bodies.

By experience upon bodies in any mine, a man may conjecture at the metallick or mineral ingredients of any mass found there. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

MI'NERALIST. n. s. [from mineral.] One skilled or employed in minerals.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem or a mineral, which he knows not what to make of till he shews it a jeweller or a mineralist. Boyle.

The metals and minerals which are lodged in the perpendicular intervals do still grow, to speak in the mineralist's phrase, or receive additional increase. Woodward.

MINERA'LOGIST. n. s. [mineralogie, French; from mineral, and λόγος.] One who discourses on minerals.

Many authors deny it, and the exactest mineralogists have rejected it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MINERA'LOGY. n. s. [from mineral and λόγος.] The doctrine of minerals.

MI'NEVER.† n. s. [the orthography seems to be meniver. See MENIVER. Some write it miniver.] The skin of the meniver; white fur with specks of black.

To win some patched shreds of minivere. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 2.

To MI'NGLE.† v. a. [mengan, Sax. mengen, Germ. menga, Su. Goth. from maengd, a multitude. Wicliffe and Chaucer use meng for mingle.]

1. To mix; to join; to compound; to unite with something so as to make one mass.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with subtle heart,
Concocted and adusted, they reduc'd
To blackest grain. Milton, P. L.

Lament with me! with me your sorrows join,
And mingle your united tears with mine! Walsh.

Our sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, we are ready to mingle with ourselves, and cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts, Logick.

2. To contaminate; to make of dissimilar parts.

To confound the race
Of mankind in one root, and Earth with Hell
To mingle and involve. Milton, P. L.

The best of us appear contented with a mingled, imperfect virtue. Rogers, Serm.

3. To confuse.

There mingle broils. Milton, P. L.

To MI'NGLE. v. n. To be mixed; to be united with.

Ourself will mingle with society,
And play the humble host. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Alcimus had defiled himself wilfully in the times of their mingling with the Gentiles. 2 Mac. xiv. 13.

Nor priests, nor statesmen,
Could have completed such an ill as that,
If women had not mingled in the mischief. Rowe.

She, when she saw her sister nymphs, suppress'd
Her rising fears, and mingled with the rest. Addison.

MI'NGLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Mixture; medley; confused mass.

Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shakspeare.

Neither can I defend my Spanish Friar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural mingle. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

MINGLE-MANGLE.* n. s. A medley; a hotch-potch.

He cannot love the Lord Jesus with his heart, which lendeth one ear to his apostles, and another to false apostles; which can brook to see a mingle-mangle of religion and superstition, ministers and massing priests, light and darkness, truth and errour, traditions and scriptures. Hooker, Serm. 1. On St. Jude.

Publishing some botcherly mingle-mangle of collections out of others. Hartlib, Ref. of Schools, (1642,) p. 30.

MI'NGLEDLY.* adv. [from the part. mingled.] Here and there; confusedly. Barret, in V. Here.

MI'NGLER.† n. s. [from the verb.] He who mingles.

Such brewers, and minglers of this wine. Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 230.

MI'NIARD.* adj. Soft; dainty. See MIGNIARD.

To MI'NIARDIZE.* v. a. [mignardiser, French.] To render soft, delicate, or dainty.

Choice of words, and softness of pronunciation, proceeding from such wanton spirits that did miniardize and make the language more dainty and feminine. Howell, Lett. iv. 19.

To MI'NIATE.* v. a. [miniare, Ital. from minium.] To paint or tinge with vermilion.

The initials are written or flourished in red and blue, and all the capitals in the body of the text are miniated with a pen. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. p. v.

MI'NIATURE.† n. s. [miniature, French; from minimum, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Italian miniatura, from miniare; Lat. miniatus, from minium. See To MINIATE.]

1. Painting by powders mixed with gum and water. A mode of painting almost appropriated to small figures.

2. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.

The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth the miniature of them. Sidney.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison, Guardian.

The hidden ways
Of nature would'st thou know? how first she frames
All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels: lo!
Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
Unfolds its boughs: observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow seeds describ'd. Philips.

3. Red letter: rubrick distinction.

If the names of other saints are distinguished with miniature, her's [the blessed Virgin's] ought to shine in gold. Hickes, Serm. ii. 72.

Mi'nikin.† adj. Small; diminutive. Used in slight contempt. Dr. Johnson. — In this case, the word may be from the Goth. min, little. But our old lexicography refers minikin to elegant. Barret's Alv. 1580. And, under elegant, combines "neat, pretty, minikin, trim, handsome, &c." It thus seems to have been adopted from the Fr. mignon.

Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd,
Thy sheep be in the corn;
And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Mi'nikin.† n. s.

1. A darling; a favourite. Cotgrave.

Minnekin, now minx, is a nice trifling girl; minnock is apparently a word of contempt. Johnson, Note on Mids. N. Dream.

2. A small sort of pins.

Mi'nim.† n. s. [from minimus, Lat.]

1. A small being; a dwarf.

Not all
Minims of nature; some of serpent-kind,
Wonderous in length, and corpulence, involv'd
Their snaky folds, and added wings. Milton, P. L.

2. This word is applied, in the northern counties, to a small sort of fish, which they pronounce mennim. See Minnow.

3. One of an order of friars, called minimi, or the least of all, from affected humility.

4. Anciently, the shortest note in musick; now, equal to two crotchets. Dr. Johnson gives minum for this, and for the typographical sense. But minim is correct; though minum is not a false or unexisting word, as Mr. Mason insinuates in his hasty correction of Dr. Johnson. Cotgrave writes it mirum.

He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his minum rest, one, two, and the third in your bosom. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

5. A little song or poem.

Pardon thy shepheard, mongst so many layes
As he hath sung of thee in all his dayes
To make one minime of thy poore handmayd. Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 28.

6. A small sort of printing letter.

Mi'niment.* n. s. [from muniment.]

1. Miniments are the evidences or writings, whereby a man is enabled to defend the title of his estate. This word miniment includes all manner of evidences. Cowel.

2. Proof; testimony.

By chance he certain miniments forth drew,
Which yet with him as relickes did abide,
Of all the bounty which Belphœbe threw
On him, whilst goodly grace she did him shew. Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 6.

*MI'NIMUM. n. s. [Latin.] The smallest quantity possible. See Maximum.

MI'NIMUS. n. s. [Latin.] A being of the least size.

Get you gone, you dwarf,
You minimus of hindering knot grass made;
You bead, you acorn. Shakspeare.

MI'NION.† n. s. [mignon, French; Goth. minna; Germ. minnen, to love. Our word was formerly written both mignon, and mignion.] A favourite; a darling; a low dependant; one who pleases rather than benefits. A word of contempt, or of slight and familiar kindness.

Minion, said she; indeed I was a pretty one in those days; I see a number of lads that love you. Sidney.

They were made great courtiers, and in the way of minions when advancement, the most mortal offence to envy, stirred up their former friend to overthrow them. Sidney.

One, who had been a special minion of Andromanas, hated us for having dispossessed him of her heart. Sidney.

Fast by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion. Spenser, F. Q.

Go rate thy minions;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

His company must do his minions grace,
Whilst I at home starve for a merry look. Shakspeare.

Edward sent one army into Ireland; not for conquest, but to guard the person of his minion Piers Gaveston. Davies.

The ruling corruption of his mind, the peculiar minion of his affections, was worldliness. South, Serm. viii. 167.

If a man should launch into the history of human nature, we should find the very minions of princes linked in conspiracies against their master. L'Estrange.

The drowsy tyrant by his minions led,
To regal rage devotes some patriot's head. Swift.

Mi'nion.* adj. [mignon, Fr.] Trim; feat; dainty; fine; elegant; also, pleasing; gentle. Huloet, and Cotgrave.

On his minion harpe full well playe he can. Pleasaunte Pathewaye, &c. s. d. sign. C. iiij.

Mi'nion.* n. s. [minium, Lat.] Vermilion.

Let them paint their faces with minion and ceruse. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 482.

Mi'nioning.* n. s. [from minion.] Kind treatment.

Sooner hard steel will melt with southern winds,
Than woman vow'd to blushless impudence,
With sweet behaviour and soft minioning,
Will turn from that where appetite is fixed. Marston, Malcontent.

Mi'nionlike.* } adv. [minion and like.] Finely;
Mi'nionly. } daintily; affectedly. Not in use. Sherwood.

Hitherto will our sparkful youth laugh at their great grandfathers' English, who had more care to do well, than to speak minionlike. Camden, Rem. Languages.

Mi'nionship.* n. s. [from minion.] State of a favourite. Not in use.

The favourite Luines strengtheneth himself more and more in his minionship; but he is much murmured at, in regard the access of suitors to him is so difficult. Howell, Lett. i. i. 17.

Mi'nious. adj. [from minium, Lat.] Of the colour of red lead or vermillion.

Some conceive, that the Red Sea receiveth a red and minious tincture from springs that fall into it. Brown.

To Mi'nish.† v. a. [from diminish; Lat. minuo, from minus; old Fr. menuiser, to diminish.] To lessen; to lop; to impair.

Ye shall not minish aught from your bricks of your daily task. Exod. v. 19.
They are minished and brought low through oppression. Psal. cvii. 39.
Another law was to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipt, minished, or impaired coins of silver, not to be current in payments. Bacon, Hen. VII.

MI'NISTER. n. s. [minister, Latin; ministre, Fr.]

1. An agent; one who is employed to any end; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.

You, whom virtue hath made the princess of felicity, be not the minister of ruin. Sidney.

Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness:
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Th' infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim. Dryden, Theod. and Hon.

Other spirits govern'd by the will,
Shoot through their tracks, and distant muscles fill;
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Restrains or sends his ministers abroad. Blackmore.

2. One who is employed in the administration of government.

Kings must be answerable to God, but the ministers to kings, whose eyes, ears, and hands they are, must be answerable to God and man. Bacon.

3. One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal functions.

Epaphras, a faithful minister of Christ. 1 Col. i. 7.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting forth edicts against dancing and gaming. Addison.
The ministers of the gospel are especially required to shine as lights in the world, because the distinction of their station renders their conduct more observable; and the presumption of their knowledge, and the dignity of their office, gives a peculiar force and authority to their example. Rogers.
Calidus contents himself with thinking, that he never was a friend to hereticks and infidels; that he has always been civil to the minister of his parish, and very often given something to the charity-schools. Law.

4. A delegate; an official.

If wrongfully
Let God revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

5. An agent from a foreign power without the dignity of an ambassadour.

To MI'NISTER. v. a. [ministro, Lat.] To give; to supply; to afford.

All the customs of the Irish would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original and antiquity of that people. Spenser on Ireland.
Now he that ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for your food and multiply your seed sown. 2 Cor. ix.

The wounded patient bears
The artist's hand that ministers the cure. Otway, Orphan.

To MI'NISTER. v. n.

1. To attend; to serve in any office.

At table Eve
Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups
With pleasant liquors crown'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To give medicines.

Can'st thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To give supplies of things needful; to give assistance; to contribute; to afford.

Others ministered unto him of their substance. Luke.
He who has a soul wholly void of gratitude, should set his soul to learn of his body; for all the parts of that minister to one another. South.
There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out than the existence of a God; yet he that shall content himself with things as they minister to our pleasures and passions, and not make enquiry a little farther into their causes and ends, may live long without any notion of such a being. Locke.
Those good men, who take such pleasure in relieving the miserable for Christ's sake, would not have been less forward to minister unto Christ himself. Atterbury.
Fasting is not absolutely good, but relatively, and as it ministers to other virtues. Smalridge, Serm.

4. To attend on the service of God.

Whether prophesy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministring. Rom. xii. 7.

MINISTE'RIAL.✝ adj. [from minister.]

1. Attendant; acting at command.

Understanding is in a man; courage and vivacity in the lion; service, and ministerial officiousness, in the ox. Brown.

From essences unseen, celestial names,
Enlightening spirits, and ministerial flames,
Lift we our reason to that sovereign cause,
Who bless'd the whole with life. Prior.

2. Acting under superiour authority.

For the ministerial officers in court there must be an eye unto them. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth, and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fame that make this verse. Donne, Poems, p. 167.

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects; as it recalls us from the world, and gives a serious turn to our thoughts. Rogers, Serm.

3. Sacerdotal; belonging to the ecclesiasticks or their office.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysóstom plainly allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker.

4. Pertaining to ministers of state, or persons in subordinate authority.

Very solid and very brilliant talents distinguish the ministerial benches. Burke.
The whole ministerial cant is quickly got by heart. Burke.

MINISTE'RIALLY. adv. In a ministerial manner.

Supremacy of office, by mutual agreement and voluntary œconomy, belongs to the father; while the son, out of voluntary condescension, submits to act ministerially, or in capacity of mediator. Waterland.

MI'NISTERY. n. s. [ministerium, Lat.] Office; service. This word is now contracted to ministry, but used by Milton as four syllables.

They that will have their chamber filled with a good scent, make some odoriferous water be blown about it by their servants' mouths that are dextrous in that ministery. Digby.

This high temple to frequent
With ministeries due, and solemn rites. Milton, P. L.

MI'NISTRAL. adj. [from minister.] Pertaining to a minister.

MI'NISTRANT. adj. [from minister.] Attendant; acting at command. Pope accents it, not according to analogy, on the second syllable.

Him thrones, and powers,
Princedoms, and dominations ministrant,
Accompany'd to heaven-gate. Milton, P. L.
Ministrant to their queen with busy care,
Four faithful handmaids the soft rites prepare. Pope.

MINISTRA'TION.✝ n. s. [old French ministration; from ministro, Latin.]

1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or commissioned by another.

God made him the instrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own land to him, with this difference, that God, by his ministration to me, intends to do him a favour. Bp. Taylor, Living Holy.

Though sometimes effected by the immediate fiat of the divine will, yet I think they are most ordinarily done by the ministration of angels. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Service; office; ecclesiastical function.

The profession of a clergyman is an holy profession, because it is a ministration in holy things, an attendance at the altar. Law.

If the present ministration be more glorious than the former, the minister is more holy. Atterbury.

MI'NISTRESS.* n. s. [from minister.] She who supplies or dispenses.

Thus was beauty sent from heaven,
The lovely ministress of truth and good
In this dark world. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. I.

MI'NISTRY. n. s. [contracted from ministery; ministerium, Lat.]

1. Office; service.

So far is an indistinction of all persons, and, by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God, declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any time, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more sacred than others. Sprat, Serm.

2. Office of one set apart to preach; ecclesiastical function.

Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton, P. L.

Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.

3. Agency; interposition.

The natural world he made after a miraculous manner; but directs the affairs of it ever since by standing rules, and the ordinary ministry of second causes. Atterbury.

To all but thee in fits he seem'd to go,
And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow. Parnel.

The poets introduced the ministry of the gods, and taught the separate existence of human souls. Bentley.

4. Business.

He safe from loud alarms,
Abhorr'd the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden, Æn.

5. Persons employed in the publick affairs of a state.

I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.

MI'NIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Red lead.

Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcined into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called masticot or massicot; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar: the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill, Mat. Med.

This'NEKIN.* n. s. See MINIKIN.

dences. ~K.† n. s. Of this word I know not the

2. Proof; ı meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the same word. Dr. Johnson. — This word is justly supposed by Mr. Malone to be an errour of the press; and that mimick is the true word. One of the old quarto editions of the comedy reads minnick; another minnock; and the folio mimmick. A player was called a mimick, in the poet's time. See MIMICK.

An ass's nowl I fixed on his head;
Anon, his Thisbe must be answered,
And forth my minnock comes. Shakspeare.

MI'NNOW.† n. s. [menuise, small fish, Fr. from menu, small; min, Goth. small; and Dr. Jamieson says, he has been informed that the Gaelick name of the fish, meanan, is traced to meanle, little.] A very small fish; a pink. See the second sense of MINIM.

Hear you this Triton of the minnows? Shakspeare, Coriol.

The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the spring they make excellent minnow tansies; for being washed well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primroses, and tansy. Walton, Angler.

The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of minnow-fishing. Walton, Angler

MI'NOR.† adj. [Latin.]

1. Petty; inconsiderable.

If there are petty errours and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to contemn inferiour falsities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Inferiour.

He wishes to take on board the eight secondaries, or minor canons, of his college. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 242.

3. Less; smaller.

They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest. Clarendon.

The difference of a third part in so large and collective an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set in minor and less mistakable numbers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MI'NOR.† n. s.

1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign, was a minor. Davies on Ireland.

He and his muse might be minors, but the libertines are full grown. Collier, View of the Stage.

Long as the year's dull circle seems to run,
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.

The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Swift.

A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumaceous, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.

The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.

He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest, where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbuthnot.

3. A Franciscan friar. [fratres minores, Lat. fraticelli, Ital.] A name adopted by the Franciscans to express their extraordinary humility. Minorite is another English term for these persons.

To MI'NORATE.† v. a. [from minor, Latin.] To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the example from Glanville. The use of the word by others prior to, or contemporary with, Glanville, and those of no mean fame, may perhaps be allowed to establish it.

I could not in any charity believe, that he, who had been so often vice-chancellour, would any way seem to betray or minorate the authority and power of that place.
Hall, Lett. to Bp. Laud, (1631,) Abp. Laud's Rem. p. 48.

Forget not how assuefaction into a thing minorates the passion from it. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 10.

Imagination puts a double fallacy upon ancient men; first, it makes them undervalue themselves, and minorate their own abilities; and then it makes them overvalue the objects of fear, and make them far greater than they are.
Smith on Old Age, p. 155.

This it doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minorates the object. Glanville, Sceps.

MINORA'TION.† n. s. [from minorate.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not in use.

His good pleasure was, by this willing minoration and exinanition of himself, to shew his greater condescension.
Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615,) sign. B. 7.

Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone, whose efficiencies are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.

MI'NORITE.* n. s. A Franciscan friar. See the third sense of MINOR.

The attendant Minorites, their chaplains.
Milton, Areopagitica.

MINO'RITY. n. s. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Lat.]

1. The state of being under age.

I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakspeare.

He is young, and his minority
Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakspeare.

These changes in religion should be staid, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or no. Hayward, Edw. VI.

Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon, Hen. VII.

If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet, The. of the Earth.

Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.

2. The state of being less.

From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or smallness in the exclusion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. The smaller number: as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.

MI'NOTAUR. n. s. [minotaure, French; minos and taurus.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus's labyrinth.

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth,
There minotaurs, and ugly treasons lurk. Shakspeare.

MI'NSTER.† n. s. [mynster, Saxon.] A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.

Seynt Albone
Of that mynstre leyde the first stone. Lydgate, Life of St. Alban.

MI'NSTREL.† n. s. [the word minstrel does not appear to have been in use here before the Norman conquest; but at what particular period it was taken up I have not discovered, nor yet whether it was coined in England or France; though I am inclined to think the latter, where this character was called menestrel, menestrier, &c. which was latinized by the monks, &c. ministellus, ministrellus, ministrallus, menesterellus, &c. Vid. Gloss. Du Cange, et Suppl. Menage derives the French words from ministerialis or ministeriarius, barbarous Latin terms, used in the middle ages to express a workman or artificer, still called in Languedoc ministral; as if these men were styled artificers or performers by way of excellence. But the origin of the name is given perhaps more truly by Du Cange: "Ministelli — quos vulgò menestreux vel menestriers appellamus, quòd minoribus aulæ ministris accenserentur." Accordingly, he says, the word minister is sometimes used for ministellus. Although one of these I take to be the true etymology, yet Junius's conjecture deserves mention, who supposes the word minstrel to be of English origin, and deduces it from our old English or Saxon name for a cathedral, minster. Bp. Percy, Rel. of Anc. Poetry, Ess. on the Minstrels, Note A. Another writer thus subscribes to the conjecture of Junius. Minstrel was indiscriminately applied to the harper, the fiddler, or the player on the bagpipe. It appears to be derived from minster; and those, called minstrels, were employed in the public worship of the cathedrals as singers; in the same way the Welsh called musicians cler, as employed in the same manner. V. Junius in voce. Those minstrels, during the middle ages, united the arts of poetry, instrumental and vocal music, their songs being always accompanied with the harp. They seem to have been the genuine successors of the ancient bards. Callander, Two Anc. Scot. Poems, p. 118.] A musician; one who plays upon instruments; a singer.

Hark how the minstrels gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.

Whether any minstrelles, or any other persons, doe use to sing any songs or ditties that be vile and uncleane.
Q. Elizabeth's Injunct. and Articles, 1559. Art. 54.

I will give you the minstrel.
— Then I will give you the serving creature. Shakspeare.

I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandys, Paraph.

Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels, and the people making a noise. St. Matt. ix. 23.

These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known. Dryden.

Often our seers and poets have confess'd,
That musick's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.

MI'NSTRELSY. n. s. [from minstrel.]

1. Musick; instrumental harmony.

Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the world applaud his minstrelsy. Davies.

That loving wretch that swears,
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsy, the spheres. Donne.

I began, —
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsy,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton, Comus.

2. A number of musicians.

Ministring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hast thou arm'd the minstrelsy of heav'n. Milton, P. L.

MINT. n. s. [minte, Saxon; menthe, Fr. mentha, Lat.] A plant.

Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint,
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.

MINT.† n. s. [moneta, Lat. mynet, Sax. money; mynetian, to coin.]

1. The place where money is coined.

What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals. Addison on Medals.

2. Any place of invention.

A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shakspeare.

As the mints of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party. Addison, Freeholder.

To MINT.† v. a. [mynetian, Saxon.]

1. To coin; to stamp money.

Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to set the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To invent; to forge.

Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted. Bacon, War with Spain.

3. To aim at; to wish for; to have a mind to. Used in the north of England. [gemynbian, gemynt, Sax.]

MI'NTAGE. n. s. [from mint.]

1. That which is coined or stamped.

[Its] pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage
Character'd in the face. Milton, Comus.

2. The duty paid for coining. Ainsworth.

MI'NTER.† n. s. [from mint.]

1. A coiner.

Sterling ought to be of pure silver called leaf silver, the minter must add other weight, if the silver be not pure. Camden.

2. An inventer.

They say — that Apollo, when he is an archer, is not president of the company. O generations of fictitious minters! who knows not that Apollo is a deity errant? Gayton on D. Quix. p. 242.

MI'NTMAN. n. s. [mint and man.] One skilled in coinage.

He that thinketh Spain to be some great over-match for this estate, is no good mintman; but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsick value. Bacon, War with Spain.

MI'NTMASTER. n. s. [mint and master.]

1. One who presides in coinage.

That which is coined, as mintmasters confessed, is allayed with about a twelfth part of copper. Boyle.

2. One who invents.

The great mintmasters of these terms, the schoolmen and metaphysicians, have wherewithal to content him. Locke.

MI'NUET. n. s. [menuet, French.] A stately regular dance.

The tender creature could not see his fate,
With whom she'd danc'd a minuet so late. Stepney.

John has assurance to set up for a minuet dancer. Spectator.

MI'NUM.† n. s. See MINIM. This way of spelling minim is found in Cotgrave's dictionary. But it is a corruption.

1. [With printers.] A small sort of printing letter; called also minion.

2. [With musicians.] A note of slow time, two of which make a semibrief, as two crotchets make a minum; two quavers a crotchet, and two semiquavers a quaver. Bailey.

MINU'TE. adj. [minutus, Lat.] Small; little; slender; small in bulk; small in consequence.

Some minute philosophers pretend,
That with our days our pains and pleasures end. Denham.

Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of providence over all, even the most minute and inconsiderable things. South, Serm.

Into small parts the wonderous stone divide,
Ten thousand of minutest size express
The same propension which the large possess. Blackmore.

The serum is attenuated by circulation, so as to pass into the minutest channels, and become fit nutriment for the body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

In all divisions we should consider the larger and more immediate parts of the subject, and not divide it at once into the more minute and remote parts. Watts, Logick.

MI'NUTE.† n. s. [minutum, Latin.]

1. The sixtieth part of an hour.

This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with listening ravish'd, could not find
His hour of speech a minute. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. Any small space of time.

They walk'd about me every minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart. Shakspeare.

The speed of gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes wing'd. Milton, P. L.

Gods! that the world should turn
On minutes and on moments. Denham, Sophy.

Experience does every minute prove the sad truth of this assertion. South, Serm.

Tell her, that I some certainty may bring;
I go this minute to attend the king Dryden, Aurengz.

3. The first draught of any agreement in writing; this is common in the Scottish law: as, have you made a minute of that contract? Dr. Johnson — Neither such practice, nor this sense of the word, are by any means confined to Scotland. Its meaning, here recorded, is so general as to signify "a short note of any thing done or to be done." Mason. — It signifies "a minute detail of things singly enumerated;" and is old in this usage, though neither Dr. Johnson nor Mr. Mason could find any example.

His garments were parted, and lots cast upon his inward coat; they gave him vinegar and gall to drink; they brake not a bone of him, but they pierced his side with a spear, looking upon him whom they had pierced; according to the prophecies of him, which were so clear and descended to minutes and circumstances of his passion, that there was nothing left by which they could doubt whether this were he or no who was to come into the world.
Bp. Taylor, Dem. of the Tr. of the Chr. Rel. (ed. Hurd,) p. 41.

Till then there is a very fit place and season for the exercise of the other part of the passion here, that of indignation, the last minute of my last particular. Hammond, Works, iv. 580.

To MI'NUTE. v. a. [minuter, French.] To set down in short hints.

I no sooner heard this critick talk of my works, but I minuted what he had said, and resolved to enlarge the plan of my speculations. Spectator.

Mi'nute-book. n. s. [minute and book.] Book of short hints.

Mi'nute-glass. n. s. [minute and glass.] Glass of which the sand measures a minute.

Mi'nute-hand.* n. s. [minute and hand.] The hand that points to the minutes of a clock or watch.

We have no perception of the motion of the index or hour-hand of a clock; and yet this no perception, so many times repeated, becomes real perception, with respect to the minute-hand. A. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 304.

Mi'nute-jack.* n. s. Another name for Jack of the Clockhouse; which see.

Cap and knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks! Shakspeare, Timon.

Mi'nute-watch. n. s. [minute and watch.] A watch in which minutes are more distinctly marked than in common watches which reckon by the hour.

Casting our eyes upon a minute-watch, we found that from the beginning of the pumping, about two minutes after the coals had been put in glowing, to the total disappearing of the fire, there had passed but three minutes. Boyle.

Mi'nutely.* adj. [from minute. Dr. Johnson, under the adverb minutely, has admitted that the following word in Shakspeare seems to be an adjective; as hourly is both the adverb and adjective. The adjective before us has good authority, besides that of Shakspeare.] Happening every minute.

Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach;
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

His minutely dread and expectation, the dream that so haunts and hounds him. Hammond, Works, iv. 580.

Those minutely preservations, whereby we are by God's gracious providence kept from danger. Wh. Duty of Man, Sund. v. § 10.

Mi'nutely. adv. [from minute, the substantive.] Every minute; with very little time intervening.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? As if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity till they arise from so mortiferous a state. Hammond on Fund.

Minu'tely. adv. [from minúte.] To a small point; exactly; to the least part; nicely.

In this posture of mind it was impossible for him to keep that slow pace, and observe minutely that order of ranging all he said, from which results an obvious perspicuity. Locke.

Change of night and day,
And of the seasons ever stealing round,
Minutely faithful. Thomson, Summer.

Minu'teness.† n. s. [from minúte.] Smallness; exility; inconsiderableness.

The animal spirit and insensible particles never fall under our senses by reason of their minuteness. Bentley.

Many other such minutenesses, abundance of variations beyond number. Shuckford on the Creation, Pref. p. lxx.

MINUTIÆ.* n. s. pl. [Latin.] The smallest particulars. A word of modern usage.

I will venture to transmit to you some anecdotes concerning him, [Dr. Johnson,] which fell under my own observation. The very minutiæ of such a character must be interesting, and may be compared to the filings of diamonds. Dr. Maxwell, in Boswell's Life of Johnson.

Minx.† n. s. [contracted, I suppose, from minnock. Dr. Johnson. — That is, if there be such a word really existing as minnock. But in another place Dr. Johnson calls a minx, "a minneken." Now minneken, or minikin is probably from mignon, darling; and from that word minx may have been formed, being at first a word of endearment. And thus Burton gives it, with a spelling which countenances this etymology: "Some pretty minkes." Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 604.] A young, pert, wanton girl.

Lewd minx!
Come, go with me apart. Shakspeare.

Some torches bore, some links,
Before the proud virago minx. Hudibras.

She, when but yet a tender minx, began
To hold the door, but now sets up for man. Dryden.

Mi'ny.* adj. [from mine.] Subterraneous; below the surface.

Bid Atlas, propping heaven, as poets feign,
His subterranean wonders spread! unveil
The miny caverns, blazing on the day,
Of Abyssinia's cloud-compelling cliffs. Thomson, Autumn.

Mi'rable.* adj. [mirabilis, Lat.] Wonderful; attracting admiration. Not in use.

Not Neoptolemus so mirable,
(On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st O yes Cries This is he) could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

MI'RACLE.† n. s. [mipacle, Saxon; miracle, Fr. miraculum, Latin.]

1. A wonder; something above human power.

Nothing almost sees miracles
But misery. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Virtuous and holy, chosen from above,
To work exceeding miracles on earth. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in attestation of some truth.

The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain ostentation of power, and to raise unprofitable amazement; but for the real benefit and advantage of men by feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead. Bentley, Serm.

3. Anciently, a spectacle, or sort of dramatick entertainment, representing the lives of saints and the most eminent scriptural stories; known in England, according to Mr. Warton, for more than two centuries before the reign of Edward the Second. So, in France: "Miracle, pièce de notre ancien théâtre, qui, par suite, fut appelée mystère, parce qu' on y traitoit des sujets de religion." Roquefort, Gloss. Lang. Rom. See also Mystery.

Therfore made I my visitations
To vigilies, and to processions, —
To plays of miracles, and mariages. Chaucer, Wyfe of Bath's Prol.

We haunten no tavernes, ne hobelen abouten;
Att markets and miracles we medeley us never. P. Pl. Creede.

To Mi'racle. v. a. [from the noun.] To make wonderful. Not in use.

Who this should be,
Doth miracle itself, lov'd before me. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Miracle-monger.* n. s. A pretender to the performance of miracles; an impostor.

Direct the intention of these laws only against jugglers, miracle-mongers, or impostors. Hallywell, Melampron. p. 52.

The two miracle-mongers had not been above a minute in the holy sepulcher, when the glimmering of the holy fire was seen, or imagined to appear, through some chinks of the door; and certainly Bedlam itself never saw such an unruly transport, as was produced in the mob at this sight. Maundrell, Trav. p. 96.

MIRA'CULOUS. adj. [miraculeux, Fr. from miracle.] Done by miracle; produced by miracle; effected by power more than natural.

Arithmetical progression might easily demonstrate how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy unto six hundred thousand able men. Ralegh, Essays.

Restore this day, for thy great name,
Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.

Why this strength
Miraculous yet remaining in those locks?
His might continues in thee not for naught. Milton. S. A.

At the first planting of the Christian religion, God was pleased to accompany it with a miraculous power. Tillotson.

MIRA'CULOUSLY. adv. [from miraculous.] By miracle; by power above that of nature.

It was the singular providence of God, to draw those northern heathen nations down into those Christian parts, where they might receive Christianity, and to mingle nations so remote miraculously to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenser on Ireland.

Turnus was to be slain that very day; and Æneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in single combat, unless his hurt had been miraculously healed. Dryden.

MIRA'CULOUSNESS.† n. s. [from miraculous.] The state of being effected by miracle; superiority to natural power.

I understand not how any hasty conclusions, concerning the miraculousness of any strange event, can reconcile themselves to counsel and sobriety. Spencer on Prodigies, (1665,) p. 242.

The miraculousness of such appearances will be no longer urged as an argument against their possibility. West on the Resurrection, § 13.

MIRADO'R. n. s. [Spanish, from mirar, to look.] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies see shews.

Mean time your valiant son, who had before
Gain'd fame, rode round to every mirador;
Beneath each lady's stand a stop he made,
And bowing, took th' applauses which they paid. Dryden.

MIRE. n. s. [moer, Dutch.] Mud; dirt at the bottom of water.

He his rider from her lofty steed
Would have cast down and trod in dirty mire. Spenser.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakspeare, Timon.

I'm Ralph himself, your trusty squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o'th' mire. Hudibras.

I appeal to any man's reason whether it be not better that there should be a distinction of land and sea, than that all should be mire and water. More against Atheism.

Now plung'd in mire, now by sharp brambles torn. Roscommon.

To MIRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To whelm in the mud; to soil with mud.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?
Who smeered thus, and mir'd with infamy,
I might have said no part of it is mine. Shakspeare.

MIRE. n. s. [myr, Welsh; mýɲa, Saxon; mier, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.

MI'RINESS. n. s. [from miry.] Dirtiness; fulness of mire.

MIRK.* adj. [myrk, Icel. moerk, Su. Goth. morck, Danish, dark, morcker, darkness; mirce, darkness, Saxon.] Dark; obscure. Used in the north of England.

The shadowe makith her [the moon's] bemes merke. Chaucer, Rom. R. 5339.

Diggon, I praye thee, speake not so dirke;
Such myster saying me seemeth to-mirke. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

A shadow blacker than the mirkest night,
Inviron'd all the place with darkness sad. Fairfax, Tass. xvi. 68.

MI'RKSOME.† adj. [morck, dark, Danish. In the derivatives of this set, no regular orthography is observed: it is common to write murky, to which the rest ought to conform. Dr. Johnson. — It seems more correct to write mirky, mirk, and mirksome, in conformity to the Sax. mirce.] Dark; obscure.

Through mirksome air her ready way she makes. Spenser, F. Q.

Into this mirksome source. More, Immortal. of the Soul, i. iv. 2.

MI'RKSOMENESS.* n. s. [from mirksome.] Obscurity.

You can easily ford over all the depths thereof, and clearly comprehend all the darkest mirksomeness therein. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 75.

MI'RKY.† adj. [from mirk.] Dark; wanting light. Dr. Johnson prefers murky, perhaps not justly; though certainly it was formerly so written. See MURKY and MIRK.

MI'RROR.† n. s. [miroir, French; mirar, Spanish, to look.]

1. A looking glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection. This sense is very old in our language.

This schal be likened to a man that beholdith the cheer of his birthe in a myrrour. Wicliffe, St. James, i.

This mirrour and this ring that ye may see,
He hath sent to my lady Canace. Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

And in his waters, which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the chrystal bright. Spenser, Epithalam.

That power which gave me eyes the world to view,
To view myself infus'd an inward light,
Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect sight. Davies.

Less bright the moon,
But opposite in levell'd West was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton, P. L.

Mirrour of poets, mirroir of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults endures
A remedy like those whom musick cures. Waller.

By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wondering, he saw his features and his hue,
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew. Dryden.

Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread event impend. Pope.

2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; as, men look in a glass to adjust their mien or dress; an exemplar; an archetype.

The works of nature are no less exact, than if she did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Hooker.

O goddess, heavenly bright,
Mirrour of grace and majesty divine. Spenser, F. Q.

How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men? Shakspeare.

Mirror of ancient faith in early youth. Dryden.

MI'RROR-STONE. n. s. [selenites, Lat.] A kind of transparent stone. Ainsworth.

MIRTH.† n. s. [mýɲð, Sax. mýɲıᵹ, merry.] Merriment; jollity; gaiety; laughter.

To give a kingdom for a mirth, to sit,
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave. Shakspeare.

His eye begets occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest. Shakspeare.

Most of the appearing mirth in the world is not mirth but art: the wounded spirit is not seen, but walks under a disguise. South, Serm.

I have always preferred cheerfulness to mirth. The latter I consider as an act, the former as an habit, of the mind. Mirth is short and transient, cheerfulness fixed and permanent.

Addison, Spect. No. 381.

With genial joy to warm the soul,
Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl. Pope, Odyss.

MI'RTHFUL. adj. [mirth and full.] Merry; gay; cheerful.

No simple word,
That shall be utter'd at our mirthful board,
Shall make us sad next morning. B. Jonson.

The feast was serv'd, the bowl was crown'd
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.

MI'RTHFULLY.* adv. [from mirthful.] In a merry manner.

This nephta is an oily or fat liquid substance, in colour not unlike soft white clay; of quality hot and dry, so as it is apt to inflame with the sunbeams, or heat that issues from fire; as was mirthfully experimented upon one of Alexander's pages, who, being anointed, with much ado escaped burning.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 182.

MI'RTHLESS.† adj. [from mirth.] Joyless; cheerless.

Who can a reason finde or wit in that
Dauncith he mery, that is mirthelesse?
Chaucer, Assembly of Foules.

Sion's doleful state,
Desolate;
Sacked, burned, and inthrall'd;
And the temple spoil'd, which we
Ne'er should see,
To our mirthless minds we call'd.
Donne, Ps. 137. Poems, p. 328.

MI'RY. adj. [from mire.]

1. Deep in mud; muddy.

Thou should'st have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse: thou should'st have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures, and there grovelled in endless stench and misery. Temple.

Deep, through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
Above her ancle rose the chalky clay. Gay, Trivia.

So have I seen ill-coupled hounds
Drag different ways in miry grounds. Swift.

2. Consisting of mire.

Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain
Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,
How they are stain'd like meadows, yet not dry,
With miry slime left on them by a flood? Shakspeare.

MIS.† An inseparable particle used in composition to mark an ill sense, or depravation of the meaning: as, chance, luck; mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miscomputation, false reckoning; to like, to be pleased; to mislike, to be offended; from mes in Teutonick and French, used in the same sense. Of this it is difficult to give all the examples; but those that follow will sufficiently explain it. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon miſ, from the Gothick missa; both which are often found in composition, denoting errour, defect, or dissimilitude.

MISACCEPTA'TION. n. s. [mis and acceptation.] The act of taking in a wrong sense.

MISADVE'NTURE. n. s. [mesaventure, Fr. mis and adventure.] Mischance; misfortune; ill luck; bad fortune.

Your looks are pale and wild, and do import
Some misadventure. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

When a commander, either upon necessity or misadventure, falleth into danger, it much advanceth both his reputation and enterprize, if bravely he behaveth himself. Hayward.

The body consisted, after all the losses and misadventures, of no less than six thousand foot. Clarendon.

Distinguish betwixt misadventure and design. L'Estrange.

The trouble of a misadventure now and then, that reaches not his innocence or reputation, may not be an ill way to teach him more caution. Locke on Education.

MISADVE'NTURED. adj. [from misadventure.] Unfortunate.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes,
A pair of starcrost lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur'd piteous overthows
Do with their death bury their parents' strife. Shakspeare.

MISADVI'SED. adj. [mis and advised.] Ill directed.

To MISAFFE'CT. v. a. [mis and affect.] To dislike; not to be fond of.

That peace which you have hitherto so perversely misaffected.
Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

MISAFFE'CTED.* adj. Ill affected; ill disposed.

The whole body groans under such heads, and all the members must needs be misaffected.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

To MISAFFI'RM. v. a. [mis and affirm.] To state incorrectly; to affirm falsely.

I suppose it no injury to the dead, but a good deed rather to the living, if by better information given them, or, which is enough, by only remembering them the truth of what they themselves know to be here misaffirmed, they may be kept from entering the third time unadvisedly into war and bloodshed.
Milton, Eiconoclast. Pref.

MISA'IMED. adj. [mis and aim.] Not aimed rightly.

The idle stroke enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his misaimed sight,
Did fall to ground. Spenser, F. Q.

MISALLEGA'TION.* n. s. [mis and allegation.] False statement.

You have compelled me, who have charged me so unjustly with misallegations. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 277.

To MISALLE'GE. v. a. [mis and allege.] To cite falsely as a proof or argument.

[This] is all that Eusebius, by them mistranslated and misalleged by him, [my refuter,] requireth.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 135.

MISALLI'ANCE.* n. s. [mis and alliance.] Improper association.

Their purpose was to ally two things, in nature incompatible, the Gothic and the classic unity; the effect of which misalliance was to discover and expose the nakedness of the Gothic. Hurd.

MISALLI'ED.* adj. [mis and ally.] Ill associated.

They [the French revolutionists,] are a misallied and disparaged branch of the House of Nimrod. Burke.

MI'SANTHROPE.† } MISA'NTHROPOS. } n. s. [misanthrope, French; μισάνθρωπος, Gr. from μισω, to hate, and ανθρωπος, man. Misanthropos, or misanthropous, "one that hates man's company," is in the old vocabulary of Cockeram. It is now usual to say misanthropist.] A hater of mankind.

I am misanthropos, and hate mankind. Shakspeare.

Alas, poor dean! his only scope
Was to be held a misanthrope;
This into general odium drew him. Swift.

MISANTHRO'PICAL.* } MISANTHRO'PICK. } adj. [from misanthropy.] Hating mankind.

MISA'NTHROPIST.* n. s. [from misanthropy.] A hater of mankind. Bailey.

MISA'NTHROPY.† n. s. [misanthropie, Fr. from misanthrope.] Hatred of mankind.

In this last part of his imaginary travels, Swift has indulged a misanthropy that is intolerable. Ld. Orrery on Swift, p. 166.

MISAPPLICA'TION. n. s. [mis and application.] Application to a wrong purpose.

The indistinction of many in the community of name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The vigilance of those who preside over these charities is so exemplary, that persons disposed to do good can entertain no suspicions of the misapplication of their bounty. Atterbury.

It is our duty to be provident for the future, and to guard against whatever may lead us into misapplications of it. Rogers.

To Misapply'. v. a. [mis and apply.] To apply to wrong purposes.

Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied,
And vice sometime by action's dignified. Shakspeare.

The holy treasure was to be reserved, and issued for holy uses, and not misapplied to any other ends. Howell.

He that knows, that whiteness is the name of that colour he has observed in snow, will not misapply that word as long as he retains that idea. Locke.

To Misapprehe'nd. v. a. [mis and apprehend.] Not to understand rightly.

That your reasonings may lose none of their force by my misapprehending or misrepresenting them, I shall give the reader your arguments. Locke.

Misapprehe'nsion. n. s. [mis and apprehension.] Mistake; not right apprehension.

It is a degree of knowledge to be acquainted with the causes of our ignorance: what we have to say under this head, will equally concern our misapprehensions and errors. Glanville.

To Misascri'be. v. a. [mis and ascribe.] To ascribe falsely.

That may be misascribed to art which is the bare production of nature. Boyle.

To Misassi'gn. v. a. [mis and assign.] To assign erroneously.

We have not misassigned the cause of this phenomenon. Boyle.

To Misatte'nd. v. a. [mis and attend.] To attend slightly; to disregard.

They shall recover the misattended words of Christ, to the sincerity of their true sense, from manifold contradictions. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 22.

To Misbeco'me. v. a. [mis and become.] Not to become; to be unseemly; not to suit.

Either she has a possibility in that which I think impossible, or else impossible loves needs not misbecome me. Sidney.

What to the dauphin from England?
— Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty sender. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

That boldness which lads get amongst play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and ill-turn'd confidence, that those misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.

Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct;
Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. Addison.

Misbeco'mingness.* n. s. [from misbecome.] Unbecomingness.

Moral failings, whose unfitness or misbecomingness makes all the guilt. Boyle against Custom. Swearing, p. 115.

Misbego't. } adj. [begot or begotten with mis.]
Misbego'tten. } Unlawfully or irregularly begotten.

Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring man-slaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were but newly born. Shakspeare.

The misbegotten infant grows,
And, ripe for birth, distends with deadly throes
The swelling rind with unavailing strife,
To leave the wooden womb, and pushes into life. Dryden.

To Misbeha've. v. n. [mis and behave.] To act ill or improperly.

To Misbeha've. v. a. To conduct ill or improperly.

Spirits who have misbehaved themselves. Jortin.

Misbeha'ved. adj. [mis and behaved.] Untaught; ill-bred; uncivil.

Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love. Shakspeare.

Misbeha'viour. n. s. [mis and behaviour.] Ill conduct; bad practice.

The misbehaviour of particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laudably in some respects, who does not so in others. Addison, Freeholder.

Misbeli'ef.† n. s. [mis and belief.] False religion; a wrong belief.

I, that have sold such as profess the faith
That I was born in to captivity,
Will make their number equal that I shall Deliver from the oar; and win as many,
By the clearness of my actions, to look on
Their misbelief, and loath it. Massinger, Renegado.

To Misbeli'eve. v. n. [mis and believe.] To hold a false religion; to believe wrongly.

Hither hale that misbelieving Moor. Titus Andronicus.

Misbeli'ever. n. s. [mis and believer.] One that holds a false religion, or believes wrongly.

Yes, if I drew it with a curst intent
To take a misbeliever to my bed,
It must be so. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

To Misbese'em. v. a. [mis and beseem.] To suit ill; not to become.

One thinks it misbeseeming the author, because a poem; another, unlawful in itself, because a satire. Bp. Hall, Postscript to his Satires.

Neither can this action misbeseem the worthiness of so glorious a piece. Hakewill on Prov. p. 104.

To Misbesto'w. v. a. [mis and bestow.] To bestow improperly.

There cannot be a better way than to take the misbestowed wealth, which they were cheated of. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

Remember, dear, how loath and slow
I was to cast a look or smile,
Or one love-line to mis-bestow,
Till thou hadst chang'd both face and stile. Carew's Poems, p. 165.

Mi'sborn.* adj. [mis and born.] Born to misfortune; unluckily born.

Ah! misborn elf,
In evil hour thy foes thee hither sent. Spenser, F. Q. i. vi. 42.

To Misca'lculate. v. a. [mis and calculate.] To reckon wrong.

After all the care I have taken, there may be, in such a multitude of passages, several misquoted, misinterpreted, and miscalculated. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Miscalcula'tion.* n. s. [from miscalculate.] Wrong computation.

Their want of intercalations, and their miscalculations of eclipses. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 73.

To Misca'l. v. a. [mis and call.] To name improperly.

My heart will sigh when I miscal it so. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

The third act, which connects propositions and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscal it if we name it reason. Glanville, Scepsis.

What you miscal their folly is their care. Dryden.

Misca'rriage.† n. s. [mis and carriage.]

1. Ill conduct.

Resolutions of reforming do not always satisfy justice, nor prevent vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.

How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the failings and miscarriages of the righteous shall not be concealed, though the mercy of God be magnified in their pardon. Rogers, Serm.

2. Unhappy event of our undertakings; failure.

When a counsellor, to save himself,
Would lay miscarriages upon his prince,
Exposing him to publick rage and hate,
O, 'tis an act as infamously base,
As, should a common soldier sculk behind,
And thrust his general in the front of war.
Dryden, Span. Friar.

If the neglect or abuse of the liberty he had, to examine what would really make for his happiness, misleads him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and whereof they made so ill use, was now employed in digging and plowing; and the excess of fertility which contributed so much to their miscarriages, was retracted and cut off. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Your cures aloud you tell,
But wisely your miscarriages conceal. Garth, Dispensary.

3. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.

There must be miscarriages and abortions; for there died many women with child. Graunt.

To MISCA'RRY. v. n. [mis and carry.]

1. To fail; not to have the intended event; not to succeed; to be lost in an enterprise; not to reach the effect intended.

Have you not heard of Frederick, the great soldier who miscarried at sea? Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Our sister's man is certainly miscarried. Shakspeare.

Is it concluded he shall be protector?
— It is determin'd, not concluded yet:
But so it must be if the king miscarry. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

I could mention some projects which I have brought to maturity, and others which have miscarried. Addison, Guardian.

No wonder that this expedient should so often miscarry, which requires so much art and genius to arrive at any perfection in it. Swift.

2. To have an abortion.

Give them a miscarrying womb and dry breasts. Hos. ix. 14.

So many politick conceptions so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for a delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive. South, Serm.

His wife miscarried; but the abortion proved a female fœtus. Pope and Arbuthnot.

You have proved yourself more tender of another's embrios, than the fondest mothers are of their own; for you have preserved every thing that I miscarried of. Pope.

To MISCA'ST. v. a. [mis and cast.] To take a wrong account of.

Men miscast their days; for in their age they deduce the account not from the day of their birth, but the year of our Lord wherein they were born. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MISCELLA'NE.† n. s. [miscellaneus, Lat. This is corrupted into mastlin or mestlin. Dr. Johnson. — Mastlin, or mestlin, has been traced to a different origin. And as to the solitary instance of miscellane from Bacon, in the present sense, it may be remarked, that the old word is missellane.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

It is thought to be of use to make some missellane in corn; as if you sow a few beans with wheat, your wheat will be the better. Bacon, Nat. Hist. (ed. 1658,) No. 670.

MISCELLA'NEOUS. adj. [miscellaneus, Lat.] Mingled; composed of various kinds.

Being miscellaneous in many things, he is to be received with suspicion; for such as amass all relations must err in some, and without offence be unbelieved in many. Brown.

And what the people but a herd confus'd,
A miscellaneous rubble, who extol
Things vulgar, and well weigh'd scarce worth the praise.
Milton, P. R.

MISCELLA'NEOUSNESS. n. s. [from miscellaneous.] Composition of various kinds.

MI'SCELLANY.† adj. [miscellaneus, Lat.] Mixed of various kinds.

The power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

By their miscellany deities at Rome, which grew together with their victories, they shewed no nation was without its god. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

MI'SCELLANY.† n. s. A mass formed out of various kinds.

'Tis but a bundle or miscellany of sin; sins original, and sins actual. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 4.

I acquit myself of the presumption of having lent my name to recommend miscellanies or works of other men. Pope.

When they have join'd their pericranies,
Out skips a book of miscellanies. Swift.

To MISCE'NTRE.* v. a. [mis and centre.] To place amiss.

They were confounded, because they hoped, says thy servant Job; because they had misplaced, miscentred their hopes. Donne, Devot. p. 134.

MISCHA'NCE. n. s. [mis and chance.] Ill luck; ill fortune; misfortune; mishap.

The lady Cecropia sent him to excuse the mischance of her beasts ranging in that dangerous sort. Sidney.

Extreme dealing had driven her to put herself with a great lady, by which occasion she had stumbled upon such mischances as were little for the honour of her family. Sidney.

View these letters, full of bad mischance.
France is revolted. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain. Shakspeare.

Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man but some fault chargeable upon him; and nothing can be a fault that is not naturally in a man's power to prevent; otherwise, it is a man's unhappiness, his mischance or calamity, but not his fault. South, Serm.

To MISCHA'RGE.* v. a. [mis and charge.] To charge amiss in an accompt.

The most of the rest of the complaints were touching particulars mischarged. Hale, Sheriff's Accompts, ch. 10.

MI'SCHIEF. n. s. [meschef, old French.]

1. Harm; hurt; whatever is ill and injuriously done.

The law in that case punisheth the thought; for better is a mischief than an inconvenience. Spenser on Ireland.

Come you murdering ministers!
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs. Psal. lii. 2.

Was I the cause of mischief, or the man,
Whose lawless lust the fatal war began? Dryden, Æn.

2. Ill consequence; vexatious affair.

States call in foreigners to assist them against a common enemy; but the mischief was, these allies would never allow that the common enemy was subdued. Swift.

To MI'SCHIEF.† v. a. [from the noun.] To hurt; to harm; to injure.

That sad intelligencing tyrant, that mischiefs the world with his mines of Ophir. Milton, Of Ref. in Engl. B. 2.

As when Herod stretched forth his hand to mischief some of those, which were of the church. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

If the greatest inward heat be not sweetened by meekness, or not governed by prudence, can it bring to our souls any benefit? rather it mischiefs them. Sprat, Serm.

MI'SCHIEFMAKER. n. s. [from mischief and make.] One who causes mischief.

MISCHIEF-MAKING. adj. Causing harm.

Come not thou with mischief-making beauty,
To interpose between us, look not on him. Rowe.

MI'SCHIEVOUS.† adj. [from mischief. This word was formerly accented on the second syllable; as by Spenser repeatedly; and as, long after him, by

Cowley. It is even yet vulgarly so pronounced. But Shakspeare, Milton, and Dryden, confirm the accent on the first syllable.]

1. Harmful; hurtful; destructive; noxious; pernicious; injurious; wicked: used both of persons and things.

Think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

This false, wily, doubling disposition is intolerably mischievous to society. South, Serm.

I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet;
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden.

He had corrupted or deluded most of his servants, telling them that their master was run mad; that he had disinherited his heir, and was going to settle his estate upon a parish-boy; that if he did not look after their master he would do some very mischievous thing. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

2. Spiteful; malicious. Ainsworth.

Thither full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour, he hies. Milton, P. L.

Mi'schievously. adv. [from mischief.] Noxiously; hurtfully; wickedly.

Nor was the cruel destiny content
To sweep at once her life and beauty too;
But like a harden'd felon took a pride
To work more mischievously slow,
And plundered first, and then destroy'd. Dryden.

Mi'schievousness. n. s. [from mischievous.] Hurtfulness; perniciousness; wickedness.

Compare the harmlessness, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliableness, which is in youth, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy found in an aged, long-practised sinner. South, Serm.

MI'SCHNA.* n. s. [Hebrew; signifying repetition.] A part of the Jewish Talmud.

The Jews affirm that the most remarkable copies of the mischna, written in the second age after Christ, were marked with points, that so there might no less dignity belong to the oral than to the written law.
Mather, Vindic. of the H. Bible, p. 300.

Mi'scible. adj. [from misceo, Lat.] Possible to be mingled.

Acid spirits are subtile liquors which come over in distillations, not inflammable, miscible with water. Arbuthnot.

Miscita'tion.† n. s. [mis and citation.] Unfair or false quotation.

What a miscitation is this? "Moses commanded." The law was God's, not Moses's. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Being charged with miscitation and unfair dealing, it was requisite to say something; honesty is a tender point. Collier.

To Misci'te. v. a. [mis and cite.] To quote wrong.

Miscla'im. n. s. [mis and claim.] Mistaken claim.

Error, misclaim and forgetfulness, become suitors for some remission of extreme rigour. Bacon.

Miscomputa'tion. n. s. [mis and computation.] False reckoning.

It was a general misfortune and miscomputation of that time, that the party had so good an opinion of their own reputation and interest. Clarendon.

To Misconce'ive. v. a. [mis and conceive.] To misjudge; to have a false notion of.

Ne let false whispers, breeding hidden fears,
Break gentle sleep with misconceived doubt. Spenser.

Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes of those things, which, for want of due consideration heretofore, they misconceived. Hooker.

Misconceived Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

To Misconce'ive. v. n. To entertain a mistaken notion; to have a wrong idea.

The high priest, suspecting lest the king should misconceive that some treachery had been done to Heliodorus by the Jews, offered a sacrifice for the health of the man. 2 Macc. iii. 32.

Misconce'it. } n. s. [mis and conceit, and con-
Misconce'ption. } ception.] False opinion; wrong notion.

The other which instead of it we are required to accept, is only by error and misconceit named the ordinance of Jesus Christ; no one proof being as yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.

It cannot be that our knowledge should be other than an heap of misconception and errour. Glanville, Scepsis.

Great errours and dangers result out of a misconception of the names of things. Harvey on Consumptions.

It will be a great satisfaction to see those pieces of most ancient history, which have been chiefly preserved in Scripture, confirmed anew, and freed from those misconceptions or misrepresentations which made them sit uneasy upon the spirits even of the best men. Burnet, The. of the Earth.

Misco'nduct. n. s. [mis and conduct.] Ill behaviour; ill management.

They are industriously proclaimed and aggravated by such as are guilty or innocent of the same slips or misconducts in their own behaviour. Addison, Spect.

It highly concerned them to reflect, how great obligations both the memory of their past misconduct, and their present advantages, laid on them, to walk with care and circumspection. Rogers, Serm.

To Miscondu'ct. v. a. [mis and conduct.] To manage amiss; to carry on wrong.

Misconje'cture. n. s. [mis and conjecture.] A wrong guess.

I hope they will plausibly receive our attempts, or candidly correct our misconjectures. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To Misconje'cture. v. a. [mis and conjecture.] To guess wrong.

To Misconje'cture. v. n. To make a wrong guess or conjecture.

I find it to be ordinary, that many pressing and fawning persons do misconjecture of the humours of men in authority.
Bacon, on the Controv. of the Ch. of England.

Misconstru'ction. n. s. [mis and construction.] Wrong interpretation of words or things.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately
To strike at me upon his misconstruction,
When he conjunct, and flattering his displeasure,
Tript me behind. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Others conceive the literal acceptation to be a misconstruction of the symbolical expression. Brown.

Those words were very weakly inserted where they are so liable to misconstruction. Stillingfleet.

To Misco'nstrue. v. a. [mis and construe.] To interpret wrong.

That which by right exposition buildeth up Christian faith, being misconstrued breedeth errour; between true and false construction the difference reason must shew. Hooker.

We would have had you heard
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who, haply, may Misconstrue us in him. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Many of the unbelieving Israelites would have misconstrued this story of mankind. Ralegh.

Do not, great Sir, misconstrue his intent,
Nor call rebellion what was prudent care,
To guard himself by necessary war. Dryden, Aurengz.

A virtuous emperor was much afflicted to find his actions misconstrued and defamed by a party. Addison.

Misco'nstruer.* n. s. [from misconstrue.] One who makes a wrong interpretation.

Those misconstruers are fain to understand [it] of the distinct notifications. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 3. C. 10.

Miscontinuance. n. s. [mis and continuance.] Cessation; intermission.

To MISCO'UNSEL. v. a. [mis and counsel.] To advise wrong.

Every thing that is begun with reason
Will come by ready means unto his end,
But things miscounselled must needs miswend. Spenser.

To MISCO'UNT. v. a. [mescounter, French, mis and count.] To reckon wrong.

To MISCO'UNT.* v. n. To make a false reckoning.

Thus do all men generally miscount in the days of their health. Bp. Patrick, Divine Arithmetick, p. 6.

MI'SCREANCE. } n. s. [from mescreance or mescroiance,
MI'SCREANCY. } French.] Unbelief; false faith; adherence to a false religion.

If thou wilt renounce thy miscreance,
And my true liegeman yield thyself for ay,
Life will I grant thee for thy valiance. Spenser.

The more usual causes of deprivation are murther, manslaughter, heresy, miscreancy, atheism, simony. Ayliffe.

MI'SCREANT.† n. s. [mescreant, Fr.]

1. One that holds a false faith; one who believes in false gods.

Thou oughtest not to be slowthfull to the distruction of the myscreaunts, but to constreyne them to obeye our Lord God. Ld. Rivers, Dictes and Sayngs of the Philos. (1477,) A. viii.

If the unbeliever or miscroyaunte doe departe, let him departe. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) sign. B b. iii. b.

Their prophets justly condemned them as an adulterous seed, and a wicked generation of miscreants, which had forsaken the living God. Hooker.

2. A vile wretch.

Now by Apollo, king,
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
— O vassal! miscreant! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If extraordinary lenity proves ineffectual, those miscreants ought to be made sensible that our constitution is armed with force. Addison, Freeholder.

MI'SCREATE. } adj. [mis and created.] Formed un-
MI'SCREATED. } naturally or illegitimately; made as by a blunder of nature.

Then made he head against his enemies,
And Ymner slew or Logris miscreate. Spenser, F. Q.

Eftsoons he took that miscreated fair,
And that false other sprite, on whom he spread
A seeming body of the subtile air. Spenser, F. Q.

God forbid, my lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading;
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth. Shakspeare.

To MISDA'TE.* v. a. [mis and date.] To mark with untrue time.

In hoary youth Methusalems may die;
O, how misdated on their flattering tombs!
Young, Night Th. 5.

MISDE'ED.† n. s. [mis and deed; mıſdæd, Saxon; missadedins, Gothick.] Evil action.

The more to augment
The memory of his misdeed that bred her woe.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Aug.

O God,
If thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Evils, which our own misdeeds have wrought. Milton, P. L.

Chas'd from a throne, abandon'd, and exil'd
For foul misdeeds were punishments too mild. Dryden.

To MISDE'EM. v. a. [mis and deem.] To judge ill of; to mistake.

All unweeting an enchanter bad
His sense abus'd, and made him to misdeem
My loyalty, not such as it did seem. Spenser, F. Q.

Besides, were we unchangeable in will,
And of a wit that nothing could misdeem;
Equal to God, whose wisdom shineth still
And never errs, we might ourselves esteem. Davies.

To MISDEME'AN. v. a. [mis and demean.] To behave ill.

From frailty
And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,
Have misdemean'd yourself. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

MISDEME'ANOUR.† n. s. [mis and demeanour. Formerly written also misdemeanure.]

1. Offence; ill behaviour; something less than an atrocious crime.

The house of commons have only power to censure the members of their own house, in point of election or misdemeanours, in or towards that house. Bacon.

It is no real disgrace to the church merely to lose her privileges, but to forfeit them by her fault or misdemeanour. South.

These could never have touched the head, or stopped the source of these unhappy misdemeanours, for which the punishment was sent. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Mismanagement. Not in use.

Never was there any sterility, whereof there may not be a cause given; either — some naturall fault in the soil, or misdemeanure of the owners. Seasonable Serm. (1644,) p. 25.

To MISDERI'VE.* v. a. [mis and derive.] To turn or apply improperly.

Misderiving the well meant devotions of charitable and pious souls into a wrong channel. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 3. C. 7.

MISDESE'RT.* n. s. [mis and desert.] Ill deserving.

My hapless case
Is not occasioned through my misdesert.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 12.

MISDEVO'TION.† n. s. [mis and devotion.] Mistaken piety.

A place, where misdevotion frames
A thousand prayers to saints, whose very names
The church knew not, heav'n knows not yet. Donne.

The vanity, superstition, and misdevotion of which place, was a scandal far and near. Milton, Eicon. ch. 24.

MISDI'ET. n. s. [mis and diet.] Improper food.

A dropsy through his flesh did flow,
Which by misdiet daily greater grew. Spenser, F. Q.

To MISDIRE'CT.* v. a. [mis and direct.] To lead or guide amiss.

His temper takes some froward course,
Till passion, misdirected, sighs
For weeds, or shells, or grubs, or flies.
Shenstone, Progress of Taste, P. 4.

The vanity of misdirected reason.
Burgess on the Div. of Christ, p. 17.

To MISDISTI'NGUISH. v. a. [mis and distinguish.] To make wrong distinctions.

If we imagine a difference where there is none, because we distinguish where we should not, it may not be denied that we misdistinguish. Hooker.

MISDISPOSI'TION.* n. s. [mis and disposition.] Inclination to evil.

Let him bewail his sinfull misdisposition, and not dare to put forth his hand to this passover till he have gathered the bitter herbs of a sorrowful remorse for his hated offences.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 197.

To MISDO'.† v. a. [mis and do; Sax. mıſdoen.] To do wrong; to commit.

Pray for us there,
That what they have misdone,
Or missaid, we to that may not adhere. Donne, Poems, p. 341.

Afford me place to shew what recompence
Towards thee I intend for what I have misdone. Milton, S. A.

To MISDO'. v. n. To commit faults.

Try the erring soul
Not wilfully misdoing, but unaware Misled. Milton, P. R.

I have misdone, and I endure the smart,
Loth to acknowledge, but more loth to part. Dryden.

MISDO'ER. n. s. [from misdo.] An offender; a criminal; a malefactor.

Were they not contained in duty with a fear of law, which inflicteth sharp punishments to misdoers, no man should enjoy any thing. Spenser on Ireland.

Misdo'ing. n. s. [from misdo.] Offence; deviation from right.

The worst is, to think ourselves safe so long as we keep our injuries from the knowledge of men, and out of our own view, without any awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our misdoings. L'Estrange.

To Misdo'ubt. v. a [mis and doubt.] To suspect of deceit or danger.

If she only misdoubted me, I were in heaven; for quickly I would bring sufficient assurance. Sidney.

I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loth to turn them both together; a man may be too confident. Shakspeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If you misdoubt me that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you farther. Shakspeare.

To believe his wiles my truth can move,
Is to misdoubt my reason or my love. Dryden.

Misdo'ubt. n. s. [mis and doubt.]

1. Suspicion of crime or danger.

He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion;
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. Irresolution; hesitation.

York, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change misdoubt to resolution. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Misdou'btful.* adj. [from misdoubt.] Misgiving.

She gan to cast in her misdoubtful mynde
A thousand feares. Spenser, F. Q. v. vi. 3.

Misdre'ad.* n. s. [mis and dread.] Dread of evil.

Needs me then hope, or doth me need misdread?
Hope for that honour, dread that wrongful spite. Bp. Hall, Defiance to Envy.

MISE.*† n. s. [French.] A law term. The French word signifies as much as expensum in Latin; and hence mise was used for disbursement, costs; and also for taxes; and then for point or issue. See Cowel. In Cheshire mise still signifies a levy.

Mise'ase.* n. s. [mis and ease.] Uneasiness; want of ease. Obsolete.

The lond of misese and derknesse, wheras is the shadowe of deth. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

Misedi'tion.* n. s. [mis and edition.] Not a genuine edition.

Following a misedition of the Vulgar, which perverts the sense, by making a wrong stop in the sentence. Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D. 3. C. 10.

To Misemplo'y. v. a. [mis and employ.] To use to wrong purposes.

Their frugal fathers' gains they misemploy,
And turn to point and pearl, and ev'ry female toy. Dryden.

Some taking things upon trust, misemploy their power by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others. Locke.

That vain and foolish hope, which is misemployed on temporal objects, produces many sorrows. Addison, Spect.

They grew dissolute and prophane: and by misemploying the advantages which God had thrown into their lap, provoked him to withdraw them. Atterbury.

Misemplo'yment. n. s. [mis and employment.] Improper application.

An improvident expence, and misemployment of their time and faculties. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Mise'ntry.* n. s. [mis and entry.] A wrong entry.

If a clerk had made a misentry of record, the judge, before whom it was, might ore tenus rectify the mis-entry, though a considerable time after. Hale, H. P. C. ch. 62.

MI'SER. n. s. [miser, Latin.]

1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.

Do not disdain to carry with you the woful words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the base title of the sender. Sidney.

I wish that it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune to have met with such a miser as I am. Sidney.

Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great atchievements, great yourself to make,
Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's sake. Spenser, F. Q.

2. A wretch; a mean fellow.

Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty. This is the only sense now in use.

Though she be dearer to my soul than rest
To weary pilgrims, or to misers' gold,
Rather than wrong Castalio I'd forget her. Otway, Orphan.

No silver saints by dying misers given,
Here brib'd the rage of ill-requited heaven;
But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise. Pope.

Mi'serable.† adj. [miserable, French; miser, Lat.]

1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.

O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again? Shakspeare.

Most miserable is the desire that's glorious. Shakspeare.

What's more miserable than discontent? Shakspeare.

There will be a future state, and then how miserable is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch. South.

What hopes delude thee, miserable man? Dryden, Æn.

2. Wretched; worthless.

Miserable comforters are ye all. Job, xvi. 2.

3. Culpably parsimonious; stingy. In low language. Dr. Johnson. — South was of a different opinion from Dr. Johnson, and thus powerfully shews the propriety of the adjective in the present sense.

Reason tells me, that it is more misery to be covetous than to be poor, as our language, by a peculiar significance of dialect, calls the covetous man the miserable man. South, Serm. viii. 155.

4. Despicable; wretched; mean: as, a miserable person.

Mi'serableness.† n. s. [from miserable.] State of misery.

You may see the miserableness of your cause, which must be supported by such frauds and falsehoods. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 199.

Mentioning happiness and miserableness after death. Hammond, Works, iv. 642.

His prosperity either shrivels him into miserableness, or melts him into luxury. Scott, Christian Life, P. ii. ch. 4.

Mi'serably. adv. [from miserable.]

1. Unhappily; calamitously.

Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrelled, one of which was slain, and the other hanged for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably stabbed to death. South.

2. Wretchedly; meanly.

As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you, so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place, where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained. Sidney.

3. Covetously. Ainsworth.

Mi'sery. n. s. [miseria, Latin; misere, French.]

1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain. Locke.

Perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language than to part entirely with those tempers which we learnt in misery. Law.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.

When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our miseries our foes. Shakspeare.
The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife,
And mourn the miseries of human life. Dryden, Æn.

3. [From miser.] Covetousness; avarice. Not in use. Miser now signifies not an unhappy, but a covetous man; yet misery now signifies not covetousness but unhappiness.

He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' th' world: he covets less
Than misery itself would give. Shakspeare, Coriol.

In a fabrick of forty thousand pounds' charge, I wish thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model; for a little misery may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge. Wotton.

MISESTE'EM. n. s. [mis and esteem.] Disregard; slight.

To MISFA'LL.* v. n. [mis and fall.] To befall unluckily.

Thereat she gan to triumph with great boast,
And to upbrayd that chaunce which him misfell.
Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 10.

To MISFA'RE.* v. n. [mis and fare, Sax. mıꞅꝼaꞃan.] To be in an ill state.

Ere thou so with thyself misfare. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

MISFA'RE.* n. s. Ill state; misfortune.

Of whom Sir Arthegall gan then enquire
The whole occasion of his late misfare.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 48.

To MISFA'SHION. v. a. [mis and fashion.] To form wrong.

A thing in reason impossible, thorough their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God.
Hakewill on Providence.

To MISFE'IGN.* v. n. [mis and feign.] To feign with an ill design.

Who all this while
Amazed stands herselfe so mockt to see
By him, who has the guerdon of his guile
For so misfeigning her true knight to bee.
Spenser, F. Q. i. iii. 40.

To MISFO'RM. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.

His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misformed shape misshaped more. Spenser.

MISFO'RTUNE. n. s. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck; want of good fortune.

Fortune thus gan say, misery and misfortune is all one,
And of misfortune, fortune hath only the gift. Sidney.
What world's delight, or joy of living speech,
Can heart so plung'd in sea of sorrows deep,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes reach? Spenser.
Consider why the change was wrought,
You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault. Addison.

MISFO'RTUNED.* adj. [from misfortune.] Unfortunate; attended with misfortune.

Charity hath the judging of so many private grievances in a misfortuned wedlock. Milton, Tetrachordon.

To MISGI'VE.† v. a. [mis and give.]

1. To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.

As Henry's late presaging prophesy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me in these conflicts
What may befal him, to his harm or ours. Shakspeare.
This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne?
My heart misgives me. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.
Yet oft his heart, divine of something ill,

His heart misgave him, that these were so many meeting-houses; but, upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy. Addison, Freeholder.

2. To grant or give improperly or amiss. Not usual.

I knew nothing of any of their liberty misgiven or misused, till about a fortnight since.
Abp. Laud, Hist. of his Chancell. of Ox. Rem. p. 192.

MISGI'VING. n. s. [from misgive.] Doubt; distrust.

If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his absolution, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspicions, and misgivings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issues of his future reward. South.

MISGO'TTEN.* adj. [mis and gotten.] Unjustly obtained.

Leave, faytor, quickly that misgotten weft.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 18.

The surreption of secretly misgotten dispensations.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

To MISGO'VERN.† v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.

Misgovern'd both my kingdome and my life,
I gave my selfe to ease, to sleepe, and sinne.
Mir. for Mag. p. 73.

Solyman charged him bitterly, that he had misgoverned the state, and inverted his treasures to his own use. Knolles.

MISGO'VERNED. adj. [from misgovern.] Rude; uncivilised.

Rude misgovern'd hands, from window tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head. Shakspeare.

MISGO'VERNANCE. n. s. [mis and governance.] Irregularity.

Thy muse too long slumbereth in sorrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser.

MISGO'VERNMENT. n. s. [mis and government.]

1. Ill administration of publick affairs.

Men lay the blame of those evils whereof they know not the ground, upon publick misgovernment. Ralegh, Ess.

2. Ill management.

Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undisciplined, as to leave them unfurnished of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskilfulness make them fall into vicious company. Bp. Taylor.

3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.

There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment. Shakspeare.

To MISGRA'FF.* v. a. [mis and graff.] To graft amiss.

The course of true love never did run smooth;
But either it was different in blood,
Or else misgraffed, in respect of years.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

To MISGRO'UND.* v. a. [mis and ground.] To found falsely.

Otherwise this misgrounded conceit shall pass with us as a gloss of Burdeaux, that mars the text.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 104.

From me no pulpit, no misgrounded law,
Nor scandal taken, shall this cross withdraw.
Donne, Poems, p. 325.

MISGUI'DANCE. n. s. [mis and guidance.] False direction.

The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-first of March for the finding out of Easter: which has caused the misguidance from the sun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the moveable feasts. Holder on Time.

Whosoever deceives a man, makes him ruin himself; and by causing an errour in the great guide of his actions, his judgement, he causes an errour in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction. South.

To MISGUI'DE. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it. Locke.

Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war. Prior.

Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgement, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

MISHA'P. n. s. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.

To tell you what miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrours. Sidney.

Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, tell me, have there been any more such tempests wherein she hath thus wretchedly been wrecked. Spenser.

Sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And master these mishaps with patient might. Spenser.

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps. Shakspeare.

It cannot be
But that success attends him: if mishap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this
Can fit his punishment, or your revenge. Milton, P. L.

If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen,
Speak; for he could not die unlike himself. Denham.

To MISHA'PPEN.* v. n. [mis and happen.] To happen ill.

Affraid least to themselves the like mishappen might.
Spenser, F. Q. i. iii. 20.

To MISHE'AR.* v. n. [mis and hear.] To hear imperfectly.

It is not so: thou hast misspoke, mishear'd;
Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again. Shakspeare, K. John.

MI'SHMASH.† n. s. A low word. A mingle or hotchpotch. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. It seems, however, not to have been so contemptible as is insinuated. It is the Su. Goth misk-mask; Teut. misch-masch, chaos; mischen, to mix. Nor is our language without good examples of the word, though Dr. Johnson could find none.

Their language—[is] a mish-mash of Arabick and Portuguese.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 27.

I know the ingredients just that make them up
All to loose grains, the subtlest volatile atoms,
With the whole mish-mash of their composition.
Lee, Princess of Cleves.

To MISINFE'R. v. a. [mis and infer.] To infer wrong.

Nestorius teaching rightly, that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinfer, that in Christ those natures can by no conjunction make one person. Hooker.

To MISINFO'RM. v. a. [mis and inform.] To deceive by false accounts.

Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed. 2 Mac. iii. 11.

By no means trust to your servants, who mislead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself. Bacon.

Bid her well beware,
Lest, by some fair-appearing good surpriz'd,
She dictate false; and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid. Milton, P. L.

To MISINFO'RM.* v. n. To make false information.

You misinform against him for concluding with the papists; you find it not in him. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 256.

MISINFORMA'TION. n. s. [from misinform.] False intelligence; false accounts.

Let not such be discouraged as deserve well, by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery. Bacon.

The vengeance of God, and the indignatiou of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, when backed with greatness, and set on by misinformation. South, Serm.

MISINFO'RMER.* n. s. [from misinform.] One who spreads false information.

I plainly told the lord archbishop of Canterbury, that rather than I would be obnoxious to those slanderous tongues of his misinformers, I would cast up my rochet.
Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

To MISINSTRU'CT.* v. a. [mis and instruct.] To instruct improperly; to teach to a wrong purpose.

Touching them for whom we crave that mercy which is not to be obtained, let us not think that our Saviour did misinstruct his disciples, willing them to pray for the peace even of such as should be uncapable of so great a blessing.
Hooker, Eccl. Pol. v. § 49.

MISINSTRU'CTION.* n. s. [mis and instruction.] Instruction to an evil purpose.

They include the idolatries, and all other miscarriages, which they know not themselves guilty of, by reason of the blind misinstructions of their church.
More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 10.

MISINTE'LLIGENCE.* n. s. [mis and intelligence.]

1. Misunderstanding; disagreement.

He lamented the misintelligence he observed to be between their majesties. Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 329.

2. Misinformation; false accounts.

To MISINTE'RPRET. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense, or wrong intention.

The gentle reader rests happy to hear the worthiest works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the innocentest life traduced. B. Jonson.

After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted and misinterpreted. Arbuthnot on Coins.

MISINTERPRETA'TION.* n. s. [mis and interpretation.] Wrong explanation.

Their misinterpretation of the law, alluded unto, argues no less. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 2.

MISINTE'RPRETER.* n. s. [mis and interpreter.] One who explains to a wrong sense, or wrong intention.

Whom as a misinterpreter of Christ I openly protest against, and provoke him to the trial of this truth before all the world.
Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce, Ded.

To MISJO'IN. v. a. [mis and join.] To join unfitly or improperly.

In Reason's absence mimick Fancy wakes
To imitate her; but misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams;
Ill-matching words, and deeds, long past, or late.
Milton, P. L.

Luther, more mistaking what he read,
Misjoins the sacred body with the bread. Dryden.

To MISJU'DGE. v. n. [mis and judge.] To form false opinions; to judge ill.

You misjudge;
You see through love, and that deludes your sight:
As, what is straight, seems crooked through the water.
Dryden, All for Love.

By allowing himself in what is innocent, he breeds offence to his weak and misjudging neighbour. Atterbury.

Insensate!
Too long misjudging have I thought thee wise,
But sure relentless folly steels thy breast. Pope.

To MISJU'DGE. v. a. To mistake; to judge ill of.

Where we misjudge the matter, a miscarriage draws pity after it; but when we are transported by pride, our ruin lies at our own door. L'Estrange.

MISJU'DGEMENT.✻ n. s. [mis and judgement.] Unjust judgement; unjust determination.

His third reason, that the misjudgement in case of a pecuniary damage or banishment, may be afterwards capable of being reversed. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Nobody will dare to censure that popular part of the tribunal, whose only restraint on misjudgment is the censure of the publick. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

To MISKE'N.✻ v. a. [mis and ken.] To be ignorant of; to misunderstand; not to know. Used in some parts of the north of England.

MI'SKIN.✻ n. s. A little bagpipe. Obsolete. Bailey.

Now would I tune my miskins on this green. Drayton, Shep. Garl. (1593,) p. 5.

To MISKI'NDLE.✻ v. a. [mis and kindle.] To inflame rashly; to animate to an ill purpose.

Such is the miskindled heat of some unruly spirits. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 70.

To MISKNO'W.✻ v. a. [mis and know.] Not to know; to be ignorant of.

There is nothing in the world that they do more misknow than themselves. Seasonable Serm. (1644,) p. 39.

To MISLA'Y. v. a. [mis and lay.] To lay in a wrong place.

Mean time my worthy wife our arms mislay'd,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd. Dryden.

The fault is generally mislaid upon nature; and there is often a complaint of want of parts, when the fault lies in want of a due improvement. Locke.

If the butler be the tell-tale, mislay a spoon, so as he may never find it. Swift, Rules to Servants.

MISLA'YER. n. s. [from mislay.] One that puts in the wrong place.

The mislayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but it is the unjust judge that is the capital remover of land-marks, when he defineth amiss of lands and property. Bacon, Essays.

To MI'SLE. v. n. [from mist.] To rain in imperceptible drops, like a thick mist: properly mistle.

Ynough, thou mourned hast,
Now ginnes to mizzle, hie we homeward fast. Spenser.

The very small drops of a misling rain descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles. Grew, Cosmol.

This cold precipitates the vapours either in dews, or, if the vapours more copiously ascend, they are condensed into misling, or into showers of small rain, falling in numerous, thick, small drops. Derham, Physico-Theol.

In misling days, when I my thresher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd. Gay, Pastorals.

To MISLE'AD. v. a. preterite and part. passive, misled. [mis and lead.] To guide a wrong way; to betray to mischief or mistake.

Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn. Shakspeare.

Poor misled men: your states are yet worthy pity,
If you would hear, and change your savage minds,
Leave to be mad. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Trust not servants who mislead or misinform you. Bacon.

Oh thievish night,
Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton, Comus.

What can they teach and not mislead;
Ignorant of themselves, of God much more? Milton, P. R.

Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill,
And recompence, as friends, the good misled;
If mercy be a precept of thy will,
Return that mercy on thy servant's head. Dryden.

The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mislead us; yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception. Glanville, Scepsis.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspence, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mislead us from it. Locke.

'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill:
But of the two less dangerous is th' offence
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense. Pope.

MISLE'ADER. n. s. [from mislead.] One that leads to ill.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders. Shakspeare.

They have disclaimed and abandoned those heretical phantasies touching our Saviour, wherein by their misleaders they had been anciently plunged. Brerewood on Languages.

MISLE'ARNED.✻ adj. [mis and learned.] Not really or properly learned.

Such is this which you have here propounded on the behalf of your friend, whom it seems a mislearned advocate would fain bear up in a course altogether unjustifiable. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. Add.

MI'SLETOE.✻ See MISTLETOE.

To MISLI'KE.† v. a. [mis and like; Sax. mıſlıcıan.] To disapprove; to be not pleased with; to dislike.

It was hard to say, whether he more liked his doings, or misliked the effect of his doings. Sidney.

Tertullian was not deceived in the place; but Aquinas, who misliked this opinion, followed a worse. Ralegh.

Judge not the preacher, for he is thy judge:
If thou mislike him, thou conceiv'st him not. Herbert.

To MISLI'KE.✻ v. n. Not to be pleased with.

They made sport, and I laughed; they mispronounced, and I misliked. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

MISLI'KE. n. s. [from the verb.] Disapprobation; dislike.

Setting your scorns and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the lady Gray
Should not become my wife. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Their angry gestures with mislike disclose,
How much his speech offends their noble ears. Fairfax.

MISLI'KER. n. s. [from mislike.] One that disapproves.

Open flatterers of great men, privy mislikers of good men, fair speakers with smiling countenances. Ascham.

MI'SLEN.† n. s. [See MASTLIN.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

They commonly sow those lands with wheat, mislen, and barley. Mortimer, Husb.

To MISLI'VE.† v. n. [mis and live.] To live ill.

Should not thilke God, that gave him that good,
Eke cherish his child, if in his ways he stood?
For if he mislive in leudness and lust,
Little boots all the wealth and the trust. Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

The misliving Christian crucifies Christ again. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 16.

MISLU'CK.✻ n. s. [mis and luck.] Misfortune; bad luck.

Poor man! it was his misluck to marry that wicked wife. Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gr. (1623,) p. 301.

To MISMA'NAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.] To manage ill.

The debates of princes' councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism. Locke.

MISMA'NAGEMENT. n. s. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.

It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ. Locke.

The falls of favourites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true. Pope.

To MISMA'RK. v. a. [mis and mark.] To mark with the wrong token.

Things are mismarked in contemplation and life, for want of application or integrity. Collier on Human Reason.

To MISMA'TCH. v. a. [mis and match.] To match unsuitably.

What at my years forsaken! had I been
Ugly, or old, mismatch'd to my desires,
My natural defects had taught me,
To sit me down contented. Southern, Spart. Dame.

To MISNA'ME. v. a. [mis and name.] To call by the wrong name.

They make one man's fancies, or perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them as such to their succeeders, who are bold to misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy, presumption. Boyle on Colours.

MISNO'MER.† n. s. [French.] In law, a wrong name; by which an indictment, or any other act, may be vacated.

To MISOBSE'RVE. v. a. [mis and observe.] Not to observe accurately.

They understand it as early as they do language; and, if I misobserve not, they love to be treated as rational creatures sooner than is imagined. Locke on Education.

MISO'GAMIST. n. s. [μισῶ, and γάμος.] A marriage-hater.

MISO'GYNIST.* n. s. [μισῶ, to hate, and γυνὴ, a woman.] A woman-hater.

Junius, at the first, little better than a misogynist, was afterwards so altered from himself, that he successively married four wives. Fuller, Holy State, (1648,) p. 34.

The hardest task is to persuade the erroneous obstinate misogynist, or woman-hater, that any discourse acknowledging their worth can go beyond poetry. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 322.

MISO'GYNY. n. s. [μισῶ, and γυνὴ, Gr.] Hatred of women.

MISOPI'NION.* n. s. [mis and opinion.] Erroneous notion.

We are as apt as those, that see through a mist, to think them greater than they are: every fault is a crime, where misopinion is an heresy. Bp. Hall, Peacemaker.

To MISO'RDER. v. a. [mis and order.] To conduct ill; to manage irregularly.

If the child miss either in forgetting a word, or misordering the sentence, I would not have the master frown. Ascham.

Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they were young. Ascham.

The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

MISO'RDER. n. s. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.

When news was brought to Richard the Second, that his uncles, who sought to reform the misorders of his counsellors, were assembled in a wood near unto the court, merrily demanded of one Sir Hugh a Linne, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat distraught of his wits, what he would advise him to do? Issue out, quoth Sir Hugh, and slay them every mother's son; and when thou hast so done, thou hast killed all the faithful friends thou hast in England. Camden, Remains.

MISO'RDERLY.† adj. [from misorder.] Irregular; unlawful.

His overmuch fearing of you drives him to seek some misorderly shift, to be helped by some other book, or to be prompted by some other scholar. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Their own unruly and misorderly affections. Hales, Rem. p. 83.

To MISPE'L. v. a. [mis and spell.] To spell wrong.

To MISPE'ND. v. a. preterite and part. passive, mispent. [mis and spend.]

1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Let him now endeavour to redeem what he hath mispent by employing more of that leisure in this duty for the future. Wh. Duty of Man.

First guilty conscience does the mirrour bring,
Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting;
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long mispent luxurious life. Dryden.

If this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain,
And think a grave reply mispent and vain. Blackmore.

He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has mispent much has still a greater concern. Rogers.

Wise men retrieve, as far as they are able, every mispent or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.

2. To waste, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Now let the arched knife their thirsty limbs
Dissever, for the genial moisture due
To apples, otherwise mispends itself
In barren twigs. Philips.

MISPE'NDER. n. s. [from mispend.] One who spends ill or prodigally.

I suspect the excellency of those men's parts who are dissolute, and careless mispenders of their time. Norris.

MISPE'NSE.* n. s. [from mispend.] Waste; loss; ill employment.

Your riotous mispence had empaired your estate. Bp. Hall, Epist. (1608,) D 2. Ep. 10.

Since we find ourselves guilty of the sinfull mispense of our good hours, let us, whiles we have space, obtain of ourselves to be carefull of redeeming that precious time which we have lost. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 207.

To engage now in contest about them, may be reasonably deemed nothing more than a wilful mispense of our time, labour, and good humour, by vainly reciprocating the saw of endless contention. Barrow, vol. i. S. 29.

The mispence of our time, the wasting our talents, and the neglect of that immediate duty and worship we owe to Almighty God, are, I fear, matters which are seldom accounted for by us. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 178.

To MISPERSU'ADE.* v. a. [mis and persuade.] To bring to a wrong notion.

Shall we give sentence of death inevitable against all those fathers of the Greek church, which, being mispersuaded, died in the errour of free-will? Hooker, Disc. on Justification, p. 41.

So true we find it, by experience of all ages in the church of God, that the teacher's errour is the people's trial, harder and heavier so much to bear, as he is in worth and regard greater that mispersuadeth them. Hooker, Eccl. Pol. v. § 62.

The world's misbelieving or mispersuaded magnificoes. Loe, Bl. of Br. Beauty, p. 39.

MISPERSU'ASION.† n. s. [mis and persuasion.] Wrong notion; false opinion.

They looked upon us as men in mispersuasion and errour. Bp. Taylor, Epist. Pref. to his Συμβολον, (1657.)

Some mispersuasions concerning the Divine Attributes tend to the corrupting men's manners. Decay of Chr. Piety.

To MISPLA'CE. v. a. [mis and place.] To put in a wrong place.

I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd. Shakspeare.

What little arts govern the world! we need not
An armed enemy or corrupted friend,
When service but misplac'd, or love mistaken,
Performs the work. Denham, Sophy.

Is a man betrayed by such agents as he employs? He misplaced his confidence, took hypocrisy for fidelity, and so relied upon the services of a pack of villains. South.

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity; we, who could no way foresee the effect! Atterbury, Serm.

To MISPO'INT. v. a. [mis and point.] To confuse sentences by wrong punctuation.

To MISPRI'NT.* v. a. [mis and print.] To print wrong.

The case is mis-printed. Hale, H. P. C. P. ii. ch. 8.

MISPRI'NT.* n. s. [from the verb.] An errour of the press.

To MISPRI'SE. v. a. Sometimes it signifies mistaken, from the French verb mesprendre; sometimes undervalued or disdained, from the French verb mepriser. Hanmer. It is in both senses wholly obsolete.

1. To mistake.

You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood;
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

2. To slight; to scorn; to despise.

He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether misprised. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Pluck indignation on thy head;
By the misprising of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire. Shakspeare.

MISPRI'SION. n. s. [from misprise.]

1. Scorn; contempt. Not in use.

Here take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift!
That doth in vile misprision shackle up
My love, and her desert. Shakspeare.

2. Mistake; misconception. Not in use.

Thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid thy love juice on some true love's sight;
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true. Shakspeare.

We feel such or such a sentiment within us, and herein is no cheat or misprision; it is truly so, and our sense concludes nothing of its rise. Glanville, Scepsis.

3. [In common law.] It signifies neglect, negligence, or oversight. Misprision of treason is the concealment, or not disclosing, of known treason; for the which the offenders are to suffer imprisonment during the king's pleasure, lose their goods and the profits of their lands during their lives. Misprision of felony, is the letting any person, committed for treason or felony, or suspicion of either, to go before he be indicted. Cowel.

MISPROCE'EDING.* n. s. [mis and proceed.] Irregular proceeding.

All which errours and misproceedings they do fortify, and intrench, by an addicted respect to their own opinions.
Bacon on the Controv. of the Ch. of England.

To MISPROFE'SS.* v. a. [mis and profess.] To announce unjustly or falsely one's skill in any art or science, so as to invite employment.

Keep me back, O Lord, from them who misprofess arts of healing the soul, or the body, by means not imprinted by Thee in the church, or not in nature for the body.
Donne, Devot. (1624,) p. 86.

To MISPRONO'UNCE.* v. n. [mis and pronounce.] To speak inaccurately.

They made sport, and I laughed; they mispronounced, and I misliked; and, to make up the atticism, they were out, and I hissed. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

To MISPRONO'UNCE.* v. a. To pronounce improperly.

The Greeks, who knew little of this people who lived a great way from the sea, might easily mispronounce their name.
Patrick on Gen. x. 26.

To MISPROPO'RTION. v. a. [mis and proportion.] To join without due proportion.

MISPRO'UD. adj. [mis and proud.] Viciously proud. Obsolete.

Now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt,
Impairing Henry, strength'ning misproud York. Shakspeare.

To MISQUO'TE. v. a. [mis and quote.] To quote falsly.

Look how we can, or sad, or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To MISRA'TE.* v. a. [mis and rate.] To make a false estimate.

There is no way, in which we do not thus impose on ourselves, either assuming false, or misrating true advantages.
Barrow, vol. iii. S. 29.

MISRECI'TAL.* n. s. [from misrecite.] A wrong recital.

The court will take notice of the true statute, and will reject the misrecital as surplusage. Hale, H. P. C. P. ii. ch. 24.

To MISRECI'TE. v. a. [mis and recite.] To recite not according to the truth.

He misrecites the argument, and denies the consequence, which is clear. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

To MISRE'CKON. v. a. [mis and reckon.] To reckon wrong; to compute wrong.

Whoever finds a mistake in the sum total, must allow himself out, though after repeated trials he may not see in which article he has misreckoned. Swift.

To MISRELA'TE. v. a. [mis and relate.] To relate inaccurately or falsly.

To satisfy me that he misrelated not the experiment, he brought two or three small pipes of glass, which gave me the opportunity of trying it. Boyle.

MISRELA'TION. n. s. [from misrelate.] False or inaccurate narrative.

Mine aim was only to press home those things in writing, which had been agitated between us by word of mouth; a course much to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being less subject to mistakes and misrelations, and wherein paralogisms are more quickly detected. Bp. Bramhall.

To MISREME'MBER. v. a. [mis and remember.] To mistake by trusting to memory.

If I much misremember not, I had such a spirit from peas kept long enough to lose their verdure. Boyle.

To MISREPO'RT. v. a. [mis and report.] To give a false account of; to give an account disadvantageous and false.

His doctrine was misreported, as though he had every where preached this, not only concerning the Gentiles, but also touching the Jews. Hooker.

A man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace. Shakspeare.

The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often fasten on the worst side, lies in misreporting upon the various comparisons of these. Locke.

MISREPO'RT. n. s. [from the verb.] False account; false and malicious representation.

We defend him not,
Only desire to know his crime; 'tis possible
It may be some mistake or misreport,
Some false suggestion, or malicious scandal. Denham.

As by flattery a man is usually brought to open his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction, and a slanderous misreport of persons, he is often brought to shut the same even to his best and truest friends. South, Serm.

To MISREPRESE'NT.† v. a. [mis and represent.] To represent not as it is; to falsify to disadvantage: mis often signifies not only errour, but malice or mischief.

See how he lies at random, carelessly diffus'd, —
In slavish habit, ill-fitted weeds
O'er-worn and soil'd;
Or do my eyes misrepresent? Milton, S. A.

Two qualities necessary to a reader before his judgment should be allowed are, common honesty and common sense; and that no man could have misrepresented that paragraph, unless he were utterly destitute of one or both. Swift.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs of some facts, and so easy to forget the circumstances of others, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious and inquisitive heads, who proceed altogether upon conjectures. Swift.

MISREPRESENTA'TION. n. s. [from misrepresent.]

1. The act of misrepresenting.

They have prevailed by misrepresentations, and other artifices, to make the successor look upon them as the only persons he can trust. Swift.

2. Account maliciously false.

Since I have shewn him his foul mistakes and injurious misrepresentations, it will become him publickly to own and retract them. Atterbury.

MISREPRESE'NTER.* n. s. [from misrepresent.] One who represents things not as they are.

An empty misrepresenter of our antiquities, histories, and records. Bp. Nicolson to Dr. Kennet, Ep. Corr. i. 262.

MISRU'LE.† n. s. [mis and rule.] Tumult; confusion; revel; unjust domination.

The wilde heades of the parishe, conventynge together, chuse them a grand capitaine (of mischeef) whom they innoble with the title of my lorde of misserule.
Stubbes, Anat. of Abuses, (1585,) fol. 92. b.

This lord of misrule in their compotations, or drunken meetings, was called " modiperator."
Hakewill on Providence, p. 363.

In the portal plac'd, the heav'n-born maid,
Enormous riot and misrule survey'd. Pope.
And through his airy hall the loud misrule
Of driving tempest, is for ever heard. Thomson.

MISRU'LY.* adj. [from misrule.] Unruly; turbulent.

And curb the raunge of his misruly tongue.
Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

MISS.† n. s. [contracted from mistress. Bailey, and Dr. Johnson. — It may perhaps be a contraction of the Teut. meyssen, i. e. meydsen, a girl.]

1. The term of honour to a young girl. Dr. Johnson. — Miss, at the beginning of the last century, was appropriated to the daughters of gentlemen under the age of ten, or given opprobriously to young gentlewomen reproachable for the giddiness or irregularity of their conduct. See Notes on Steele's Ep. Correspond. i. 92. Mistress was then the style of grown up unmarried ladies, though the mother was living; and, for a considerable part of the century, maintained its ground against the infantine term of miss.

Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are great impediments to the diversions of the servants. Swift.

2. A strumpet; a concubine; a whore; a prostitute.

All women would be of one piece,
The virtuous matron and the miss. Hudibras.
This gentle cock, for solace of his life,
Six misses had besides his lawful wife. Dryden.

To MISS. v. a. [missen, Dutch and German.] Missed preter. missed or mist part.

1. Not to hit by the mind; to mistake.

To heaven their prayers
Flew up, nor miss'd the way. Milton, P. L.
Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn
By this new-felt attraction, and instinct. Milton, P. L.

2. Not to hit by manual aim.

The life you boasted to your javelin given,
Prince, you have miss'd. Pope.

3. To fail of obtaining.

If she desired above all things to have Orgalus, Orgalus feared nothing but to miss Parthenia. Sidney.

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that, which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Where shall a maid's distracted heart find rest,
If she can miss it in her lover's breast? Dryden.

When a man misses his great end, happiness, he will acknowledge he judged not right. Locke.

4. To discover something to be unexpectedly wanting.

Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I missed him. Sidney.

In vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed. 1 Sam. xxv. 21.

5. To be without.

We cannot miss him; he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood. Shakspeare, Tempest.

6. To omit.

He that is so tender of himself, that he can never find in his heart so much as to miss a meal, by way of punishment for his faults, shews he is not much fallen out with himself.
Wh. Duty of Man.

She would never miss one day,
A walk so fine, a sight so gay. Prior.

7. To perceive want of.

My redoubl'd love and care,
May ever tend about thee to old age
With all things grateful cheer'd, and so supply'd,
That what by me thou hast lost thou least shalt miss.
Milton, S. A.

He who has a firm, sincere friend, may want all the rest without missing them. South.

To MISS.† v. n.

1. To fly wide; not to hit.

Flying bullets now
To execute his rage, appear too slow,
They miss or sweep but common souls away. Waller.

2. Not to succeed.

The general root of superstition is, that men observe when things hit, and not when they miss; and commit to memory the one, and forget and pass over the other. Bacon.

3. To fail; to mistake.

Emongst the angels, a whole legione
Of wicked sprites did fall from happy blis;
What wonder then if one, of women all, did mis?
Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 2.

4. To be lost; to be wanting.

My lord,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Thy shepherds we hurt not, neither was there ought missing unto them. 1 Sam. xxv. 7.

For a time caught up to God, as once
Moses was in the mount, and missing long,
And the great Thisbite, who on fiery wheels
Rode up to heaven, yet once again to come. Milton, P. R.

5. To miscarry; to fail; as by accident.

The invention all admir'd, and each, how he
To be the inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd,
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton, P. L.

Grittus missing of the Moldavian fell upon Maylat. Knolles.

6. To fail to obtain, learn, or find: sometimes with of before the object.

The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them. Atterbury, Serm.

Miss.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Loss; want.

> I could have better spar'd a better man.
> Oh, I should have a heavy miss of thee,
> If I were much in love with vanity. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

If these papers have that evidence in them, there will be no great miss of those which are lost, and my reader may be satisfied without them. Locke.

2. Mistake; errour. [missa, Gothick; miſ, Sax.]

O rakel hond, to do so foule a mis! Chaucer, Mancip. Tale.

He did without any great miss in the hardest points of grammar. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

> Amends for misse he now will make.
> Preston, Trag. of K. Cambises.

> I found my miss, struck hands, and pray'd him tell
> (To hold acquaintance still) where he did dwell.
> Donne, Poems, p. 95.

3. Hurt; harm. Obsolete.

> In humble dales is footing fast,
> The trode is not so tickle,
> And though one fall through heedless haste,
> Yet is his misse not mickle. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

Mi'ssal. n. s. [missale, Lat. missel, Fr.] The mass book.

To Missa'y. v. n. [mis and say.]

1. To speak ill of; to censure. Obsolete.

> Their ill haviour garres men missay,
> Both of their doctrine and their fay. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

2. To say wrong.

> Diggon Davie, I bid her god day,
> Or diggon her is, or I missay. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

We are not dwarfs, but of equal stature, if Vives missay not. Hakewill on Providence.

To Missa'y. v. a.

1. To censure; to slander; to speak ill of.

> Was never wight missaid of here.
> Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1260.

2. To utter amiss.

> Pray for us there,
> That what they have misdone,
> Or missaid, we to that may not adhere. Donne, Poems, p. 341.

Missa'ying.* n. s. [mis and saying.] Improper expression; bad words.

It being the proper scope of this work in hand, not to rip up and relate the misdoings of his whole life, but to answer only and refute the missayings of his book Milton, Eicon. Pref.

To Misse'em. v. n. [mis and seem.]

1. To make false appearance.

> Foul Duessa meet,
> Who with her witchcraft and misseeming sweet
> Inveigled her to follow her desires unmeet. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To misbecome. Obsolete both.

Never knight I saw in such misseeming plight. Spenser, F. Q.

Mi'ssel-bird.* n. s. A kind of thrush; the misseldine thrush.

Mi'sseldine.* n. s. Another name of the misseltoe or mistletoe. Phillips.

They bruise the berries of misselden first, and then wash them, and afterwards seeth them in water; whereof birdlime is made. Barret, Alv. (1580.)

Mi'sseltoe.* See Mistletoe.

To Misse'rve.† v. a. [mis and serve.] To serve unfaithfully; to serve dishonestly.

You shall enquire whether the good statute be observed, whereby a man may have that he thinketh he hath, and not be abused or misserved in that he buys.
Bacon, Charge at the Sessions of the Verge.

Great men, who misserved their country, were fined very highly. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To Missha'pe. v. a. part. misshaped and misshapen. [mis and shape.]

1. To shape ill; to form ill; to deform.

A rude misshapen, monstruous rabblement. Spenser, F. Q.

> His monstruous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
> And that misformed shape, misshaped more. Spenser, F. Q.

> Whom then she does transform to monstrous [illegible]
> And horribly misshapes with ugly sights,
> Captiv'd eternally in iron mews. Spenser, F. Q.

> Let the misshaped trunk that bears this head
> Be round impaled with a glorious crown. Shakspeare.

Pride will have a fall: the beautiful trees go all to the wreck here, and only the misshapen and despicable dwarf is left standing. L'[illegible]

> Pluto hates his own misshapen race,
> Her sister furies fly her hideous face.

They make bold to destroy ill-formed and [illegible] tions. Locke.

The Alps broken into so many steps and precipices, form one of the most irregular, misshapen scenes in the world. Addison.

We ought not to believe that the banks of the ocean are really deformed, because they have not the form of a regular bulwark; nor that the mountains are misshapen, because they are not exact pyramids or cones. Bentley, Serm.

> Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear
> Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
> Which but proportion'd to their site or place,
> Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.

2. In Shakspeare, perhaps, it once signifies ill directed: as, to shape a course.

> Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
> Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
> Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask,
> I set on fire. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Mi'ssile. adj. [missilis, Latin.] Thrown by the hand; striking at distance.

We bend the bow, or wing the missile dart. Pope.

MI'SSION. n. s. [missio, Latin.]

1. Commission; the state of being sent by supreme authority.

> Her son tracing the desart wild,
> All his great work to come before him set,
> How to begin, how to accomplish best,
> His end of being on earth, and mission high. Milton, P. R.

The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, are publickly disputed and denied. Atterbury.

2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.

In these ships there should be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. Bacon, New Atlantis.

3. Dismission; discharge. Not in use.

In Cæsar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires; whereupon with one cry they asked mission.
Bacon, Apophthegms.

4. Faction; party. Not in use.

> Glorious deeds, in these fields of late,
> Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
> And drove great Mars to faction. Shakspeare.

Mi'ssionary.† } Mi'ssioner. } n. s. [missionaire, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Our word at first was missioner; of which the earliest example, given by Dr. Johnson, is from Dryden. Dryden, however, adopted also the French form missionaire; and thus, in the original edition of the Hind and Panther, writes, "these the missionaires our zeal has made," 4to. 1687, p. 63. Soon afterwards missionary became the word.] One sent to propagate religion.

The missioners of [illegible] seek to establish this practice in all places where they [illegible]. W. Montague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 94.

You mention the presbyterian missionary, who hath been persecuted for his religion. Swift.

I desire our young missionaries from the university to consider where they are, and not dress, and look, and move, like young officers. Tatler, No. 270.

Like mighty missioner you come,
Ad partes infidelium. Dryden, Ep. to Sir G. Etheredge.

MI'SSIVE.† adj. [missive, French.]

1. Such as is sent.

The king grants a licence under the great seal called a congé d'elire, to elect the person he has nominated by his letters missive. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. Used at distance.

In vain with darts a distant war they try,
Short, and more short, the missive weapons fly. Dryden.

Ink is the great missive weapon in all battles of the learned. Swift, Battle of the Books.

MI'SSIVE. n. s. [French.]

1. A letter sent: it is retained in Scotland in that sense.

Great aids came in to him; partly upon missives, and partly voluntary from many parts. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. A messenger. Both obsolete.

Rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters; and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shakspeare.

Whiles I stood wrapt in the wonder of it, came missives from the king, who all-hailed me thane of Cawder. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To MISSPE'AK. v. a. [mis and speak.] To speak wrong.

Then as a mother which delights to hear
Her early child misspeak half-utter'd words.
Donne, Poems, p. 177.

To MISSPE'AK. v. n. To blunder in speaking.

It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard.
Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again. Shakspeare, K. John.

MIST.† n. s. [mıꞅꞇ, Saxon; mist, Icel. caligo; mıꞅꞇıan, caligare, Saxon.]

1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
To us discovers day from far;
His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd,
Which our dark nation long involv'd. Denham.

And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Roscommon.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew.

But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
And night with sable shades involves his head. Dryden.

A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.

My people's eyes once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are misled into the most desperate actions. King Charles.

His passion cast a mist before his sense,
And either made or magnify'd th' offence. Dryden.

To MIST.† v. a. [mıꞅꞇıan, Saxon.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.

Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

An ineffectual laziness is the seminary both of vice and ignorance; it clouds the metalled mind, it mists the wit, and choaks pretence to science. Felltham, Res. ii. 49.

To MISTA'KE. v. a. [mis and take.]

1. To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.

These did apprehend a great affinity between their invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other. Stillingfleet.

This will make the reader very much mistake and misunderstand his meaning. Locke.

Fancy passes for knowledge, and what is prettily said is mistaken for solid. Locke.

Fools into the notion fall,
That vice or virtue there is none at all:
Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain,
'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain. Pope.

To MISTA'KE. v. n. To err; not to judge right.

Seeing God found folly in his angels; men's judgements, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green. Locke.

Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding, among friends. Swift.

MISTA'EN. pret. and part. pass. of mistake for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.

This dagger hath mista'en, for lo! the sheath
Lies empty on the back of Mountague,
The point missheathed in my daughter's bosom. Shakspeare.

To be MISTA'KEN. To err. [To mistake has a kind of reciprocal sense; I mistake, "je me trompe." I am mistaken, means I misconceive, I am in an errour; more frequently than I am ill understood; but, my opinion is mistaken, means my opinion is not rightly understood.]

The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering, for fear of being mistaken. Sidney.

England is so idly king'd:
— You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question, your grace, the late ambassadors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke. Waller.

MISTA'KE. n. s. [from the verb.] Misconception; errour.

He never shall find out fit mate; but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake. Milton, S. A.

Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tillotson.

Those terrors are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or superstitious mistakes about it. Bentley.

MISTA'KEABLE. adj. [from mistake.] Liable to be conceived wrong.

It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakeable numbers. Brown.

MISTA'KENLY.* adv. [from mistake.] In a mistaken sense.

We find the studious animated with a strong passion for the great virtues, as they are mistakenly called, and utterly forgetful of the ordinary ones. Goldsmith, Ess. 6.

MISTA'KER.* n. s. [from mistake.] One who conceives wrong; one who judges not right.

I know there is ill use made of our charity this way, by those willing mistakers who turn it to our disadvantage. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 408.

MISTA'KING.* n. s. Errour.

I have done thee worthy service,
Told thee no lies, made no mistakings. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The perils of these mistakings. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 280.

MISTA'KINGLY. adv. [from mistaking.] Erroneously; falsely.

The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.

To MISTA'TE. v. a. [mis and state.] To state wrong.

They mistate the question when they talk of pressing ceremonies. Bp. Sanderson.

MISTA'TEMENT.* n. s. [from mistate.] A wrong statement.

There is in this passage a mistatement of important circumstances. Burgess on the Div. of Christ, p. 39.

MI'STILY.* adv. [from misty.] Darkly; obscurely; not plainly.

These philosophers speke so mistily,
In this craft, that men cannot come thereby.
Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

To MISTI'ME.† v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.

How often is a hasty and unguarded expression, an incautious and mistimed reproof, or an inconsiderable and accidental trespass, aggravated and blown up into a lasting variance and hatred! Killingbeck, Serm. p. 63.

To MISTI'ME.* v. n. To neglect proper time.

Idleness; ill husbandry, in mis-timing; neglect of meet helps. Remarkable Sermons (1644,) p. 25.

MI'STINESS. n. s. [from misty.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.

The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, which doth not at all detain or imbibe the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon.

MI'STION.† n. s. [mistion, Fr. Cotgrave; from mistus, Latin.] The state of being mingled.

In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mistion; and, though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon disunion. Brown.

Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mistion, produce colour. Boyle on Colours.

To MI'STLE.* See To MISLE.

MISTLETO'E n. s. [mıꞅteltan, Saxon; mistil, Danish, birdlime, and tan, a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bason, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry, full of a glutinous substance, including a plain heart-shaped seed; this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a super-plant, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without seed. The manner of its propagation is as follows: the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree; for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this viscous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Miller.

If snowe do continue, sheepe hardly that fare
Crave mistle and ivie for them for to spare. Tusser.
A barren and detested vale you see it is:
The trees, though Summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss and baleful misselto. Shakspeare.

Misseltoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks; the misseltoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green Winter and Summer, and beareth a white glistering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.

All your temples strow
With laurel green, and sacred misletoe. Gay, Trivia.

MI'STLIKE. adj. [mist and like.] Resembling a mist.

Good Romeo, hide thyself.
— Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans,
Mistlike, infold me from the search of eyes. Shakspeare.

MISTO'LD. particip. pass. of mistell.

MI'XTURE. † n. s. [mixture, old French; mixtura, Latin.]

1. The act of mixing; the state of being mixed.

O happy mixture, wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as well as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us! Hooker.

Those liquors are expelled out of the body which, by their mixture, convert the aliment into an animal liquid. Arbuthnot.

I, by baleful furies led,
With monstrous mixture stain'd my mother's bed. Pope.

2. A mass formed by mingled ingredients.

Come vial — What if this mixture do not work at all? Shakspeare.

While we live in this world, where good and bad men are blended together, and where there is also a mixture of good and evil wisely distributed by God, to serve the ends of his providence. Atterbury, Serm.

3. That which is added and mixed.

Neither can God himself be otherwise understood, than as a mind free and disentangled from all corporeal mixtures, perceiving and moving all things. Stillingfleet.

Cicero doubts whether it were possible for a community to exist, that had not a prevailing mixture of piety in its constitution. Addison, Freeholder.

MI'ZMAZE. † n. s. [A cant word, formed from maze by reduplication.] A maze; a labyrinth.

He hath walked us through the whole labyrinth and mizmaze of this life, shewing us the knowledge of using it well. Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 69.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books, and the clue to lead them through the mizmaze of variety of opinions and authors to truth. Locke.

MI'ZZEN. n. s. [mezaen, Dutch.]

The mizzen is a mast in the stern or back part of a ship: in some large ships there are two such masts, that standing next the main mast is called the main mizzen, and the other near the poop the bonaventure mizzen: the length of a mizzen mast is half that of the main mast, or the same with that of the maintop mast from the quarterdeck, and the length of the mizzen topmast is half that. Bailey.

A commander at sea had his leg fractured by the fall of his mizzen topmast. Wiseman, Surgery.

To MI'ZZLE. * v. n. To rain small rain. See To MISLE, and MEAZLING.

Now ginnes to mizzle; hye we homeward fast. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov.

MI'ZZY. n. s. A bog; a quagmire. Ainsworth.

MNEMO'NICAL. * } adj. [from mnemonicks.] Assisting
MNEMO'NICK. } memory: as mnemonick tables.

Mr. Beal's offer of sending to the society — Caleb Morley's mnemonical scrolls, together with his explication, was accepted of. Hist. Royal Soc. i. 234

MNEMO'NICKS. n. s. [μνημονικὴ.] The act of memory.

MO. adj. [ma, Saxon; mae, Scottish.] Making greater number; more. Obsolete.

Calliope and muses mo,
Soon as your oaken pipe begins to sound
Their ivory lutes lay by. Spenser.
With oxbows and oxyokes, with other things mo,
For oxteem and horseteem in plough for to go. Tusser.

MO. adv. Further; longer. Obsolete.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer was first leafy. Shakspeare.

To MOAN. † v. a. [from mænan, Saxon, to grieve. Anciently written mane or mene; like the Saxon original.] To lament; to deplore.

Edward sore it ment. R. of Brunne, p. 255.

Ye floods, ye woods, ye echoes, moan
My dear Columbo dead and gone. Prior.

To MOAN. † v. n. To grieve; to make lamentation. In the following passage from Shakspeare, the old copies read means, the same as moans. See the etymology of the verb active.

Thus she moans:
Asleep, my love?
What, dead, my dove? Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.
The gen'rous band redressive search'd
Into the horrours of the gloomy jail,
Unpity'd and unheard, where misery moans. Thomson.

MOAN. n. s. [from the verb.] Lamentation; audible sorrow; grief expressed in words or cries.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
The fresh stream ran by her, and murmur'd her moans;
The salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones. Shakspeare.

Sullen moans,
Hollow groans,
And cries of tortur'd ghosts. Pope, Ode St. Cecilia.

MO'ANFUL. * adj. [moan and full.] Lamentable; expressing sorrow; exciting sorrow.

Look upon all the sad moanful objects in the world, betwixt whom all our compassion is wont to be divided. Hammond, Works, iv. 580.

MO'ANFULLY. * adv. [from moanful.] With lamentation.

This our poets are ever moanfully singing. Barrow on Contentm. (ed. 1685,) p. 135.

MOAT. n. s. [motte, French, a mound; mota, low Latin.] A canal of water round a house or castle for defence.

The castle I found of good strength, having a great moat round about it, the work of a noble gentleman, of whose unthrifty son he had bought it. Sidney.

The fortress thrice himself in person storm'd;
Your valour bravely did th' assault sustain,
And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.
No walls were yet, nor fence, nor mote, nor mound,
Nor drum was heard. Dryden, Ovid.

To MOAT. v. a. [motter, French, from the noun.] To surround with canals by way of defence.

I will presently to St. Luke's; there at the moated Grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

An arm of Lethe, with a gentle flow,
The palace moats, and o'er the pebbles creeps,
And with soft murmurs calls the coming sleeps. Dryden.

He sees he can hardly approach greatness, but, as a moated castle, he must first pass the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden.

MOB. † n. s. [contracted from mobile, Latin. Mr. Malone believes the word mobile to have been first introduced into our language about 1690, and to have been soon abbreviated into mob. T. Brown, he says, in 1690, uses both the Latin word at length, and the abbreviation; and in the preface to Cleomenes, two years afterwards, Dryden uses mob with a kind of apology. Note on Dryden's Pref. to Don Sebastian. Mobile, however, had certainly been in use long before 1690, as the examples from South and L'Estrange prove. The rabble which attended the partisans of the earl of Shaftesbury, at the latter end of Charles the Second's reign, are said by Mr. Tollet to have been first called "mobile vulgus," and afterwards by contraction the mob; and ever since the word mob has become proper English.] The croud; a tumultuous rout.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawber; a very monster in a Bartholomew-fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden.

Dreams are but interludes, which fancy makes,
When monarch reason sleeps, this mimick wakes:
Compounds a medley of disjointed things,
A court of coblers, and a mob of kings. Dryden.

A cluster of mob were making themselves merry with their betters. Addison, Freeholder.

MOB.† n. s. [from moble. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the verb mob, of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice in this sense.] A kind of female undress for the head.

The ordinary morning head-dress of ladies continued to be distinguished by the name of mab, to almost the end of the reign of George the Second. Malone, Note on Hamlet.

In the counties of Essex and Middlesex, this morning cap has always been called a mob, and not a mab. Steevens, Note on Hamlet.

To MOB.* v. a. [adopted perhaps from mab, to dress carelessly; of which the etymology is uncertain.] To wrap up, as in a veil or cowl; hence the mob-cap of women.

Swarms of men that — went gossipping up and down, telling odd stories to the people, as old wives and nurses do to children, having most of them chins as smooth as women's, and their faces mob'd in hoods and long coats like petticoats. More on the Seven Churches, (1669,) Pref. b. 2.

To MOB. v. a. [from the noun.] To harass, or overbear by tumult.

MO'BBISH.† adj. [from mob.] Mean; done after the manner of the mob.

The procession was closed by ten or a dozen people, seemingly officers of distinction, who were attended by another party of the mobbish horsemen. Drummond, Trav. (L. 1744,) p. 119.

Mr. Fox treated the associations for prosecuting these libels, as tending to prevent the improvement of the human mind, and as a mobbish tyranny. Burke, Obs. on the Cond. of the Minority, (1793.)

MO'BBY. n. s. An American drink made of potatoes.

MO'BILE. n. s. [mobile, Lat.] The populace; the rout; the mob.

Long experience has found it true of the unthinking mobile, that the closer they shut their eyes the wider they open their hands. South, Serm.

The mobile are uneasy without a ruler, they are restless with one. L'Estrange.

MO'BILE.* adj. [mobile, French.] Movable. Obsolete.

To tieate of any star
Fyxt or else mobil. Skelton, Poems, p. 156.

MOBI'LITY. n. s. [mobilité, French; mobilitas, Lat.]

1. Mobility is the power of being moved. Locke.

A rod or bar of iron, having stood long in a window, or elsewhere, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, or in any other kind of liquid substance, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of unquietude. Wotton on Education.

The present age hath attempted perpetual motions, whose revolutions might out-last the exemplary mobility, and outmeasure time itself. Brown, Vulg. Err.

You tell, it is ingenite, active force,
Mobility, or native power to move
Words, which mean nothing. Blackmore.

2. Nimbleness; activity.

The Romans had the advantage by the bulk of their ships, and the fleet of Antiochus in the swiftness and mobility of theirs, which served them in great stead in the flight. Arbuthnot.

3. [In cant language.] The populace.

She singled you out with her eye as commander in chief of the mobility. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

4. Fickleness; inconstancy. Ainsworth.

To MO'BLE.† v. a. [sometimes written mable, perhaps by a ludicrous allusion to the French je m' habille. Dr. Johnson. — Or from the provincial word mab, whence perhaps to mob, a verb hitherto overlooked.] To wrap up, as in a hood.

But who, ah woe! hath seen the mobled queen, —
Run barefoot up and down. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The moon does mobble up herself. Shirley, Gentleman of Venice.

MO'CHO-STONE. n. s. [from Mocha, therefore more properly Mocha-stone.]

Mocho-stones are related to the agat, of a clear horny grey, with declinations representing mosses, shrubs, and branches, black, brown, red, in the substance of the stone. Woodward.

To MOCK.† v. a. [mocquer, French; moccio, Welsh: μωκῶ, μωκῶμαι, Greek.]

1. To deride; to laugh at; to ridicule.

All the regions
Do seemingly revolt; and who resist
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Many thousand widows
Shall this his mock, mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down. Shakspeare.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor. Shakspeare.

I am as one mocked of his neighbour; the just, upright man is mocked to scorn. Job, xii. 4.

2. To deride by imitation; to mimick in contempt.

I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,
For mocking marriage with a dame of France. Shakspeare.

3. To defeat; to elude.

My father is gone into his grave,
And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

4. To fool; to tantalize; to play on contemptuously.

He will not
Mock us with his blest sight, then snatch him hence,
Soon we shall see our hope return. Milton, P. R.

Why do I overlive?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain? Milton, P. L.

Heav'n's fuller influence mocks our dazzl'd sight,
Too great its brightness, and too strong its light. Prior.

To MOCK. v. n. To make contemptuous sport.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form. Shakspeare.

A stallion horse is as a mocking friend; he neigheth under every one. Ecclus. xxiii. 6.

When thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed? Job.

MOCK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Ridicule; act of contempt; fleer; sneer; gibe; flirt.

Tell the pleasant prince this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Oh, 'tis the spight of hell, the fiend's arch mock,
To lip a wanton, and suppose her chaste. Shakspeare.

Fools make a mock at sin. Prov. xiv. 9.

What shall be the portion of those who have affronted God, derided his word, and made a mock of every thing that is sacred? Tillotson.

Colin makes mock at all her piteous smart,
A lass that Cic'ly hight, had won his heart. Gay.

2. Imitation; mimickry.

Now reach a strain, my lute,
Above her mock, or be for ever mute. Crashaw.

MOCK. adj. False; counterfeit; not real.

The mock astrologer, El astrologo fingido. Dryden.

That superiour greatness and mock majesty, which is ascribed to the prince of fallen angels, is admirably preserved. Spectator.

MOCK-PRIVET. } n. s. Plants. Ainsworth.
MOCK-WILLOW. }

MO'CKABLE. adj. [from mock.] Exposed to derision.

Those that are good manners at the court, are as ridiculous in the country, as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at the court. Shakspeare, As you like it.

MO'CKAGE.* n. s. [from mock.] Mockery. Not now in use.

Most commonly it is used in mockage.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol 160. b.

A mere mockage, a counterfeit charm, to no purpose.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 721.

MO'CKEL.† adj. [The same with mickle. See MICKLE. This word is variously written mickle, mickel, mochil, mochel, muckle. Dr. Johnson.— Dr. Johnson here cites an example from Spenser, in which the word is not mockel, but mochel. Of mockel I have never met with any instance.] Much; many.

MO'CKER. n. s. [from mock.]

1. One who mocks; a scorner; a scoffer; a derider.

Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. Shakspeare.

Let them have a care how they intrude upon so great and holy an ordinance, in which God is so seldom mocked but it is to the mocker's confusion. South, Serm.

2. A deceiver; an elusory impostor.

MO'CKERY. n. s. [mocquerie, French.]

1. Derision; scorn; sportive insult.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen,
The laughing-stock of fortune's mockeries,
Am the only daughter of a king and queen. Spenser, F. Q.

Why should publick mockery in print be a better test of truth than severe railing sarcasms? Watts.

Grace at meals is now generally so performed as to look more like a mockery upon devotion, than any solemn application of the mind unto God. Law.

2. Ridicule; contemptuous merriment.

A new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery; an art of contradiction by way of scorn, wherewith we were long sithence forewarned. Hooker.

3. Sport; subject of laughter.

What cannot be preserv'd when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes. Shakspeare, Othello.

Of the holy place they made a mockery. 2 Mac. viii. 17.

4. Vanity of attempt; delusory labour; vain effort.

It is as the air, invulnerable;
And our vain blows malicious mockery. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

5. Imitation; counterfeit appearance; vain show.

To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakspeare.

What though no friends in sable weeds appear,
Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
And bear about the mockery of woe
To midnight dances. Pope, Miscel.

MO'CKING.* n. s. [from mock.] Scorn; derision; insult.

Therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries. Ezek. xxii. 4.

MO'CKINGLY.† adv. [from mock.] In contempt; petulantly; with insult; by mocking. Huloet.

MO'DAL. adj. [modale, French; modalis, Latin.] Relating to the form or mode, not the essence.

When we speak of faculties of the soul, we assert not with the schools their real distinction from it, but only a modal diversity. Glanville, Scepsis.

MODA'LITY. n. s. [from modal.] Accidental difference; modal accident.

The motions of the mouth, by which the voice is discriminated, are the natural elements of speech; and the application of them in their several compositions, or words made of them, to signify things, or the modalities of things, and so to serve for communication of notions, is artificial. Holder.

MO'DDER.* n. s. [moer, Danish, a girl; modde, moddeken, Teut. the same. See MAUTHER.] A wench, or girl. Huloet, and Sherwood. Yet used in some counties; as in Norfolk and Suffolk, according to Grose; and also applied, he says, to some female animals.

MODE.† n. s. [mode, French; modus, Latin. This word seems to have been little used before the middle of the seventeenth century. For P. Heylin calls it, in 1656, new and uncouth.]

1. External variety; accidental discrimination; accident.

A mode is that which cannot subsist in and of itself, but is always esteemed as belonging to and subsisting by, the help of some substance, which, for that reason, is called its subject.
Watts, Logick.

Few allow mode to be called a being in the same perfect sense as a substance is, and some modes have evidently more of real entity than others. Watts, Logick.

2. Gradation; degree.

What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam;
Of smell, the headlong lioness between,
And hound sagacious, on the tainted green. Pope.

3. Manner; method; form; fashion.

Our Saviour beheld
A table richly spread in regal mode,
With dishes pil'd. Milton, P. R.

The duty itself being resolved upon, the mode of doing it may easily be found. Bp. Taylor, Guide to a Penitent.

4. State; quality.

My death
Changes the mode; for what in me was purchas'd,
Falls upon thee in a much fairer sort,
For thou the garland wear'st successively. Shakspeare.

5. Fashion; custom.

There are certain garbs and modes of speaking, which vary with the times, the fashion of our clothes being not more subject to alteration than that of our speech. Denham.

We are to prefer the blessings of Providence before the splendid curiosities of mode and imagination. L'Estrange.

invited from all parts; and the favour of learning was ... our and mode of the age. Temple.

As ... on coins the different faces of persons, we see too ... different habits and dresses, according to the mode that prevailed. Addison on Medals.

Though wrong the mode, comply; more sense is shewn
In wearing others' follies than your own. Young.
If faith itself has different dresses worn,
What wonder modes in wit should take their turn. Pope.

6. A kind of thin silk, worn by ladies.

MO'DEL. n. s. [modelle, French; modulus, Latin.]

1. A representation in little of something made or done.

I'll draw the form and model of our battle;
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small strength. Shakspeare.

You have the models of several ancient temples, though the temples and the gods are perished. Addison.

2. A copy to be imitated.

A fault it would be if some king should build his mansion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker.

They cannot see sin in those means they use, with intent to reform to their models what they call religion. King Charles.

3. A mould; any thing which shows or gives the shape of that which it incloses.

Nothing can we call our own but death;
And that small model of the barren earth,
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

4. Standard; that by which any thing is measured.

As he who presumes steps into the throne of God, so he that despairs measures Providence by his own little contracted model. South.

5. In Shakspeare it seems to have two unexampled senses. Something representative.

I have commended to his goodness
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter. Shakspeare.

6. Something small and diminutive; for module, a small measure: which, perhaps, is likewise the meaning of the example affixed to the third sense.

England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart. Shakspeare.

To MO'DEL. v. a. [modeler, French.] To plan; to shape; to mould; to form; to delineate.

When they come to model heaven
And calculate the stars, how they will wield
The mighty frame. Milton, P. L.

The government is modelled after the same manner with that of the Cantons, as much as so small a community can imitate those of so large an extent. Addison on Italy.

MO'DELLER. n. s. [from model.] Planner; schemer; contriver.

Our great modellers of gardens have their magazines of plants to dispose of. Spectator.

MO'DERATE. adj. [moderatus, Latin; modéré, French.]

1. Temperate; not excessive.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating, but pangs of the belly are with an insatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.

2. Not hot of temper.

A number of moderate members managed with so much art as to obtain a majority, in a thin house, for passing a vote, that the king's concessions were a ground for a future settlement. Swift.

Fix'd to one part, but mod'rate to the rest. Pope.

3. Not luxurious; not expensive.

There's not so much left as to furnish out
A moderate table. Shakspeare, Timon.

4. Not extreme in opinion; not sanguine in a tenet.

There are tenets which the moderatest of the Romanists will not venture to affirm. Smalridge.

5. Placed between extremes; holding the mean.

Quietly consider the trial that hath been thus long had of both kinds of reformation; as well this moderate kind, which the church of England hath taken, as that other more extreme and rigorous, which certain churches elsewhere have better liked. Hooker.

6. Of the middle rate.

More moderate gifts might have prolong'd his date,
Too early fitted for a better state. Dryden.

To MO'DERATE.† v. a. [moderor, Latin; modérer, French.]

1. To regulate; to restrain; to still; to pacify; to quiet; to repress.

With equal measure she did moderate
The strong extremities of their rage. Spenser.

Masters, do the same things unto them, forbearing [in the margin, moderating] threatening. Ephes. vi. 9.

2. To make temperate; to qualify.

He moderated so his mete and his drinke, that he was at noo tyme fatter nor leener.
Ld. Rivers, Dictes and Sayings of the Philos. (1477,) B. vi. b.

Ye swarthy nations of the torrid zone,
How well to you is this great bounty known?
For frequent gales from the wide ocean rise
To fan your air, and moderate your skies. Blackmore.

By its astringent quality it moderates the relaxing quality of warm water. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To decide as a moderator.

It passeth mine ability to moderate the question.
Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

To MO'DERATE.* v. n. To preside in a disputation, and regulate the controversy.

Some time after the year 1650, Dr. Barlow [was] engaged by Dr. Langbain, the provost of Queen's college in Oxford, to moderate for him in the divinity-disputations.
Note in Bp. Barlow's Rem. (1693,) p. 567.

MO'DERATELY.† adv. [from moderate.]

1. Temperately; mildly.

All persons having just cause of sickness, or other necessity, or being licensed by the king's majesty, may moderately eat all kinds of meats, without grudge or scruple of conscience.
Visitation Articles of K. Edw. VI.

2. In a middle degree.

Each nymph but moderately fair,
Commands with no less rigor here. Waller.

Blood in a healthy state, when let out, its red part should congeal strongly and soon, in a mass moderately tough, and swim in the serum. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

MO'DERATENESS. n. s. [from moderate.] State of being moderate; temperateness. Moderateness is commonly used of things, and moderation of persons.

MO'DERATION.† n. s. [moderatio, Latin.]

1. Forbearance of extremity; the contrary temper to party violence; state of keeping a due mean betwixt extremes.

Was it the purpose of these churches, which abolished all popish ceremonies, to come back again to the middle point of evenness and moderation? Hooker.

A zeal in things pertaining to God, according to knowledge, and yet duly tempered with candor and prudence, is the true notion of that much talked of, much misunderstood virtue, moderation. Atterbury.

In moderation placing all my glory,
While tories call me whig, and whigs a tory. Pope.

2. Calmness of mind; equanimity. [moderation, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Moderation is not derived from the word medium, but from modus; and that from the Hebrew madad, he measured; or middah, a rule or measure; and in the Greek is styled μετριότης, from μέτρον, a measure: whence it is evident, that moderation, properly so called, and in the moral sense of the word, belongs only to things in which we are subject to a vicious excess; or to act beyond that rule or measure, which Scripture, or religion, doth prescribe for the due regulation of our actions and passions; and it respects first and principally the government of our passions; whence the due government of them is by philosophers styled μετριοπαθεια, the moderation of our passions. Whitby, Paraphr. on the N. Test. Phil. iv. 5.]

Let your moderation [in old translations, softness, modesty, patience, gentleness,] be known unto all men. Phil. iv. 5.

Equally inur'd
By moderation either state to bear,
Prosperous, or adverse. Milton, P. L.

3. Frugality in expence. Ainsworth.

MO'DERATOR.† n. s. [moderator, Latin; moderateur, French.]

1. The person or thing that calms or restrains.

Hope, that sweet moderator of passions, as Simonides calls it. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 694.

Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, and a procurer of contentedness. Walton, Angler.

2. One who presides in a disputation, to restrain the contending parties from indecency, and confine them to the question.

Sometimes the moderator is more troublesome than the actor. Bacon, Essays.

How does Philopolis seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator? More.

The first person who speaks when the court is set, opens the case to the judge, chairman, or moderator of the assembly, and gives his own reasons for his opinion. Watts.

MO'DERN. n. s. [moderne, French; from modernus, low Latin, supposed a casual corruption of hodiernus. "Vel potius ab adverbio modo modernus, ut a die diurnus. Ainsworth.]

1. Late; recent; not ancient; not antique.

Some of the ancient, and likewise divers of the modern writers, that have laboured in natural magick, have noted a sympathy between the sun and certain herbs. Bacon.

The glorious parallels then downward bring
To modern wonders, and to Britain's king. Prior.

2. In Shakspeare, vulgar; mean; common.

Trifles, such as we present modern friends withal. Shakspeare.

The justice
With eyes severe and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances. Shakspeare.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Shakspeare.

MO'DERNS. n. s. Those who have lived lately, opposed to the ancients.

There are moderns who, with a slight variation, adopt the opinion of Plato. Boyle on Colours.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence,
Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their sense! Pope.

To MO'DERNISE.† v. a. [from modern.] To adapt ancient compositions to modern persons or things; to change ancient to modern language.

Another copy of this poem, but greatly altered and somewhat modernized, is preserved in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh. Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Anc. Metrical Romances.

He modernised the more antient narratives of the miracles and martyrdoms of the most eminent eastern and western saints. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 191.

MO'DERNISER.* n. s. [from modernise.] One who adapts ancient compositions to modern persons or things.

Mr. Neville, no unsuccessful moderniser of the Latin satyrists. Wakefield, Mem. p. 75.

MO'DERNISM. n. s. [from modern.] Deviation from the ancient and classical manner. A word invented by Swift.

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

MO'DERNIST.* n. s. [from modernism.] One who admires the moderns.

The base, detracting world would not have then dared to report, that Wotton's brain had undergone an unlucky shake, which even his brother modernists themselves, like ungrateful, do whisper so loud, that it reacheth up to the very garret I am now writing in. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 9.

MO'DERNNESS. n. s. [from modern.] Novelty.

MO'DEST.† adj. [modeste, Fr. modestus, Lat.]

1. Not arrogant; not presumptuous; not boastful; bashful.

Antiochus — wept, because of the sober and modest behaviour of him that was dead. 2 Macc. iv. 37.

Your temper is too modest,
Too much inclin'd to contemplation. Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

Of boasting more than of a tomb afraid,
A soldier should be modest as a maid. Young.

2. Not impudent; not forward.

Resolve me with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserve, or they impose this usage. Shakspeare.

Her face, as in a nymph display'd
A fair fierce boy, or in a boy betray'd
The blushing beauties of a modest maid. Dryden, Ovid.

3. Not loose; not unchaste; decent.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband. Shakspeare.

That women adorn themselves in modest apparel. 1 Tim. ii. 9.

4. Not excessive; not extreme; moderate; within a mean.

There appears much joy in him, even so much that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.

During the last four years, by a modest computation, there have been brought into Brest above six millions sterling in bullion. Addison.

MO'DESTLY.† adv. [from modest.]

1. Not arrogantly; not presumptuously.

I may modestly conclude, that whatever errors there may be in this play, there are not those which have been objected to it. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Tho' learn'd, well bred, and tho' well-bred, sincere,
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

First he modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride,
Yet gave him not the heart to chide. Swift.

2. Not impudently; not forwardly; with respect.

I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself, which yet you know not of. Shakspeare.

3. Not loosely; not lewdly; with decency.

4. Not excessively; with moderation.

To proceed modestly, is also an honourable quality in him that conquereth, for, in prosperous fortunes, men do hardly refrain covetous and proud doings, yea, some good and great captains have, in like cases, forgotten what did best become them. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, ch. 23.

MO'DESTY. n. s. [modestie, Fr. modestas, Lat.]

1. Not arrogance; not presumptuousness.

They cannot, with modesty, think to have found out absolutely the best which the wit of men may devise. Hooker.

2. Not impudence; not forwardness: as, his petition was urged with modesty.

3. Moderation; decency.

A lord will hear you play;
But I am doubtful of your modesties,
Lest over eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion. Shakspeare.

4. Chastity; purity of manners.

Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,

By these exterior shews? But she is mote,
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakspeare.

Of the general character of women, which is modesty, he has taken a most becoming care; for his amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden.

Talk not to a lady in a way that modesty will not permit her to answer. Richardson, Clarissa.

MO'DESTY-PIECE. n. s.

A narrow lace which runs along the upper part of the stays before, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison, Guardian.

MO'DICUM. n. s. [Latin.] Small portion; pittance.

What modicums of wit he utters: his evasions have ears thus long. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Though hard their fate,
A cruise of water, and an ear of corn,
Yet still they grudg'd that modicum. Dryden.

MODIFI'ABLE.† adj. [modifiable, Fr. Cotgrave.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.

It appears to be more difficult to conceive a distinct, visible image in the uniform, invariable, essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either still escapes my comprehension. Locke.

MODI'FICABLE. adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.

To MODI'FICATE.* v. a. [from modify.] To qualify.

The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever, not only to the modificated eternity of his mediatorship, so long as there shall be need of regal power to subdue the enemies of God's elect; but also to the complete eternity of the duration of his humanity, which for the future is co-eternal to his divinity. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

MODIFICA'TION. n. s. [modification, Fr.] The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of external qualities or mode.

The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, the letters of the alphabet, formed by the motions of the mouth. Holder.

The phænomena of colours in refracted or reflected light, are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impressed, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton, Opticks.

If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cogitative substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Bentley.

To MO'DIFY.† v. a. [modifier, Fr.]

1. To change the external qualities or accidents of any thing; to shape.

Yet there is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the voluble motions of the organs that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.

The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fell upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton, Opticks.

2. To soften; to moderate; to qualify.

A king after the reule is holde
To modifie, and to adresse,
His yeftes upon such largesse,
That he measure nought excede. Gower, Conf Am. B. 7.

Of his grace
He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.

To MO'DIFY. v. n. To extenuate.

After all this discanting and modifying upon the matter, there is hazard on the yielding side. L'Estrange.

MODI'LLON.† n. s. [French; modiglione, Ital. modiolus, Lat.]

Modillons, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the Corinthian and composite orders, and serve to support the projecture of the larmier or drip: this part must be distinguished from the great model, which is the diameter of the pillar; for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillons, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabrick. Harris.

The modillons or dentelli make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spectator.

The entablature, and all its parts and ornaments, architrave, frieze, cornice, triglyph, metopes, modiglions, and the rest, have each an use. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

MO'DISH.† adj. [from mode. The vulgar use of modish has, I suppose, disgraced it. It would not, now, be endured in polite conversation, much less in polite writing. Bp. Hurd.] Fashionable; formed according to the reigning custom.

For clothes, I leave them to the discretion of the modish, whether of our own or the French nation. Phillips, Theatr. Poetarum, (1675,) Pref.

But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd. Congreve, Juv.

Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city; the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more vitious than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Addison, Spect.

MO'DISHLY. adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.

Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs modishly. Locke.

MO'DISHNESS. n. s. [from modish.] Affectation of the fashion.

To MO'DULATE. v. a. [modulor, Lat.] To form sound to a certain key, or to certain notes.

The nose, lips, teeth, palate, jaw, tongue, weasan, lungs, muscles of the chest, diaphragm, and muscles of the belly, all serve to make or modulate the sound. Grew, Cosmol.

Could any person so modulate her voice as to deceive so many. Broome.

Echo propagates around
Each charm of modulated sound. Anon.

MODULA'TION.† n. s. [from modulate; modulation, French.]

1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.

The more neere they approched to that temperance, and subtile modulation, of the saide superiour bodies, the more perfect and commendable is their dauncing. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 65.

The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixt: the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been reputed all different kinds. Woodward.

The speech, as it is a sound resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the spirit, but, as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognation with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the invisible powers of human souls clothed in flesh. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Sound modulated; harmony; melody.

Innumerous songsters, in the freshening shade,
Their modulations mix, mellifluous. Thomson, Spring.

Mo'dulator.† n. s. [from modulate.] He who forms sounds to a certain key; a tuner; that which modulates.

It [Poetry] is a most musical modulator of all intelligibles by her inventive variations. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654,) p. 477.

The tongue is the grand instrument of taste, the faithful judge of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, and the necessary servant of mastication. Derham.

Mo'dule.† n. s. [module, Fr. Cotgrave; modulus, Lat.] An empty representation; a model; an external form.

My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then, all this thou see'st, is but a clod,
And module of confounded royalty. Shakspeare, K. John.

The module of Minerva's temple in her own city. Dr. Bernard to Dr. Pococke, Pococke on Hos. (1685.)

To Mo'dule. v. a. [modulor, Lat.]

1. To model; to shape; to mould.

And souls into well modul'd clay infuse.
Sandys, Ovid, (1638,) p. 10.

2. To modulate. Both obsolete.

The nightingale, — that charmer of the night,
That moduleth her tunes so admirably rare.
Drayton, Polyolb S. 13.

Mo'dus. n. s. [Latin.] Something paid as a compensation for tithes on the supposition of being a moderate equivalent.

One terrible circumstance of this bill, is turning the tithe of flax and hemp into what the lawyers call a modus, or a certain sum in lieu of a tenth part of the product. Swift.

Mo'dwall.† n. s. [picus.] A bird, which destroys bees. Huloet.

Moe. adj. [ma, Sax. See Mo.] More; a greater number.

The chronicles of England mention no moe than only six kings bearing the name of Edward since the conquest, therefore it cannot be there should be more. Hooker.

Moe.* n. s. A distorted mouth. See Mow.

Mogu'l.* n. s. [from Tamerlane, the Mongul or Mogul Tartar.] The title of the emperour of Hindostan, who was called the great Mogul.

The destin'd walls
Of Cambalu, seat of Cathain Can,
And Samarchand by Oxus, Temir's throne,
To Paquin of Sinæan kings, and thence
To Agra and Lahor of great Mogul,
Down to the golden Chersonese. Milton, P. L.

Mo'hair.† n. s. [moilaire, Fr. ab orientali voce mojacar, species cameloti. Skinner.] Thread or stuff made of camels or other hair.

She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the figures on an Indian chest,
And when she sees her friend in deep despair,
Observes how much a chintz exceeds mohair. Pope.

Mo'hock.† n. s. The name of a cruel nation of America given to ruffians who infested, or rather were imagined to infest, the streets of London. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps from those who ran a-muck. See To run a muck in the third sense of the substantive Muck.

In your speculation of Wednesday last, you have given us some account of that worthy society of brutes, the mohocks; wherein you have particularly specified the ingenious performances of the lion-tippers, the dancing-masters, and the tumblers! Spectator, No. 332.

Who has not trembled at the mohock's name? Gay.

Thou hast fallen upon me with the rage of a mad dog, or a mohock. Dennis.

Mohammedan.* See Mahomedan.

To Mo'ider.† v. a. To puzzle; to perplex. Used in the north of England. Dr. Johnson merely gives, on the authority of Ainsworth, the participle moidered, which is properly, he says, modered or mudded, and means crazed. By moddered, which however is not an English word, we may suppose an allusion to the Teut. moddelen, modden, to toil in the mud. In some parts of England, as in Gloucestershire and Shropshire, the word is moither, or moyther; and means to confound; to tire out; to distract.

Moido're.† n. s. [moeda d'oro, Portuguese; moneta de auro, Latin. Clarke on Coins, p. 319.] A Portugal coin, rated at one pound seven shillings.

Mo'iety. n. s. [moitié, Fr. from moien, the middle.] Half; one of two equal parts.

This company being divided into two equal moieties, the one before, the other since the coming of Christ; that part which, since the coming of Christ, partly hath embraced, and partly shall embrace, the Christian religion, we term as by a more proper name, the church of Christ. Hooker.

The death of Antony
Is not a single doom; in that name lay
A moiety of the world. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moiety of the principal. Shakspeare.

The militia was settled, a moiety of which should be nominated by the king, and the other moiety by the parliament. Clarendon.

As this is likely to produce a cessation of arms among one half of our island, it is reasonable that the more beautiful moiety of his majesty's subjects should establish a truce. Addison.

To MOIL.† v. a. [mouiller, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Or from the Sax. mal, macula, a spot.]

1. To dawb with dirt; to defile.

Then rouse thyself, O Earth, out of thy soyle,
In which thou wallowest like to filthy swyne,
And dost thy mind in dirty pleasures moyle.
Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Love.

All they which were left were moiled with dirt and mire by reason of the deepness of the rotten way. Knolles.

Letter of 1592, in Ld. Halifax's Miscell. p. 169.

To MO'LLIFY.† v. a. [mollio, Latin. mollir, Fr.]

1. To soften; to make soft.

In the time of king Richard the Second, it [the language] was so mollified, that it came to be thus, as it is in the translation of Wicliffe. Camden, Rem. Ch. on Languages.

Thou rainest upon us, and yet dost not always mollify all our hardness. Donne, Devot. (1624,) p. 323.

2. To assuage.

Neither herb, nor mollifying plaister, restored them to health. Wisd. xvi. 12.

Sores have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment. Isa. i. 6.

3. To appease; to pacify; to quiet.

Thinking her silent imaginations began to work upon somewhat to mollify them, as the nature of musick is to do, I took up my harp. Sidney.

He brought them to these savage parts,
And with sweet science mollified their stubborn hearts.
Spenser, F. Q.

The crone, on the wedding-night, finding the knight's aversion, speaks a good word for herself, in hope to mollify the sullen bridegroom. Dryden.

4. To qualify; to [illegible] any thing harsh or [illegible]some.

They would, by yielding to some things, when they refused others, sooner prevail [illegible] to mollify their demands, than at first to reform them. Clarendon.

Cowley thus paints Goliah,
The valley now, this monster seem'd to fill,
And we, methought, look'd up to him from our hill;
where the two words seem'd and methought, have mollified the figure. Dryden, Pref. to State of Innocence.

MOLO'SSE.* n. s. [molossus, Lat.] A metrical foot, consisting of three long syllables.

There is the smaller alcaic verse with a molosse interposed, in that noble place in the Revelation, which consists of strong and harmonious measures. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. ii. 100.

MOLO'SSES.† } n. s. [melazzo, Italian; perhaps from MOLA'SSES. } the Gr. μέλι. The word is sometimes written also melasses.] Treacle; the spume or scum of the juice of the sugar cane.

We shall speak of the use of each of the said four gums, — where also we may speak of honey and molasses.
Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 294.

MOLT.* pret. of melt. Obsolete.

The furies flung their snakie whips away,
And molt in tears at his enchanting lay.
P. Fletcher, Purp. Isl. v. [illegible]

MO'LTABLE.* adj. [from molt.] Fusible. Not in use. Huloet.

MO'LTEN.† part. pass. from melt. [molten, Saxon.]

Brass is molten out of the stone. Job, xxviii. 2.

In a small furnace made of a temperate heat; let the heat be such as may keep the metal molten, and no more. Bacon.

Love's mystick form the artizans of Greece
In wounded stone, or molten gold express. Prior.

MO'LY. n. s. [moly, Latin; moly, French.] A plant.

Moly, or wild garlick, is of several sorts; as the great moly of Homer, the Indian moly, the moly of Hungary, serpent's moly, the yellow moly, Spanish purple moly, Spanish silver-capped moly, Dioscorides's moly, the sweet moly of Montpelier: the roots are tender, and must be carefully defended from frosts: as for the time of their flowering, the moly of Homer flowers in May, and continues till July, and so do all the rest except the last, which is late in September: they are hardy, and will thrive in any soil. Mortimer, Husb.

The sovereign plant he drew,
And shew'd its nature and its wondrous power;
Black was the root, but milky white the flower;
Moly the name. Pope, Odyss.

MOME.† n. s. [This owes its original to the French word momon, which signifies the gaming at dice in masquerade, the rule of which is that a strict silence is to be observed; whatsoever sum one stakes another covers; but not a word is to be spoken; hence also comes our word mum for silence. Hanmer, and Dr. Johnson. — It more probably came to us from one of those similar words, that are found in many languages, signifying something foolish. Momar is used by Plautus for a fool, whence the French mommeur. The Greeks too had μωμος and μωρμος in the same sense. Douce, Illustr. of Shakspeare, i. 366.] A dull, stupid blockhead; a stock; a post.

Ne aught he said, whatever he did heare;
But hanging downe his head, did like a mome appeare.
Spenser, F. Q.

A youth will play the wanton, and an old man prove a mome.
Warner, Albion's England.

[illegible]
Either get thee from [illegible]
Shakspeare, [illegible]
The words were not spoken to a [illegible] person.
[illegible] 6.

MOMENT. n. s. [moment, Fr. momentum, Latin.]

1. Consequence; importance; weight; value.

We do not find that our Saviour reproved them of errour, for thinking the judgement of the scribes to be worth the objecting, for esteeming it to be of any moment or value in matters concerning God. Hooker.

I have seen her die twenty times, upon far poorer moment. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

What towns of any moment but we have. Shakspeare.

It is an abstruse speculation, but also of far less moment and consequence to us than the other; seeing that without this we can evince the existence of God. Bentley, Serm.

2. Force; impulsive weight; actuating power.

The place of publick prayer is a circumstance in the outward form, which hath moment to help devotion. Hooker.

Can these or such be any aid to us?
Look they as they were built to shake the world?
Or be a moment to our enterprise? B. Jonson.

Touch with lightest moment of impulse,
His free will, to her own inclining left
In even scale. Milton, P. L.

He is a capable judge; can hear both sides with an indifferent ear; is determined only by the moments of truth, and so retracts his past errors. Norris.

3. An indivisible particle of time.

If I would go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Winds.

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment,
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The imaginary reasoning of brutes is not a distinct reasoning, but performed in a physical moment. Hale.

While I a moment name, a moment's past;
I'm nearer death in this verse than the last;
What then is to be done? Be wise with speed,
A fool at forty is a fool indeed. Young.

Yet thus receiving and returning bliss
In this great moment, in this golden now,
When every trace of what, or when, or how,
Should from my soul by raging love be torn. Prior.

MOME'NTAL.* adj. [momental, Fr. Cotgrave.] Important; valuable; of moment.

Not one momental minute doth she swerve.
Breton, Sir P. Sidney's Ourania, (1606,) sign. D.

MOME'NTALLY. adv. [from momentum, Latin.] For a moment.

Air but momentally remaining in our bodies, hath no proportionable space for its conversion, only of length enough to refrigerate the heart. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MOMENTA'NEOUS.† } adj. [momentané, momentaine, Fr.
MO'MENTANY. } momentaneus, Latin. Momentany and momentary, were indiscriminately used in the sixteenth century; but momentany is perhaps the older of the two. Of momentaneous I find no usage.] Lasting but for a moment.

Preferre endless blysse before vaine and momentany pleasures.
Woolton, Chr. Manuel, (1576,) sign. L. vii. b.

Small difficulties, when exceeding great good is sure to ensue; and, on the other side, momentany benefits, when the hurt which they draw after them is unspeakable, are not at all to be respected. Hooker.

Making it momentany as a sound.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Trifles and momentany things.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

They snatch at those vanishing shadows of pleasure, which a poor momentany life can afford them.
Bp. Hall, Temptations repelled, D. 2. § 6.

Flame above is durable and consistent; but with us it is a stranger and momentany. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

[illegible]
The horrid sum of his intentions tell,
But she, swift as the momentany wing
Of lightning, or the words he spoke, left him. Crashaw.

MO'MENTARILY.* adv. [from momentary.] Every moment.

Why endow the vegetable bird with wings, which nature has made momentarily dependent upon the soil? Shenstone.

MO'MENTARY. adj. [from moment.] Lasting for a moment; done in a moment.

Momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream. Shakspeare.

Swift as thought the flitting shade
Through air his momentary journey made. Dryden.

Onions, garlick, pepper, salt, and vinegar, taken in great quantities, excite a momentary heat and fever. Arbuthnot.

MOME'NTOUS. adj. [from momentum, Lat.] Important; weighty; of consequence.

Great Anne, weighing the events of war
Momentous, in her prudent heart thee chose. Philips.

If any false step be made in the more momentous concerns of life, the whole scheme of ambitious designs is broken. Addison.

It would be a very weak thing to give up so momentous a point as this, only because it has been contested. Waterland.

MOME'NTUM.* n. s. [Latin.] Impetus, force, or quantity of motion in a moving body.

Mercury hath of late years become a medicine of very general use. The extreme minuteness, mobility, and momentum of its parts, rendering it a most powerful cleanser of all obstructions, even in the most minute capillaries. But then we should be cautious in the use of it, if we consider, that the very thing, which gives it power of doing good above other deobstruents, doth also dispose it to mischief. I mean its great momentum. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 71.

MO'MMERY. n. s. [or mummery, from mummer, momerie, Fr.] An entertainment in which maskers play frolicks. See MOME.

All was jollity,
Feasting and mirth, light wantonness and laughter,
Piping and playing, minstrelsy and masking,
Till life fled from us like an idle dream,
A shew of mommery without a meaning. Rowe.

MO'NACHAL.† adj. [monacal, Fr. monachalis, Latin; μοναχικός.] Monastick; relating to monks, or conventual orders. Sherwood.

MO'NACHISM.† n. s. [monachisme, French.] The state of monks; the monastick life. Sherwood.

MO'NAD.† } n. s. [monade, Fr. Cotgrave; μονάς,
MO'NADE. } Greek.] An indivisible thing.

Disunity is the natural property of matter, which of itself is nothing but an infinite congeries of physical monads. More.

In man the monad or indivisible is the αὐτὸ τὸ αὐτὸ, the self same self or very self; a thing, in the opinion of Socrates, much and narrowly to be inquired into and discussed, to the end that, knowing ourselves, we may know what belongs to us and our happiness. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 346.

MONA'DICAL.* adj. [from monad.] Having the nature of a monad.

All here depend on the orb unitive,
Which also hight nature monadical.
More, Immort. of the Soul, i. iii. 24.

MO'NARCH. n. s. [monarch, Fr. μονάρχος.]

1. A governour invested with absolute authority; a king.

I was
A morsel for a monarch. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth
Do all expect that you should rouse yourself. Shakspeare.

The father of a family or nation, that uses his servants like children, and advises with them in what concerns the commonweal, and thereby is willingly obeyed by them, is what the schools mean by a monarch. Temple.

2. One superiour to the rest of the same kind.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

With ease distinguish'd is the regal race,
One monarch wears an open, honest face;
Shap'd to his size, and godlike to behold,
His royal body shines with specks of gold. Dryden, Virg.

Return'd with dire remorseless sway,
The monarch savage rends the trembling prey. Pope, Odyss.

3. President.

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Mona'rchal.† adj. [from monarch.] Suiting a monarch; regal; princely; imperial.

By whose monarchal sway
She fortifies herself. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.

Devotion doth but reduce the wild multitude of human affections under the monarchal government of the love of God. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 35.

Satan, whom now transcendent glory rais'd
Above his fellows, with monarchal pride,
Conscious of highest worth, unmov'd thus spake. Milton, P. L.

Mo'narchess.* n. s. [from monarch.] A female monarch; an empress.

The monarchess rested very well satisfied, and was ready to license his departure. Transl. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 177.

Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cried aloud, What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence? Shakspeare.

This small inheritance
Contenteth me, and 's worth a monarchy. Shakspeare.

MO'NASTERY.† n. s. [monastere, Fr. monasterium, Lat.] House of religious retirement; convent; abby; cloister. It is usually pronounced, and often written, monastry. Spenser has once written it monastere, after the French form.

The elfin knight,
Who now no place besides unsought had left,
At length into a monastere did light. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 23.

Then courts of kings were held in high renown;
There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,
But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd. Dryden.

In a monastery your devotions cannot carry you so far toward the next world, as to make this lose the sight of you. Pope.

Mona'stick.† } adj. [monastique, Fr. monasticus,
Mona'stical. } Lat.] Religiously recluse; pertaining to a monk.

I drave my suitor to forswear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook merely monastick. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The silicious and hairy vests of the strictest orders of friers derive the institution of their monastick life from the example of John and Elias. Brown, Vulg. Err.

His profession was the very dungeon of the monastical prison, the strictest and severest of all other orders. Fuller, Holy War, p. 245.

When young, you led a life monastick,
And wore a vest ecclesiastick;
Now in your age you grow fantastick. Denham.

Mona'stically. adv. [from monastick.] Reclusely; in the manner of a monk.

I have a dozen years more to answer for, all monastically passed in this country of liberty and delight. Swift.

Mona'stick.* n. s. A monk.

An art of great value with the ancients, and longest preserved amongst the monasticks, as we find upon figures and capital letters in old vellum manuscripts. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 143.

Mo'nday.† n. s. [from moon and day; monan-dæg, Sax. the day of the moon; the day consecrated to the moon; monan, genitive case of mona, the moon.] The second day of the week.

The Saxons did adore the moon, to whom they set a day apart, which to this day we call moon-day. Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 202.

*MONDE. n. s. [French; mundus, Lat.]

1. The world; a certain number of people: as, the beau monde. See Beau-monde.

MO'NEY.† n. s. [monnoye, French; moneta, Latin. It has properly no plural except when money is taken for a single piece; but monies was formerly used for sums. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon mẏneꞇ, money, from mẏneꞇian, to coin. It is not usual to say a money, as we say a coin; but it has been so expressed. "The kesitah was not a Jewish, but a Canaanite money." Costard's Two Dissert. Oxford, 1750, p. 27.] Metal coined for the purposes of commerce.

Importune him for monies; be not ceast
With slight denial. Shakspeare, Timon.

The jealous wittolly knave hath masses of money. Shakspeare.

You need my help, and you say,
Shylock, we would have monies. Shakspeare.
I will give thee the worth of it in money. 1 Kings, xxi. 2.
Wives the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy,
And lend the monies on return of lust. B. Jonson.
Money differs from uncoined silver, in that the quantity of silver in each piece of money is ascertained by the stamp it bears, which is a publick voucher. Locke.
My discourse to the hen-peck'd has produced many correspondents; such a discourse is of general use, and every married man's money. Addison, Spect.
Shall I withhold a little money or food from my fellow creature, for fear he should not be good enough to receive it from me? Law.
People are not obliged to receive any monies, except of their own coinage by a publick mint. Swift.

MO'NEYMATTER. n. s. [money and matter.] Account of debtor and creditor.
What if you and I Nick should enquire how moneymatters stand between us? Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

MO'NEYSCRIVENER. n. s. [money and scrivener.] One who raises money for others.
Suppose a young unexperienced man in the hands of moneyscriveners; such fellows are like your wire-drawing mills, if they get hold of a man's finger, they will pull in his whole body at last. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

MO'NEYSPINNER.* n. s. A small spider, vulgarly so called; and fancifully held to prognosticate the receipt of money, or good luck, to those on whom they are seen to crawl.

MO'NEYSWORTH. n. s. [money and worth.] Something valuable; something that will bring money.
There is either money or moneysworth in all the controversies of life; for we live in a mercenary world, and it is the price of all things in it. L'Estrange.

MO'NEYWORT. n. s. A plant.

MO'NGCORN. n. s. [manᵹ, Saxon, and corn.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye; miscellane, or maslin.

MO'NGER.† n. s. [manᵹepe, monᵹep, Sax. a trader, from manᵹian, to trade.] A dealer; a seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity to express a seller of that commodity: as, a fishmonger; and sometimes a medler in any thing: as, a whoremonger; a newsmonger. Dr. Johnson. — Lye makes a similar remark, overpassing the use of monger by itself; which Wicliffe, I think, somewhere uses in the good sense of a trader, or merchant; and which Ben Jonson certainly employs in the contemptuous meaning of a low trader.
Here was no subtle device to get a wench!
This Chanon has a brave pate of his own,
A shaven pate! and a right monger, y'faith!
This was his plot! B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.
Do you know me? — Yes, excellent well, you are a fishmonger. Shakspeare.
The impatient states-monger
Could now contain himself no longer. Hudibras.

MO'NGREL.† adj. [as mongcorn, from manᵹ, Saxon, or mengen, to mix, Germ.] Of a mixed breed: commonly written mungrel for mangrel.
There is a mongrel dialect, composed of Italian and French and some Spanish words are also in it; which they call Franco. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. (1642,) p. 139.
This zealot
Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clerick before, and lay behind. Hudibras.
Ye mongrel work of heaven, with human shapes,
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice. Dryden, Don Sebastian.
I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden.
His friendship still to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind;
No fools of rank, or mongrel breed,
Who fain wou'd pass for lords indeed. Swift, Miscell.

MO'NGREL.* n. s. Any thing of mixed breed.
His two faculties of serving-man and solicitor should compound into one mongrel. Milton, Colasterion.
Base, grovelling, worthless wretches;
Mongrels in faction; poor faint-hearted traitors. Addison.

MO'NIED.* See MONEYED.

MO'NIMENT.† n. s. [monimento, Ital. monimentum, or monumentum, Lat. from moneo.]
1. A memorial; a record.
That as a sacred symbole it may dwell
In her sonne's flesh, to mind revengement,
And be for all chaste dames an endless moniment. Spenser, F. Q. ii. ii. 10.
2. A mark; a superscription; an image.

Some others were new driven, and distent
Into great ingoes, and to wedges square;
Some in round plates withouten momment.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 5.

To MO'NISH.† v. a. [moneo, Latin; a contraction of admonish. Dr. Johnson. — It is not a contraction, but the Saxon verb monan, moneȝian; and is old in our language; probably in use before admonish. It was written also monest, as well as monish.] To warn; to counsel; to admonish.

For I you praie and eke moneste,
Nought to refusin our requeste. Chaucer, Rom. R. 3579.
Now worthy women, in this balade short,—
Of charite I monishe and exhorte. Chaucer, Compl. of Cres. 195.

Monish him gently, which shall make him both willing to amend, and glad to go forward in love. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Here are all degrees to be monished.
Homilies, Serm. iii. Against Adultery.

MO'NISHER. n. s. [from monish.] An admonisher; a monitor.

MO'NISHMENT.* n. s. [from monish.] Admonition; counsel given. Sherwood.

MONI'TION. n. s. [monitio, Latin; monition, Fr.]

1. Information; hint.

We have no visible monition of the returns of any other periods, such as we have of the day, by successive light and darkness. Holder on Time.

2. Instruction; document.

Unruly ambition is deaf, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counsels and monitions of reason itself. L'Estrange.

Then after sage monitions from his friends,
His talents to employ for nobler ends,
He turns to politicks his dangerous wit. Swift.

MO'NITIVE.* adj. [monitus, Lat.] Admonitory; conveying useful instruction.

These evils are exemplary and monitive. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 12.

MO'NITOR. n. s. [Latin.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent: be but his scholar, and you are safe. Bacon.

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untainted, to carry his monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conscience as might be its own casuist. South, Serm.

We can but divine who it is that speaks; whether Persius himself, or his friend and monitor, or a third person. Dryden.

The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitors to us to beware of greater mischiefs. Locke.

MO'NITORY. adj. [monitoire, Fr. monitorius, Lat.] Conveying useful instruction; giving admonition.

Losses, miscarriages, and disappointments, are monitory and instructive. L'Estrange.

He is so taken up still, in spite of the monitory hint in my essay, with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pope.

MO'NITORY. n. s. Admonition; warning.

A king of Hungary took a bishop in battle, and kept him prisoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon.

MO'NITRESS.* n. s. [from monitor.] A female monitor; an instructress.

Thus far our pretty and ingenious monitress; were I to say any thing after her, my case would be that of the tiresome actor. Student, ii. 367.

MONK. n. s. [monec, Saxon; monachus, Latin; μοναχὸς.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain observances.

'Twould prove the verity of certain words,
Spoke by a holy monk. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Abdemeleck, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Mahometan monk. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The dronish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,
Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
And nestle in their ancient hives again. Rowe.

Monks, in some respects, agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects, monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are. Ayliffe, Parergon.

MO'NKEY.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson considers the word as monikin, a little man. Pennant derives it from monca, a name which the Malayes give to a particular species of the animal among them. Monicchio for a monkey is old in the Italian language.]

1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.

One of them shewed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey: Tubal, it was my turquoise; I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Shakspeare.

More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, destroy their young ones by senseless fondness. Locke on Education.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine,
But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granville.

2. A word of contempt, or slight kindness.

This is the monkey's own giving out; she is persuaded I will marry her. Shakspeare, Othello.

Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father? Shakspeare.

MO'NKERY.† n. s. [from monk.] The monastick life.

Heresy in Britaine ariseth of monkery.
Bale, Acts of Eng. Vot. P. i. fol. 19.

Monkeries then were as far distant from those of our days, as the moon is distant from the earth.
Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 326.

Vows of chastity, monkery, and a solitary life.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 657.

Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous servitude of their rash and impotent votaries, nor the inconveniences of their monkery. Bp. Hall.

MO'NKHOOD. n. s. [monk and hood.] The character of a monk.

He had left off his monkhood too, and was no longer obliged to them. Atterbury.

MO'NKISH. adj. [from monk.] Monastick; pertaining to monks; taught by monks.

Those publick charities are a greater ornament to this city than all its wealth, and do more real honour to the reformed religion, than redounds to the church of Rome from all those monkish and superstitious foundations of which she vainly boasts. Atterbury, Serm.

Rise, rise, Roscommon, see the Blenheim muse,
The dull constraint of monkish rhyme refuse. Smith.

MONKS-HOOD. n. s. [consolida regalis.] A plant. Ainsworth.

MONKS-RHUBARB. n. s. A species of dock: its roots are used in medicine.

MONO'CEROS.* } n. s. [μόνος single, and κέρας, horn,
MONO'CEROT. } Gr.] The unicorn.

Jacob de Dondis, in his catalogue of simples, hath ambergreece, the bone in a stag's heart, monocerot's horn.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 376.

MO'NOCHORD. n. s. [μόνος and χορδὴ.]

1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet marine. Harris.

2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds: the ancients made use of it to determine the proportion of sounds to one another. When the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diapentes;

if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatesserons; if as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce major; but if as six to five, then they called it a demi-diton, or a tierce minor; and, lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or dieze; the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harris.

MONO'CULAR. } adj. [μόνος and oculus.] One-eyed;
MONO'CULOUS. } having only one eye.

He was well served who, going to cut down an antient white hawthorn tree, which, because she budded before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular. Howell.

Those of China repute the rest of the world monoculous. Glanville, Scepsis.

MO'NODY.† n. s. [μονωδία, Gr. monodie, Fr.] A poem sung by one person, not in dialogue. Dr. Johnson. — Of this usage Dr. Johnson gives no example. Our old lexicography calls a monody, "a mournful song." Cockeram. This is the sense of the word among the ancients: a ditty sung by the person alone, to vent his grief. Among the French it obtained the distinction of "chant lugubre d'eglise, qui est toujours sur le même ton." Lacombe.

It is called a monody from a Greek word signifying a mournful or funeral song, sung by a single person. Bp. Newton, Note on Milton's Lycidas.

MONO'GAMIST.† n. s. [μόνος and γάμος; monogame, Fr.] One who disallows second marriages.

I maintained with Whiston, that it was unlawful for a priest of the church of England, after the death of his first wife, to take a second; or, to express it in one word, I valued myself upon being a strict monogamist. Goldsmith, Vic. of Wakefield, ch. 2.

MONO'GAMY.† n. s. [monogamie, Fr. μόνος, and γαμέω, Gr.] Marriage of one wife.

If he had ever read the book following of monogamy, he might have found his Tertullian then montanizing, to upbraid the true and catholick church with the usual practice and allowance of the second marriages of their bishops. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 106.

MO'NOGRAM.† n. s. [μόνος and γράμμα, Gr.; monogramme, Fr.]

1. A cypher; a character compounded of several letters.

It came
To be described by a monogram. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. A picture drawn in lines without colour.

A kind of first draught, or ground colours only, and monogram of life. Hammond, Works, iv. 571.

MO'NOGRAMMAL.* adj. [from monogram.] Sketching in the manner of a monogram.

Though it be but as it were a monogrammal description, and a kind of rude draught as it were with a coal. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 355.

MO'NOLOGUE. n. s. [μόνος and λόγος; monologue, Fr.] A scene in which a person of the drama speaks by himself; a soliloquy.

He gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country, in monologue; to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. Dryden.

MONO'MACHY.† n. s. [μονομαχία; μόνος and μάχη, Gr. monomachie, old Fr.] A duel; a single combat.

In those ancient monomachies and combats they were searched, [that] they had no magical charms. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 54.

Abner invites his rival in honour to a tragical play, (as he terms it,) a monomachy of twelve single combatants on either part. Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D. 2, C. 2.

MO'NOME. n. s. [monome, Fr.] In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name; as, a b, a a b, a a a b. Harris.

MONO'PATHY.* n. s. [μόνος, and πάθεια, Gr.] Solitary sensibility; sole suffering.

By this Spanish proverb, every one calculateth his nativity, and sentenceth his own future fate, by crying at his birth; not coming only from the body's monopathy, or sole suffering by change of its warm quarters; but, according to some, from sympathy with the divining soul, that knoweth itself for a time banished from the Father of Spirits. Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. (1654,) p. 32.

MONOPE'TALOUS. adj. [monopetale, Fr. μόνος and πέταλον.] It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, howsoever they may be seemingly cut into many small ones, and those fall off together. Quincy.

MONO'POLIST.† n. s. [monopoleur, Fr. Our own word was formerly monopoler. Cotgrave and Sherwood. Then monopolizer.] One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

Joy is an import; joy is an exchange;
Joy flies monopolists; it calls for two. Young, Night Th. 2.

To MONO'POLIZE.† v. a. [μόνος and πωλέω; monopoler, French.] To engross so as to have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

As if this age had monopolized all goodness to itself. Fuller, Holy War, p. 256.

He has such a prodigious trade, that if there is not some stop put, he will monopolize; nobody will sell a yard of drapery, or mercery ware, but himself. Arbuthnot.

MONO'POLIZER.* n. s. [from monopolize.] A monopolist.

Merchants have been prohibited to unlade their goods in such ports as were for their own advantage, and forced to bring them to those places which were most for the advantages of the monopolizers and projectors. Remonstrance in 1642, Welwood's Mem. p. 298.

There was in it the fraud of some old patentees and monopolizers in the trade of bookselling. Milton, Areopagitica.

MONO'POLY. n. s. [μονοπωλία; monopole, French; μόνος and πωλέω.] The exclusive privilege of selling any thing.

If I had a monopoly on't they would have part on't. Shakspeare.

How could he answer't, should the state think fit
To question a monopoly of wit. Cowley.

One of the most oppressive monopolies imaginable; all others can concern only something without us, but this fastens upon our nature, yea upon our reason. Gov. of the Tongue.

Shakspeare rather writ happily than knowingly and justly; and Jonson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, yet seemed to envy to posterity that knowledge and to make a monopoly of his learning. Dryden, Juv.

MONO'PTOTE. n. s. [μόνος and πτῶσις.] A noun used only in some one oblique case. Clarke, Lat. Gram.

MONO'STICH.† n. s. [μονόστιχον.] A composition of one verse.

The drugs and spices here so perfumed the place, that it made me since give the better credit to that monostich of an old poet, "Auras madentes Persicorum aromatum." Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 164.

MONOSYLLA'BICAL. adj. [from monosyllable.] Consisting of words of one syllable.

MONOSY'LLABLE. n. s. [monosyllabe, French; μόνος and συλλαβή.] A word of only one syllable.

My name of Ptolemy!
It is so long it asks an hour to write it:
I'll change it into Jove or Mars!
Or any other civil monosyllable,
That will not tire my hand. Dryden, Cleom.

Poets, although not insensible how much our language was already overstocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses. Swift.

Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy. Pope.

MONOSY'LLABLED. adj. [monosyllabe, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.

Nine taylors, if rightly spell'd,
Into one man are monosyllabled. Cleaveland.

MONOSTRO'PHICK.* adj. [μόνος and ϛρόφη, Gr.] Free from the restraint of any particular metre.

The measure of verse used in the chorus is of all sorts, called by the Greeks monostrophick. Milton, Pref. to Samson Agonistes.

MO'NOTONE.* n. s. [μόνος, and τόνος, Greek.] Uniformity of sound; want of proper cadence in pronunciation.

A kind of chaunt that frequently varies very little from a monotone. Mason on Church Musick, p. 97.

MONOTO'NICAL.* adj. [from monotony.] Having an unvaried sound; wanting variety in cadence.

We should not be lulled to sleep by the length of a monotonical declamation. Ld. Chesterfield.

MONO'TONOUS.* adj. [from monotony.] Wanting variety in cadence.

Every line was perhaps uniformly recited to the same monotonous modulation. Warton, Hist. E. P. Emend. ii. a. 4.

The melodies, whether old or new, ought to be executed in a less monotonous, and consequently more intelligible, manner. Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 196.

MONO'TONY. n. s. [μονοτονία; μόνος and τόνος; monotonie, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.

I could object to the repetition of the same rhimes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony. Pope, Letters.

MONSIEUR.† n. s. [French.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.

A Frenchman his companion;
An eminent monsieur, that it seems, much loves
A Gallian girl. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Nor shall we then need the monsieurs of Paris to take our hopeful youth into their slight and prodigal custodies. Milton on Education.

MONSO'ON. n. s. [monson, monçon, Fr.]

Monsoons are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for half a year one way, others but for three months, and then shift and blow for six or three months directly contrary. Harris.

The monsoons and trade winds are constant and periodical, even to the thirtieth degree of latitude, all round the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds. Ray.

MO'NSTER. n. s. [monstre, Fr. monstrum, Latin.]

1. Something out of the common order of nature.

Methinks heroick poesie till now,
Like some fantastick fairy land did show,
Gods, devils, nymphs, witches, and giants' race,
And all but man in man's chief work had place:
Then like some worthy knight, with sacred arms,
Doth drive the monsters thence, and end the charms. Cowley.

It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive. Locke.

2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.

If she live long,
And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

All human virtue, to its latest breath,
Finds envy never conquer'd but by death:
The great Alcides every labour past,
Had still this monster to subdue at last. Pope.

To MO'NSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things. Not in use.

Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I had rather have one scratch my head i' th' sun,
When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakspeare, Coriol.

MONSTRO'SITY. } n. s. [from monstrous.] The state
MONSTRUO'SITY. } of being monstrous, or out of the common order of the universe. Monstrosity is more analogous.

This is the monstruosity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrosity. Bacon.

We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrosity in educations: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast. South, Serm.

By the same law monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage; witness the case of hermaphrodites. Arbuthnot and Pope.

MO'NSTROUS.† adj. [monstrueux, Fr. monstrosus, Latin.]

1. Deviating from the stated order of nature.

Nature there perverse,
Brought forth all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Hydras, and gorgons, and chimeras dire. Milton, P. L.

Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals. Locke.

2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.

Is it not monstrous that this player here
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his conceit,
That, from her working, all his visage wan'd? Shakspeare.

O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack. Shakspeare.

3. Irregular: enormous.

No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,
The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.

4. Shocking; hateful.

This was an invention given out by the Spaniards, to save the monstrous scorn their nation received. Bacon.

5. Full of monsters.

Where thou, perhaps, under the whelming tide,
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world. Milton, Lycidas.

MO'NSTROUS. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.

Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a dram of each, turn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top. Bacon.

She was easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

Add, that the rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden, Juv.

MO'NSTROUSLY. adv. [from monstrous.]

1. In a manner out of the common order of nature; shockingly; terribly; horribly.

Tiberius was bad enough in his youth, but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age. South, Serm.

2. To a great or enormous degree.

He walks;
And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most monstrously to have. Shakspeare.

These truths with his example you disprove,
Who with his wife is monstrously in love. Dryden, Juv.

MO'NSTROUSNESS.† n. s. [from monstrous.] Enormity; irregular nature or behaviour.

See the monstrousness of man,
When he looks out in an ungrateful shape! Shakspeare.
O, how I hate the monstrousness of time!
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

MO'NTANISM.* n. s. The tenets of Montanus, an ancient heretick, who, about the close of the second century, founded a sect; unjustly pretending to be a prophet: multiplying fasts; forbidding second marriages; condemning all care of the body; and declaring that philosophy, arts, and whatever savoured of polite learning, should be banished from the Christian church.

Tertullian, proclaming even open war to the church, maintained montanism, wrote a book in defence of the new fast, and intituled the same, A treatise of fasting against the opinion of the carnal sort. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 72.

His [Tertullian's] montanism put no separation at all betwixt him and other Christians, save only in point of discipline, which he, according to the severity of his nature, would have to be most harsh and rigorous. Hanmer, View of Antiq. p. 119.

MO'NTANIST.* n. s. A follower of Montanus.

The montanists held these additions to be supplements to the Gospel. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 72.

MONTANI'STICAL.* adj. Belonging to the heresy of the Montanists.

An emulation of the montanistical vaunt of virginity.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 247.

Containing in them divers of his wild, montanistical conceits.
Hanmer, View of Antiq. p. 125.

To MO'NTANIZE.* v. n. To follow the opinions of Montanus.

Tertullian, together with such as were his followers, began to montanize; and, pretending to perfect the severity of Christian discipline, brought in sundry unaccustomed days of fasting.
Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 72.

MONTA'NT. n. s. [French.] A term in fencing.

Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?
— To see thee fight, — to see thee pass thy punto, thy stock; thy reverse, thy distance; thy montant. Shakspeare.

MONTE'RO. n. s. [Spanish.] A horseman's cap.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

MONTE'TH. n. s. [from the name of the inventor.] A vessel in which glasses are washed.

New things produce new words, and thus Monteth
Has by one vessel sav'd his name from death. King.

MONTH.† n. s. [monað, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Moon was formerly written mone; and month was written moneth.] It means the period in which that planet moneth, or completeth its orbit. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 417. — This observation is very ingenious, although there are no vestiges of a verb of this form in the Anglosaxon or any of the Gothick languages. Dr. Jamieson. — The Sax. monað, is from mona, the moon; and the Goth. menath, from mena, the same; μήνη, Greek. Wachter deduces the Goth. word for moon from *man*a to warn, to admonish, to instruct; and Dr. Jamieson the Sax. mona from monian, the same. May we not then refer also to the Greek verb μηνύω, to indicate, to point out, to declare, whence perhaps μήνη, the moon, and μὴν, a month? If this be admitted, here is the verb to support Mr. Tooke's observation, though in other words, viz. a month meaneth the period in which that planet warns, instructs, and points out.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiack: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the expiration of your month,
Sojourn with my sister. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

From a month old even unto five years old. Lev. xxvii. 6.

Months are not only lunary, and measured by the moon, but also solary, and terminated by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptick. Brown, Vulg. Err.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemn'd by fate
To daily death. Dryden, Theo. and Hon.

MONTH'S mind.† n. s. Longing desire. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson gives no account of the origin of this phrase. A month's mind is the mind or remembrance days of former times, when persons directed, in their wills, that within a year, a month, or some specifick time, after their death, a requiem for their souls should be performed, and some charity bestowed. They were called also mind days. Pegge, in his Anecdotes of the English Language, says that the phrase originated from the direction being "a declaration of the will and mind of the deceased." But the months' minds have been sometimes called memories, and sometimes monuments; and therefore clearly denote remembrance, not intention. They were a source of profit to the monks; and, from a knowledge of that, our ancestors at the Reformation perhaps retained the phrase, as a ludicrous mode of expressing any desire of gratifying their wishes.

Sekynge to make all men's goodes common unto them by tytle of tythes, offeryngës, devocyons, pylgrimages, absolucyons, indulgencës, bequestes, mortuaryes, monthes-myndes, yearmyndes, and the devil and all besydes.
Bale, Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, fol. 91. b.

Whether there are any months' minds and anniversaries.
Interrog. in 1552, Strype's Mem. of the Ref. ii. 354.

You have a month's mind to them. Shakspeare.

For if a trumpet sound or drum beat,
Who has not a month's mind to combat? Hudibras.

MO'NTHLY. adj. [from month.]

1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.

I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite. Bentley.

2. Happening every month.

The youth of heavenly birth I view'd,
For whom our monthly victims are renew'd. Dryden.

MO'NTHLY. adv. Once in a month.

If the one may very well monthly the other may as well even daily, be iterated. Hooker.

O swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,
That changes monthly in her circled orb;
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakspeare.

MONTO'IR. n. s. [French.] In horsemanship, a stone as high as the stirrups, which Italian riding-masters mount their horses from, without putting their foot in the stirrup. Dict.

MONTRO'SS. n. s. An under gunner, or assistant to a gunner, engineer, or fire-master. Dict.

MO'NUMENT. n. s. [monument, Fr. monumentum, Latin.]

1. Any thing by which the memory of persons or things is preserved; a memorial.

In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Jasius. Ralegh.

He is become a notable monument of unprosperous disloyalty. King Charles.

So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Or monument to ages: and thereon
Offer sweet-smelling gums. Milton, P. L.

Of ancient British art
A pleasing monument, not less admir'd
Than what from Attick or Etruscan hands
Arose. Philips.

Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings. Pope to Swift.

2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.

On your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial. Shakspeare.

The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
Shall on his monument their odours throw. Sandys, Paraph.

In a heap of slain,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load opprest
Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument. Dryden.

With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,
Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn. Pope, Miscell.

MONUME'NTAL. adj. [from monument.]

1. Memorial; preserving memory.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak. Milton, Il Pens.

The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The polish'd pillar different sculptures grace,
A work outlasting monumental brass. Pope.

2. Raised in honour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.

Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakspeare.

I'll not scar that whiter skin of her than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakspeare, Othello.

Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Softly may he be possest
Of his monumental rest. Crashaw.

MONUME'NTALLY.* adv. [from monumental.] In memorial.

This description of his house is in short the very same with an ancient justice of peace his hall; a very dangerous armoury to be touched, like Paul's scaffolds, monumentally standing, because none dare take them down. Gayton on D. Quixote, (1654,) p. 2.

To MOO.* See To MUE.

MOOD.† n. s. [mode, French; modus, Lat.]

1. The form of an argument.

Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. their universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts, Logick.

Aristotle reduced our loose reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mode and figure. Baker on Learning.

2. Style of musick.

They move
In perfect phalanx, to the Dorian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton, P. L.

Their sound
Little prevails, or rather seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint. Milton, S.A.

A bird,
Whom art had never taught cliffs, moods, or notes. Ford, Lover's Melancholy.

3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood. Clarke, Lat. Grammar.

We have observed, that all speech or discourse is a publishing or exhibiting some part of our soul, either a certain perception, or a certain volition. Hence then, according as we exhibit it either in a different part, or after a different manner, hence I say the variety of modes or moods. Harris, Hermes, B. i. ch. 8.

4. [mod, Gothick; mob, Saxon; moed, Dutch; and generally in all Teutonick dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.

The trembling ghosts, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and staring wide
With stony eyes. Spenser, F. Q.

The kingly beast upon her gazing stood,
With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood. Spenser, F. Q.

Eyes unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare, Othello.

Clorinda chang'd to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her vermeil cheeks depaint. Fairfax.

Solyman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Knolles.

She was in fittest mood
For cutting corns, or letting blood. Hudibras.

These two kids to appease his angry mood
I bear, of which the furies give him good. Dryden.

He now profuse of tears,
In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addison.

5. Anger; rage; heat of mind. [mod, Goth. rage. See MAD.]

At the last aslakid was his mood. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

A gentleman,
Whom, in my mood, I stabb'd unto the heart. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they cast forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker.

MO'ODILY.* adv. [from moody.] Sadly; pensively. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

MO'ODINESS.* n. s. [Sax. moꝺiᵹneꞅꞅe.] Indignation; vexation.

Such was the natural hatred of the sheep towards the dogs, and the implacable moodiness which they conceived to be hurried up and down, that they fell into an inward conceit of languor and despair; and so into flat disobedience, to abhor both their shepherds and the dogs, insomuch that when they were to be milked, and shorn, they hid themselves in woods and deserts. Transl. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 179.

MO'ODY.† adj. [from mood, Goth. modags, angry; Sax. moꝺiᵹ.]

1. Angry; out of humour.

How now, moody?
What is't thou canst demand? Shakspeare, Tempest.

Chide him reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth;
But being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

According to Milton's description of the first couple, as soon as they had fallen, and the turbulent passions of anger, hatred, and jealousy, first entered their breast; Adam grew moody. Tatler, No. 217.

Every peevish, moody malecontent
Shall set the senseless rabble in an uproar? Rowe.

2. Sad; pensive; melancholy. See also MOODILY.

Give me some musick; musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue,
But moody and dull melancholy? Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

3. Violent; furious; raging.

The malicious tiraunts of the worlde, with their madde moodye magistrates and slaves. Bale on the Revel. P. iii. (1550,) D. iiij.

In his moody madness, without just proof, did he openly excommunicat him. Fox, Acts and Mon. of Lord Cobham.

If we be English deer, be then in blood:
Not rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch;
But rather moody-mad and desperate stags,
Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

MOON.† n. s. [μηνη, Gr. mena, Gothick; mona, Saxon; mona, Icelandick; maane, Danish; mon, German; maen, Dutch. See the etymology of MONTH.]

1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phœbe.

The moon shines bright. 'twas such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakspeare.

Diana hath her name from moisten, which is the property of the moon, being by nature cold and moist, and is feigned to be a goddess huntress. Peacham.

Beneath the mighty ocean's wealthy caves,
Beneath the eternal fountain of all waves,
Where their vast court the mother waters keep,
And undisturb'd by moons, in silence sleep. Cowley.

Ye moon and stars bear witness to the truth! Dryden.

2. A month.

Since these arms of mine had seven years pith,
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have us'd
Their dearest action in the tented field. Shakspeare, Othello.

3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as, a half moon.

MOON-BEAM. n. s. [moon and beam.] Rays of lunar light.

The division and quavering, which please so much in musick, have an agreement with the glittering of light, as the moonbeams playing upon a wave. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver. Dryden on Dram. Poesy.

MOON-CALF. n. s. [moon and calf.]

1. A monster; a false conception; supposed perhaps anciently to be produced by the influence of the moon.

How cam'st thou to be the siege of this moon-calf. Shakspeare.

2. A dolt; a stupid fellow.

The potion works not on the part design'd,
But turns his brain, and stupifies his mind,
The sotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden, Juv.

MO'ONED.* adj. [from moon.]

1. Resembling the new moon.

While thus he spake, the angelick squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharpening in mooned horns
Their phalanx. Milton, P. L.

2. Having the title and character of the moon.

Peor and Baalim
Forsake their temples dim,
With that twice batter'd god of Palestine,
And mooned Ashtaroth,
Heaven's queen and mother both
Now sits not girt with tapers' holy shine. Milton, Ode Nativ.

MO'ONET.* n. s. [from moon.] A little moon.

Some lesser planets moving round about the sun, and the moonets about Saturn and Jupiter. Bp. Hall, Free Prisoner, § 2.

MOON-EYED.† adj. [moon and eye.]

1. Having eyes affected by the revolutions of the moon.

2. Dim eyed; purblind. Ainsworth.

So manifest, that e'en the moon-ey'd sect
See whom and what this providence protects. Dryden, Britan. Rediviva.

MOONFE'RN. n. s. [hemionitis.] A plant. Ainsworth.

MOON-FISH. n. s.

Moon-fish is so called, because the tail fin is shaped like a half moon, by which, and his odd trussed shape, he is sufficiently distinguished. Grew, Mus.

MO'ONISH.* adj. [from moon.] Like the moon: variable as the moon; flighty.

At which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking. Shakspeare, As you like it.

He tells you of a deluge and wonderful fraction that hath been in that world, [the moon,] much like the same which he hath represented unto us of our world; with several other such rare moonish inventions. Bp. H. Croft, Anim. on Burnet's Theory, (1685,) Pref.

MO'ONLESS.† adj. [from moon.] Not enlightened by the moon.

His angry eyne look all so glaring bright,
Like the hunted badger in a moonless night,
Or like a painted staring Saracen. Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden, Pal. and Arc

MO'ONLIGHT. n. s. [moon and light.] The light afforded by the moon.

Their bishop and his clergy, being departed from them by moonlight, to choose in his room any other bishop, had been altogether impossible. Hooker.

Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love. Shakspeare.

MO'ONLIGHT. adj. Illuminated by the moon.

If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us. Shakspeare.

What beck'ning ghost along the moonlight shade
Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade? Pope.

MO'ONLING.* n. s. [from moon.] A simpleton.

I have a husband, and a two-legg'd one;
But such a moonling, as no wit of man,
Or roses can redeem from being an ass. B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

MOON-SEED. n. s. [menispermum, Lat.]

The moon-seed hath a rosaceous flower: the pointal is divided into three parts at the top, and afterward becomes the fruit or berry, in which is included one flat seed, which is, when ripe, hollowed like the appearance of the moon. Miller.

MO'ONSHINE. n. s. [moon and shine.]

1. The lustre of the moon.

Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out. Shakspeare.

I, by the moonshine, to the windows went:
And, ere I was aware, sigh'd to myself. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. [In burlesque.] A month.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
Lag of a brother. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

MO'ONSHINE. } adj. [moon and shine.] Illuminated
MO'ONSHINY. } by the moon: both seem a popular corruption of moonshining.

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
You moonshine revellers, and shades of night. Shakspeare.

Although it was a fair moonshine night, the enemy thought not fit to assault them. Clarendon.

I went to see them in a moonshiny night. Addison.

MO'ONSTONE. n. s. A kind of stone. Ainsworth.

MO'ONSTRUCK. adj. [moon and struck.] Lunatick; affected by the moon.

Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moonstruck madness. Milton, P. L.

The moon-trefoil hath a plain orbiculated fruit, shaped like an half moon. Miller.

Mo'onwort.† n. s. [moon and wort.] Stationflower; honesty.

And I ha' been plucking (plants among)
Hemlock, henbane, adder's tongue,
Night shade, moonwort, libbards-bane. B. Jonson, Masques.

Mo'ony.† adj. [from moon.]

1. Denoting the moon.

Diana did begin, what mov'd me to invite
Your presence, sister deare, first to my moony sphere? Sidney, Arcad. b. 3.

2. Lunated; having a crescent for the standard resembling the moon.

The moony standards of proud Ottoman. Sylvester, Du. Bart. (1621,) p. 29.

Encountering fierce
The Solymean sultan, he o'erthrew
His moony troops, returning bravely smear'd
With Panim blood. Philips.

The Soldan galls the Illyrian coast;
But soon the miscreant moony host
Before the victor-cross shall fly. Fenton.

MOOR.† n. s. [moer, Teut. and Icel. mud, clay; maer, Swed. rotten earth.]

1. A marsh; a fen; a bog; a tract of low and watry grounds.

Let the marsh of Elsham Bruges tell,
What colour were their waters that same day,
And all the moor 'twixt Elversham and Dell. Spenser, F. Q.

While in her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor, it chanced that a London merchant passing by saw her, and liked her, begged her of her poor parents, and carried her to his home. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

In the great level near Thorny, several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor. Hale.

2. [Maurus, Latin; μαυρὸς, Gr. niger; more, Fr.] A negro; a blackamoor.

I shall answer that better than you can the getting up of the negro's belly; the moor is with child by you. Shakspeare.

To Moor. v. a. [morer, French.] To fasten by anchors or otherwise.

Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd at hand. Dryden.

To Moor. v. n. To be fixed by anchors; to be stationed.

Æneas gain'd Cajeta's bay:
At length on oozy ground his gallies moor,
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

My vessel, driv'n by a strong gust of wind,
Moor'd in a Chian creek. Addison, Ov.

He visited the top of Taurus and the famous Ararat, where Noah's ark first moored. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

To blow a Moor. [at the fall of a deer, corrupted from a mort, French.] To sound the horn in triumph, and call in the whole company of hunters. Ainsworth.

Mo'orcock.† n. s. [moor and cock.] The male of the moorhen.

Griev'd him to lurk the lakes beside,
Where coots in rushy dingles hide,
And moorcocks shun the day. Shenstone, Ode to Sir R. Lyttleton.

Mo'orgame.* n. s. [moor and game.] Red game; grouse.

A tract of land, so thinly inhabited, must have much wild fowl; and I scarcely remember to have seen a dinner without them. The moorgame is every where to be had. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

Mo'orhen. n. s. [moor and hen.] A fowl that feeds in the fens, without web feet.

Water fowls, as sea-gulls and moorhens, when they flock and fly together from the sea towards the shores, foreshew rain and wind. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Mo'orish.† adj. [from moor.]

1. Fenny; marshy; watry.

Misty, foggy air; such as comes from fens, moorish grounds, lakes, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 81.

No, Cæsar; they be pathless moorish minds,
That, being once made rotten with the dung
Of damned riches, ever after sink
Beneath the steps of any villainy. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

In the great level near Thorny, several oaks and firs have lain there till covered by the inundation of the fresh and salt waters, and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.

Along the moorish fens
Sighs the sad genius of the coming storm. Thomson.

2. Belonging to the Moors; denoting Moors. [Moresque, French.] Cotgrave.

Mo'orland. n. s. [moor and land.] Marsh; fen; watry ground.

In the south part of Staffordshire they go to the north for seed corn, and they of the north to the south, except in the moorlands. Mortimer, Husb.

Or like a bridge that joins a marish
To moorlands of a different parish. Swift.

Mo'orstone. n. s. A species of granite.

The third stratum is of great rocks of moorstone and sandy earth. Woodward on Fossils.

Mo'ory. adj. [from moor.] Marshy: fenny; watry.

The dust the fields and pastures covers,
As when thick mists arise from moory vales. Fairfax.

In Essex, moory-land is thought the most proper. Mortimer.

Moose.† n. s. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.

Are you still of opinion, that the American moose and European elk are the same creature? White's Selborne, p. 80.

To MOOT.† v. a. [from motian, mot, ȝemot, meeting together, Saxon; or perhaps, as it is a law term, from mot, French. Dr. Johnson. — It is certainly from the Sax. mot, ȝemot, a meeting together; motian, to treat of, as well as to meet together; the Gothick nations, as Dr. Jamieson observes, being accustomed to meet for the purpose of discussing publick concerns. Cowel, in his Law Dictionary, gives the Saxon etymon, but takes no notice of the needless French.] To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the inns of court at appointed times.

I meane the pleading used in courte and chancery called motes, where fyrst a case is appointed to be moted by certein young men, conteining some doubtful controversie. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 48.

A bad habit to moot cases on the supposed ruin of the constitution. Burke on the Discontents in 1770.

To Moot. v. n. To argue or plead upon a supposed cause in law.

There is a difference between mooting and pleading; between fencing and fighting. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Moot.* n. s. [from the verb.] Case to be disputed; point to be argued.

Orators have their declamations; lawyers have their moots. Bacon, Consid. on the Ch. of England.

But to end this moot: the law of Moses is manifest. Milton, Tetrachordon.

Moot case or point. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topick of disputation.

In this moot case your judgement to refuse,
Is present death. Dryden, Juv.

Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moot point, who understands nothing of our laws? Locke on Education.

Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moot point, whether I am more likely to make a master Bull, or you a master Strutt. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

Moot-hall.* } Moot-house. } n. s. [mot-hus, mot-heal, Saxon.] Council-chamber; hall of judgement; town-hall. See Mote. Yet used in the north of England.

He commaundide him to be kept in the moot-halle of Eroude. Wicliffe, Acts, xxiii.

Mo'oting.* n. s. [from moot.] The exercise of pleading a mock cause.

By that he hath heard one mooting, and seen two plays, he [an Inns-of-Court man] thinks as basely of the University, as a young sophister doth of the Grammar-school. Overbury, Charact. sign. K. 4.

Mo'oted. adj. Plucked up by the root. Ainsworth.

Mo'oter. n. s. [from moot.] A disputer of moot points.

MOP.† n. s. [moppa, Welsh; mappa, Latin.]

1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.

Such is that sprinkling which some careless quean
Flirts on you from her mop, but not so clean.
You fly, invoke the gods; then turning, stop
To rail; she singing still whirls on her mop. Swift.

2. [Perhaps corrupted from mock. Dr. Johnson. — Mock and mop were certainly used indifferently. Spenser has both mock and mow, and mop and mow. Nor is he singular in the seeming variation. See the edit. of Spenser, 1805, vol. 7. p. 30. But the Su. Goth. mopa, illudere, deludere, may possibly have given rise to our word.] A wry mouth or grin made in contempt.

Each one tripping on his toe
Will be here with mop and mow. Shakspeare, Tempest.

To Mop. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.

To Mop.† v. n. [from mock, or from the Su. Goth. mopa, illudere.] To make wry mouths or grin in contempt.

Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbididen, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Mohu, of murder; and Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since possesses chamber-maids. Shakspeare.

Marke but his countenance; see how he mops and how he mowes, and how he strains his looks. Rich, Faults and Nothing but Faults, (1606,) p. 7.

An ass fell a mopping and braying at a lion. L'Estrange.

To MOPE.† v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius thinks it to be in "mopa, deludere, pro stulto habere, Chron. Rythm. p. 288.;" and Ihre also notices the affinity between the Su. Goth. and our word.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant daydream; to be spiritless, unactive, and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious.

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers. Shakspeare.

Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Ev'n in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness. Milton, P. L.

The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind,
Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
Care only wakes, and moping pensiveness;
With meagre discontented looks they sit,
And watch the wasting of the midnight taper. Rowe.

To Mope.† v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.

Many men are undone by this means, moped, and so dejected, that they are never to be recovered. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 150.

They say there are charms in herbs, said he, and so threw a handful of grass; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped. L'Estrange.

It is doubtless a great disgrace to our religion to imagine, as too many superstitious Christians do, that it is an enemy to mirth and cheerfulness, and a severe exactor of pensive looks and solemn faces; that men are never serious enough till they are moped into statues, and cloistered from all society but that of their own melancholy thoughts. Scott, Christian Life, P. i. ch. 4.

Severity breaks the mind; and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke on Education.

Mope.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who is moped; a spiritless and inattentive person.

They have made, by their humouring or gulling, "ex stulto insanum," a mope or a noddy; and all to make themselves merry. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 149.

Mope-eyed.† adj. Blind of one eye, Dr. Johnson says, on the authority of Ainsworth, without any example. It means rather short-sighted, purblind, μύωψ, Greek. See Myopy.

He pitieth his simplicity, and returneth him for answer, that, if he be not mop-eyed, he may find the procession of the divine persons in his creed. Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, (1658,) p. 191.

Mo'pish.* adj. [from mope.] Spiritless; inattentive; dejected.

They generally sit down under crosses and afflictions, are exposed to contempt and shame, traduced as a sort of mopish and unsociable creatures. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 348.

Mo'pishness.* n. s. [from mopish.] Dejection; inactivity.

The recesses of the cloyster; the seats of mopishness, superstition, and bigotry. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 2.

He became very melancholy, and at length fell into a kind of mopishness or fatuity. Hist. R. S. iv. 501.

Mo'ppet. } Mo'psey. } n. s. [perhaps from mop.] A puppet made of rags, as a mop is made; a fondling name for a girl.

Our sovereign lady: made for a queen?
With a globe in one hand, and a sceptre in t' other?
A very pretty moppet! Dryden, Span. Friar.

Mo'pus. n. s. [A cant word from mope.] A drone; a dreamer.

I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes
But a rabble of tenants. Swift, Miscel.

MO'RAL. adj. [moral, French; moralis, Latin.]

1. Relating to the practice of men towards each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal; good or bad.

Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker.

Laws and ordinances positive he distinguisheth from the laws of the two tables, which were moral. Hooker.

In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide life, but in supernatural it alone guideth. Hooker.

Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,
Mankind is broken loose from moral bands;
No rights of hospitality remain,
The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain. Dryden.

2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land,
With plumed helm thy slay'r begins his threats,
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and criest. Shakspeare.

3. Popular; customary; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.

Physical and mathematical certainty may be stiled infallible; and moral certainty may properly be stiled indubitable. Wilkins.

We have found, with a moral certainty, the seat of the Mosaical abyss. Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson, Serm.

A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particulars which are contained under the universal subject. Watts, Logick.

MO'RAL. n. s.

1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life: this is rather a French than English sense.

Their moral and œconomy,
Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.

2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction; the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.

— Benedictus? why benedictus? you have some moral in this benedictus.
— Moral! No, by my troth I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy thistle. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shakspeare, Taming of the Shrew.

The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the ground-work of his instruction; this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable, but could do nothing that pleased me. Swift to Gay.

To MO'RAL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To moralize; to make moral reflections. Not in use.

When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shakspeare.

MO'RALER.* n. s. [from moral.] A moralizer. Not in use.

Come, you are too severe a moraler. Shakspeare, Othello.

MO'RALIST.† n. s. [moraliste, Fr.]

1. One who teaches the duties of life.

I have often heard my truly noble and most dear nephew, Sir Edmund Bacon, say, out of his exquisite contemplations and philosophical practice, that Nature surely, if she be well studied, is the best moralist, and hath much good counsel hidden in her bosom. Wotton on Education.

The advice given by a great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

2. A mere moral man.

The love (in the moralist of virtue, but in the Christian) of God himself. Hammond, Works, iv. 504.

How severely, though blindly, do they judge of men's hearts! Such a man is profane, another is carnal, and a meer moralist. South, Serm. vii. 286.

MORA'LITY.† n. s. [moralité, Fr. from moral.]

1. The doctrine of the duties of life; ethicks.

The system of morality, to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift, Miscell.

A necessity of sinning is as impossible in morality, as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Baker on Learning.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The morality of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South, Serm.

3. An old kind of drama; an allegorical play, in which the virtues and vices were personified. [moralités, old Fr.]

The moralities indicate dawnings of the dramatic art; they contain some rudiments of a plot, and even attempt to delineate characters, and to paint manners. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 242.

Even after the people had been accustomed to tragedies and comedies, moralities still kept their ground: one of them, entitled The New Custom, was printed so late as 1573: at length they assumed the name of Masques. Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Orig. of the Eng. Stage.

This [Hick-Scorner,] and every morality I have seen, conclude with a solemn prayer. Ibid.

MORALIZA'TION.* n. s. [from moralize.] Explanation in a moral sense.

It is the more commendable, and also commodious, if the players have read the moralization of the chess, and when they play do think upon it. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 81. b.

Annexed to the fable is a moralisation of twice the length in the octave stanza. Almost every narrative was antiently supposed or made to be allegorical, and to contain a moral meaning. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 417.

To MO'RALIZE.† v. a. [moraliser, Fr.]

1. To make moral. This primary meaning is overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

Good and bad stars moralize not our actions. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 7.

The goodness of these actions is never to be estimated merely by the degree of enthusiastick heat and ardor that is in them, but by such other laws and circumstances as moralize human actions. Cudworth, Serm. p. 93.

Those laws and circumstances which do moralise human actions, and render them reasonable, and holy, and good. Scott's Works, (ed. 1718,) ii. 129.

2. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He 'as left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.
— I pray thee moralize them. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.
Did he not moralize this spectacle?
— O yes, into a thousand similies. Shakspeare.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb. L'Estrange.

3. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Fierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize my song. Spenser, F. Q.

4. In Prior, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, if indeed it has any sense.

High as their trumpets tune his lyre he strung,
And with his prince's arms he moraliz'd his song. Prior.

To MO'RALIZE.† v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

When my friend was alone with me there, Isaac, said he, I know you come abroad only to moralize, and make observations. Tatler, No. 170.

MO'RALIZER.† n. s. [from moralize; Fr. moraliseur.] One who moralizes. Sherwood.

MO'RALLY. adv. [from moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally so called, bonum honestum, ought chiefly to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South, Serm.

Because this, of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of preparation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally. Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgement made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L'Estrange.

I am from the nature of the things themselves morally certain, and cannot make any doubt of it, but that a mind free from passion and prejudice is more fit to pass a true judgment than such a one as is byassed by affections and interests. Wilkins.

The concurring accounts of many such witnesses render it morally, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible that these things should be false. Atterbury, Serm.

Mo'rals. n. s. [without a singular.] The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their morals as vice could make them, have yet been solicitous to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up. South, Serm.

Learn then what morals criticks ought to shew:
'Tis not enough wit, art, and learning join;
In all you speak, let truth and candour shine. Pope.

MORA'SS.† n. s. [morais, French. Dr. Johnson. — Rather the Goth. marisaiws; whence moras, Su. stagnum. See Marsh. Our word was, in 1656, reckoned by P. Heylin new and uncouth.] Fen; bog; moor.

Landscapes point out the fairest and most fruitful spots, as well as the rocks, and wildernesses, and morasses of the country. Watts on the Mind.

Nor the deep morass
Refuse, but through the shaking wilderness
Pick your nice way. Thomson, Autumn.

Mora'ssy.* adj. [from morass.] Moorish; marshy; fenny.

The sides and top are covered with morassy earth. Pennant.

Mora'vian.* n. s. One of a religious sect of Moravian and Bohemian brethren, which was founded in the fifteenth century. In modern times, one of the united brethren, who are followers of Count Zinzendorf, a German nobleman; called also Herrnhuters. See Herrnhuter. The gross fanaticism of these persons, in some opinions and practices, has been warmly asserted; as have also their quiet demeanour, and their undaunted courage in communicating the light of revealed religion to the most remote and uncivilized parts of the world.

The Moravians who retired to Herrnhut, and who are the most inconsiderable part of the inhabitants of that village, have nothing common with the ancient Bohemian and Moravian brethren. Rimius, Narr. of the Herrnhuters, (1753,) p. 14.

A conformity has been shewn between Moravians and Papists. Bp. Lavington, Morav. Compared, (1755,) p. 177.

Mora'vian.* adj. Denoting, or belonging to, the sect of Moravians.

I thought it would answer the same purpose, should I consult the writings of the Moravian leaders. Rimius, Narrative, &c. Pref. p. 6.

MO'RBID. n. s. [morbidus, Lat.] Diseased; in a state contrary to health.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are there diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthnot.

Mo'rbidness. n. s. [from morbid.] State of being diseased.

Morbi'fical.† } adj. [morbus and facio, Latin; morbifique, Fr.] Causing diseases.
Morbi'fick. }

Some strange morbifical distemper of the air. Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. (1654,) p. 326.

Nothing but the removal of the feverish and morbifick matter within can carry off the distemper. South, Serm. vi. 311.

The air appearing so malicious in this morbifick conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard; wherefore initiate consumptives must change their air. Harvey on Consumptions.

This disease is cured by the critical resolution, concoction, and evacuation of the morbifick matter. Arbuthnot.

Morbo'se. adj. [morbosus, Lat.] Proceeding from disease; not healthy.

Malphighi, under galls, comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours and excrescences of plants. Ray on Creation.

Morbo'sity. n. s. [from morbosus, Lat.] Diseased state. A word not in use.

The inference is fair, from the organ to the action, that they have eyes, therefore some sight was designed, if we except the casual impediments or morbosities in individuals. Brown.

MORDA'CIOUS.† adj. [mordax, Lat.] Biting; apt to bite.

Many of these [composts] are not only sensibly hot, but mordacious and burning. Evelyn's Earth.

Morda'ciously.* adv. [from mordacious.] Bitingly; sarcastically.

Buchanan, a learned though violent Scot, has mordaciously taunted this tradition. Waterhous on Fortescue, p. 201.

Morda'city.† n. s. [mordacitas, Lat. mordacité, Fr. from mordax, Lat.] Biting quality.

It is to be enquired, whether there be any menstruum to dissolve any metal that is not fretting or corroding, and openeth the body by sympathy, and not by mordacity, or violent penetration. Bacon.

It's [the serpent's] rancorous venom, its keen mordacity. Barrow, Works, i. 46.

Mo'rdicancy.* n. s. [from mordicant.] Biting quality.

The mordicancy thus allayed, be sure to make the mortar clean. Evelyn, Acet. § 57.

Mo'rdicant. adj. [mordeo, Lat. mordicant, Fr.] Biting; acrid.

He presumes, that the mordicant quality of bodies must proceed from a fiery ingredient; whereas the light and inflammable parts must be driven away by that time the fire has reduced the body to ashes. Boyle.

Mordica'tion. n. s. [from mordicant.] The act of corroding or biting.

Another cause is mordication of the orifices, especially of the mesentery veins; as any thing that is sharp and biting doth provoke the part to expel, and mustard provoketh sneezing. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MORE.† adj. [mape, Saxon; the comparative of some or great. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Tooke views the Sax. mope, a heap, as the radical word; supposing the Sax. ma, Engl. mo, to be the positive, Sax. mape, Engl. more, the comparative, and Sax. mæſt, Engl. most, the superlative. But not to say that mope does not seem to have been used to denote quantity in general, or applied to persons, the hypothesis labours under several considerable difficulties. The first is, that mo never occurs in Saxon, but always ma; which has been corruptly changed in later times into mo, like many other words originally written with a. But besides this, the Sax. ma is as really a comparative as mare, both being used adverbially in the sense of plus, magis. As an adjective, mare properly denotes superiority in size, or in quality, major; ma, superiority in number, as plures. This word, even as changed into mo, has been always used in the same manner. Dr. Jamieson, in V. Ma.]

1. In greater quantity; in greater degree.

Wrong not that wrong with more contempt. Shakspeare.

These kind of knaves in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends
Than twenty silky ducking observants. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Their riches were more than that they might dwell together. Gen. xxxvi. 7.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour. Exod. v. 9.

Then crown my joys, or cure my pain;
Give me more love, or more disdain. Carew.

2. In greater number. [The comparative of some or many.]

He had so many languages in store,
That only fame shall speak of him in more. Cowley.

3. Greater. Now out of use.

Of India the more and the less. Mandeville.

Both more and less have given him the revolt. Shakspeare.

The more part advised to depart. Acts, xxvi. 12.

4. Added to some former number.

One more citizen to sybil give. Dryden.

I'm tir'd of rhyming, and would fain give o'er,
But Montague demands one labour more. Addison.

Great Dryden's friends before,
With open arms receiv'd one poet more. Pope.

MORE. adv.

1. To a greater degree.

He loved Rachel more than Leah. Gen. xxix. 30.

The spirits of animate bodies are all, in some degree, more or less kindled. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some were of opinion, that feeling more and more in himself the weight of time, he was not unwilling to bestow upon another some part of the pains. Wotton.

The more the kindled combat rises higher,
The more with fury burns the blazing fire. Dryden, Æn.

As the blood passeth through narrower channel, the redness disappears more and more. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The more God has blessed any man with estate or quality, just so much less in proportion is the care he takes in the education of his children. Swift, Miscell.

2. The particle that forms the comparative degree.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

May you long live a happy instrument for your king and country: happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

The advantages of learning are more lasting than those of arms. Collier on Pride.

3. Again; a second time.

Little did I think I should ever have business of this kind on my hands more. Tatler.

4. Longer; yet continuing: with the negative particle.

Cassius is no more! Oh, setting sun!
As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set. Shakspeare.

MORE. n. s. [A kind of comparative from some or much.]

1. A greater quantity; a greater degree. Perhaps some of the examples which are adduced under the adverb, with the before more, should be placed here; but I rather think the more to be adverbial.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
And my more having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

An heroick poem requires some great action of war; and as much or more of the active virtue than the suffering. Dryden.

The Lord do so, and much more, to Jonathan. 1 Sam.

From hence the greatest part of ills descend,
When lust of getting more will have no end. Dryden.

They that would have more and more can never have enough; no, not if a miracle should interpose to gratify their avarice. L'Estrange.

A mariner having let down a large portion of his sounding line, he reaches no bottom, whereby he knows the depth to be so many fathoms and more; but how much that more is, he hath no distinct notion. Locke.

2. Greater thing; other thing.

They, who so state a question, do no more but separate the parts of it one from another, and lay them so in their due order. Locke.

3. Second time; longer time.

They steer'd their course to the same quiet shore,
Not parted long, and now to part no more. Pope.

4. It is doubtful whether the word, in this use, be a noun or adverb.

The dove returned not again unto him any more. Gen. viii.

Pr'ythee be satisfy'd; he shall be aided,
Or I'll no more be king. Dryden, Cleom.

Delia, the queen of love, let all deplore!
Delia, the queen of beauty, is now no more. Walsh.

To MORE.* To make more. Obsolete.

What he will make more, he moreth. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

MORE.* n. s. [Sax. mop, a mountain.]

1. A hill. North. Hence the Staffordshire morelands or morlands. See Mor[illegible]

2. A root. [Sax. mopan, baccæ, Semina. Somner.] Used in Glocestershire; as a moring-axe is for an axe to grub up the roots of trees. Grose.

"Tenne thousand mores of sundry scent and hew."
Spens. F. Q vi. vii. 10. In Hughes's edition 'tis spelt more. We use the word mores in the west of England for roots, &c. Upton, Note on Spenser

MORE'EN.* n. s. A kind of stuff used for curtains and bed-hangings.

MORE'L.† n. s. [solanum, Latin; Fr. morille; from μαυρὸς, Gr. black. Littleton.]

1. A plant, of which there are several species: when the flower sheds there succeeds a spherical fruit, pretty hard, at first green like an olive, then black, full of a limpid juice, and a great number of seeds. Trevoux.

Spungy morels in strong ragousts are found,
And in the soup the slimy snail is drown'd. Gay, Trivia.

2. A kind of cherry.

Morel is a black cherry, fit for the conservatory before it be thorough ripe, but it is bitter eaten raw. Mortimer.

MO'RELAND. n. s. [mopland, Saxon; mop, a mountain, and land.] A mountainous or hilly country: a tract of Staffordshire is called the Morlands, from being hilly.

MO'RENESS.* n. s. [from more.] Greatness. Obsolete. See the third sense of the adjective more.

Moreness of Christ's vicars is not measured by worldly moreness. Wicliffe, Lett. in Lewis's Life of W. p. 284.

MOREO'VER. adv. [more and over.] Beyond what has been mentioned; besides; likewise; also; over and above.

Moreover he hath left you all his walks. Shakspeare.

He did hold me dear
Above this world; adding thereto, moreover,
That he would wed me, or else die my lover. Shakspeare.

Moreover by them is thy servant warned. Psal. xix. 11.

MORE'SK.* adj. [moresque, Fr. from Maurus, Lat.] Done after the manner of the Moors; a term applied to a kind of antique carving and painting; "moresk work, fueillage moresque." See Cotgrave in V. MORESQUE. It is oftener written morisco.

They trim it with paint after the morisco manner. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 129.

A piece of as good Morisco work as any I had yet seen. Swinburne, Trav. L. 31.

MO'RGLAY.† n. s. A deadly weapon. Ainsworth. Glaive and morte, French, and glay môhr, Erse, a two-handed broad-sword, which some centuries ago was the Highlander's weapon.

A trusty morglay in a rusty sheath. Cleaveland, Poems, &c. p. 15.

To MORI'GERATE.* v. n. [morigero, Lat. from mores and gero; morigerare, Ital.] To do as one is commanded; to obey. This pedantick word is in the old vocabulary of Cockeram, and was probably in use. Bacon, we see, considered morigeration as a serviceable word. And Dr. Johnson thought fit to give morigerous, though without any authority; which, however, is in the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor in 1656.

MORIGERA'TION.* n. s. [morigeratio, Lat.] Obedience: obsequiousness.

Not that I can tax or condemn the morigeration or application of learned men to men in fortune. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 1.

Courtesy and morigeration will gain mightily upon them. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 59

Mori'gerous.† adj. [moriger, Lat.] Obedient; obsequious; civil. Bullokar.

Mo'rion. n. s. [Fr.] A helmet; armour for the head; a casque.

For all his majesty's ships a proportion of swords, targets, morions, and cuiras of proof should be allowed. Ralegh.

Polish'd steel that cast the view aside,
And crested morions with their plumy pride. Dryden.

Mori'sco.† } Mo'risk. } n. s. [morisco, Span. morisque, old Fr.]

1. The Moorish language.

He, leaping in first of all, set hand to his falchion, and said in morisco, Let none of you that are here stir. — The Moors, hearing their master say so, were marvellously amazed. Shelton, D. Quixote, iv. 14.

2. A dance after the manner of the Moors, often written morris, but sometimes more properly morice. Morisco, morisk, morice, seems an easy deduction; though mores is also an old word for Moorish.

To this purpose were taken up at Rome these foreign exercises of vaulting and dancing the moriske. Hakewill on Providence, p. 365.

The lady and her companions, attended with musick and a morisco-dance of men. Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 149.

3. A dancer of the morris or moorish-dance.

I have seen him
Caper upright like a wild morisco,
Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bells. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

Your wit skips a morisco. Marston, What you will, (1607.)

Mori'sco.* adj. Applied to carving and painting. See Moresk.

Mo'rkin.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson cites this word from Bailey, without etymology or example. The word is old; and agrees with the Swedish murken, rotten, from murkna, to rot.] A wild beast, dead through sickness or mischance.

Not a wild beast alone, but a sheep, deer, —
Some sorry morkin that unbidden dies. Bp. Hall, Sat.

Mo'rling. } Mo'rtling. } n. s. [mort, French.] Wool plucked from a dead sheep. Ainsworth.

MO'RMO.† n. s. [ἡ μορμὼ.] Bugbear; false terrour.

The belief of a judgement day is no panick fear, or melancholy dream: 'tis no trick of politicians, or mormo of priests to fright fools and keep the world in awe, but a truth as certain and undoubted as the oracles of truth can make it. Glanville, Serm. p. 306.

All the rest is phlegmaticly passed over with a "simul, id quod, &c." as only the mormos and bugbears of a frighted rabble. Warburton on Prodigies, p. 80.

MORN.† n. s. [Goth. maurgins; Icel. morgen, myrgen; Sax. moргen, meрgen, meрen, meрne, maрne, moрne. Mr. H. Tooke derives this substantive from the Goth. merjan, Sax. meррan, mẏррan, to spread abroad, to dissipate, to scatter; "morrow therefore and morn (the former being the past tense of mẏррan, with the addition of the participial termination en,) have both the same meaning, viz. dissipated, dispersed. And whenever either of those words is used by us, clouds or darkness are understood; whose dispersion, or the time when they are dispersed, it expresses." Div. of Purl. ii. 214. Dr. Jamieson views the Gothick maurgins as allied to the verb maurgjan, to shorten; as the dawn of morning shortens the reign of darkness, or cuts off the night. The term is used by Ulph. St. Mark, xiii. 20. he adds, expressly with respect to time: "gamurgida thans dagans," he hath shortened the days: the days referred to are those of darkness in a figurative sense.' Mr. Tooke's is the more natural deduction. And thus the Latin mane has been traced to the Greek μανὸν, clear, which is from the verb μανόω, to rarify, to make clear. I may further observe the concurrent sentiment of our great poet, in the morning hymn of Adam and Eve:

"If the night
"Have gather'd aught of evil, or conceal'd,
"Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark."]

The first part of the day; the morning. Morn is not used but by the poets.

The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat,
Awake the god of day. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Can you forget your golden beds,
Where you might sleep beyond the morn. Lee.

Friendship shall still thy evening feasts adorn,
And blooming peace shall ever bless thy morn. Prior.

Mo'rning.† n. s. [moрgen, Sax. but our morning seems rather to come from morn. Dr. Johnson. — Mẏррende is the regular present participle of mẏррan; for which we had formerly morewende. The present participial termination ende is, in modern English, always converted to ing. Hence morewing, morwing, and by an easy corruption morning. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 215. See Morn.] The first part of the day, from the first appearance of light to the end of the first fourth part of the sun's daily course.

One master Brook hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

By the second hour in the morning
Desire the earl to see me. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Morning by morning shall it pass over. Isa. xxviii. 19.

What shall become of us before night, who are weary so early in the morning? Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

The morning is the proper part of the day for study. Dryden.

Every morning sees her early at her prayers, she rejoices in the beginning of every day, because it begins all her pious rules of holy living, and brings the fresh pleasures of repeating them. Law.

Mo'rning. adj. Being in the early part of the day.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakspeare.

Your goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. Hos. vi. 5.

Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light. 1 Sam. xiv. 36.

The twining jessamine and blushing rose,
With lavish grace their morning scents disclose. Prior.

All the night they stem the liquid way,
And end their voyage with the morning ray. Pope, Odyss.

Mo'rning-gown. n. s. A loose gown worn before one is formally dressed.

Seeing a great many in rich morning gowns, he was amazed to find that persons of quality were up so early. Addison.

Mo'rning-star. n. s. The planet Venus when she shines in the morning.

Bright as doth the morning-star appear,
Out of the East, with flaming locks bedight,
To tell the dawning day is drawing near. Spenser, F. Q.

Moro'cco.* n. s. A fine sort of leather, of various colours; the preparation of which is said to have been borrowed from the kingdom of Morocco. The word is sometimes written like the French term, marroquin.

MORO'SE.† adj. [morosus, Latin. Dr. Johnson.—This word is not of great age in our language. Dr. Johnson has found no earlier usage of it than that in the example from Addison. I find it nearly in the Latin form, morosous, in 1616; and in 1662, morose; employed by the authors for ungovernable.]

1. Ungovernable; licentious. Not now in use.

Daily experience either of often lapses, or morosous desires. Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 201.

In this commandment are forbidden all that feeds this sin, [adultery,] or are incentives to it; as luxurious diet; inflaming wines; an idle life; morose thoughts, that dwell in the fancy with delight. Bp. Nicholson, Expos. of the Catechism, (1662,) p. 123.

2. Sour of temper; peevish; sullen.

Without these precautions, the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impertinent. Addison, Spect.

Some have deserved censure for a morose and affected taciturnity, and others have made speeches, though they had nothing to say. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

Moro'sely. adv. [from morose.] Sourly; peevishly.

Too many are as morosely positive in their age, as they were childishly so in their youth. Gov. of the Tongue.

Moro'seness. n. s. [from morose.] Sourness; peevishness.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness mingle with our serious frame of mind. Nelson.

Learn good humour, never to oppose without just reason; abate some degrees of pride and moroseness. Watts.

Moro'sity.† n. s. [morosité, Fr. Cotgrave; morositas, Latin; from morose.] Moroseness; sourness; peevishness.

Why then be sad,
But entertain no morosity, brothers, other
Than a joint burthen laid upon us. Shakspeare.

This morosity and sullenness is far from being imitable and laudable. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653,) p. 294.

Some morosities
We must expect, since jealousy belongs
To age, of scorn, and tender sense of wrongs. Denham.

The pride of this man, and the popularity of that; the levity of one, and the morosity of another. Clarendon.

Is not a morosity and singularity in such things often made a veil and cover of licentiousness in greater things? Sprat, Serm. (1677,) p. 16.

MO'RPHEW.† n. s. [morphée, French; morphæa, low Lat. morfea, Ital.] A scurf on the face.

We shall then see the shameful wrinkles and foul morpheus of our soul. Bp. Hall, Fall of Pride.

To Mo'rphew. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with scurf.

And sullen rags bewray his morphew'd skin. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 5.

The face that was fair, is now distorted and morphewed. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

Mo'rris.† } Mo'rris-dance. } n. s. [that is moorish or morisco-dance.

1. A dance in which bells are gingled, or staves or swords clashed, which was learned by the Moors, and was probably a kind of Pyrrhick or military dance.

The queen stood in some doubt of a Spanish invasion, though it proved but a morris-dance upon our waves. Wotton.

One in his catalogue of a feigned library, sets down this title of a book, The morris-dance of hereticks. Bacon.

The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove,
Now to the moon in wavering morrice move. Milton, Comus.

I took delight in pieces that shewed a country village, morrice-dancing, and peasants together by the ears. Peacham.

The vulgar sort [of Persians] delight in morrice-dancing. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 304.

The dithyrambus was a kind of extatick morice-dance. Stillingfleet, Orig. Sac. ii. 4.

Four reapers danced a morrice to oaten pipes. Spectator.

2. Nine mens' Morris. A kind of play with nine holes in the ground. It is called also merils, and five-penny morris. The game is played with stones in England, but in France with pawns or men made on purpose, called merelles, which Mr. Tollet thinks "to have been originally black, and therefore so termed; as we call a black cherry a morello, and a small black cherry a merry; perhaps from Maurus, a moor, or rather from morum, a mulberry."

The folds stand empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrain flock;
The nine mens' morris is filled up with mud. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Nine mens' morris is a game still played by the shepherds, cowkeepers, &c. in the midland counties, as follows: A figure (of squares, one within another,) is made on the ground by cutting out the turf; and two persons take each nine stones, which they place by turns in the angles, and afterwards move alternately, as at chess or draughts. He who can play three in a straight line may then take off any one of his adversary's, where he pleases, till one, having lost all his men, loses the game. Alchorne, Note on Shakspeare.

Mo'rris-dancer. n. s. [morris and dance.] One who dances à la moresca, the moorish dance.

There went about the country a set of morris-dancers, composed of ten men, who danced a maid marian and a tabor and pipe. Temple.

Mo'rris-pike.* n. s. [morris and pike.] A Moorish pike; a formidable weapon used by the Moors.

He that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a morris-pike. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

The English mariners laid about them with brown-bills, halberts, and morrice-pikes. Reynard, Deliv. of cert. Christians from the Turks.

Mo'rrow.† n. s. [See the etymon of Morn. The original meaning of morrow seems to have been morning, which being often referred to on the preceding day, was understood in time to signify the whole day next following.]

1. The morning: the primary meaning.

Upon a morow tide. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.

Tho when appeared the third morrow bright
Upon the waves to spread her trembling light,
An hideous roring far away they heard. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 2.

She's white as morrow's milk, or flakes new blown. Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 7.

The pale rose her colour lost renews
With the fresh drops fall'n from the silver morrow. Fairfax, Tass. xx. 129.

I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
To have 't with saying, good morrow. Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. The day after the present day.

Thou
Canst pluck night from me but not lend a morrow. Shakspeare.

The Lord did that thing on the morrow. Exod. ix. 6.

Peace, good reader, do not weep,
Peace, the lovers are asleep;
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with the light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crashaw.

To morrow you will live, you always cry,
In what far country doth this morrow lie?
That 'tis so mighty long e'er it arive:
Beyond the Indies does this morrow live?
'Tis so far fetch'd this morrow, that I fear
'Twill be both very old and very dear.

To morrow will I live, the fool does say,
To day itself's too late, the wise liv'd yesterday. Cowley.

3. To Mo'rrow. [This is an idiom of the same kind, supposing morrow to mean originally morning: as, to night: to day.] On the day after this current day.

To morrow comes; 'tis noon; 'tis night;
This day like all the former flies;
Yet on he runs to seek delight
To morrow, till to night he dies. Prior.

4. To morrow is sometimes, I think improperly, used as a noun.

Our yesterday's to morrow now is gone,
And still a new to morrow does come on.
We by to morrows draw out all our store,
Till the exhausted well can yield no more. Cowley.

To morrow is the time when all is to be rectified. Spectator.

Morse. n. s. [phoca.] A sea-horse.

That which is commonly called a sea-horse is properly called a morse, and makes not out that shape. Brown.

It seems to have been a tusk of the morse or waltron, called by some the sea-horse. Woodward on Fossils.

Mo'rsel.✝ n. s. [morsellus, low Lat. from morsus. Dr. Johnson.—We have the word from the ancient French morsel or morcel.]

1. A piece fit for the mouth; a mouthful.

Yet cam'st thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully din'd before. Shakspeare, Coriol.

And me his parent would full soon devour
For want of other prey, but knows that I Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane. Milton, P. L.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South, Serm.

He boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish. Dryden.

A wretch is prisoner made,
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the ravenous foe
In morsels cut to make it farther go. Tate, Juv.

A letter to the keeper of the lion requested that it may be the first morsel put into his mouth. Addison.

2. A piece; a meal.

On these herbs, and fruits and flowers,
Feed first; on each beast next, and fish and fowl,
No homely morsels! Milton, P. L.

A dog crossing a river with a morsel of flesh in his mouth, saw, as he thought, another dog under the water, upon the very same adventure. L'Estrange.

The mort o'the deer; oh, that is entertainment
My bosom likes not. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. [morgt, Icelandick.] A great quantity. Not in elegant use, but preserved colloquially in many parts.

3. A salmon in the third year of its growth, so called by fishermen in some parts of England.

MO'RTAL. adj. [mortalis, Lat. mortel, Fr.]

1. Subject to death; doomed sometime to die.

Nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I her frail son amongst my brethren mortal
Must give my attendance to. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor. xv. 53.

Heavenly powers, where shall we find such love!
Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
Man's mortal crime, and just, the unjust to save. Milton, P. L.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress'd, inevitably thou shalt die;
From that day mortal: and this happy state
Shalt lose. Milton, P. L.

2. Deadly; destructive; procuring death.

Come all you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of cruelty. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The mortalest poisons practised by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Bacon.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world and all our woe. Milton, P. L.

When I saw her die,
I then did think on your mortality. Carew.

I point out mistakes in life and religion, that we might guard against the springs of error, guilt, and sorrow, which surround us in every state of mortality. Watts, Logick.

2. Death.

I beg mortality
Rather than life preserv'd with infamy. Shakspeare.

Gladly would I meet
Mortality my sentence. Milton, P. L.

3. Power of destruction.

Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

4. Frequency of death.

The rise of keeping those accounts, first began in the year 1592, being a time of great mortality. Graunt.

5. Human nature.

A single vision so transports them, that it makes up the happiness of their lives; mortality cannot bear it often. Dryden.

Take these tears, mortality's relief,
And till we share your joys, forgive our grief. Pope.

To Mo'rtalize.* v. a. [from mortal.] To make mortal.

We know you're flesh and blood as well as men,
And, when we will, can mortalize and make you so again.
A. Brome.

1. Irrecoverably; to death.

In the battle of Landen you were not only dangerously, but in all appearance mortally wounded. Dryden.

2. Extremely; to extremity. A low ludicrous word.

Adrian mortally envied poets, painters, and artificers, in works wherein he had a vein to excel. Bacon, Essays.

Know all, who would pretend to my good grace,
I mortally dislike a damning face. Granville.

Mo'rtar.† n. s. [moꞃꞇeꞃe, Saxon; mortarium, Lat. mortier, Fr.]

1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.

Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possiblity of an holy war. Bacon.

The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the comminution of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar. Ray on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon, out of which bombs are thrown.

Those arms, which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time on antique stone engrav'd,
Now torn by mortars stand yet undefac'd
On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd. Granville.

Mo'rtar. n. s. [morter, Dutch; mortier, French.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick. Wolfius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is washed in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great errour in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be used.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Tkey had brick for stone, and slime for morter. Gen. xi. 3.

Lime hot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.

Mo'rter.* n. s. [mortier, Fr. Cotgrave.] A lamp or light; a chamber-lamp.

By that morter which that I see brenne,
Know I ful wel that day is not far henne.

To MO'RTIFY.† v. a. [mortifier, French.]

1. To destroy vital qualities.

If of the stem the frost mortify any part, cut it off.
Evelyn, B. ii. ch. i. § 3.

2. To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.

What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification, as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine or spittle. Bacon.

He mortified pearls in vinegar, and drunk them up. Hakewill.

Oil of tartar per deliquium has a great faculty to find out and mortify acid spirits. Boyle.

3. To subdue inordinate passions.

The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Suppress thy knowing pride,
Mortify thy learned lust,
Vain are thy thoughts, while thou thyself art dust. Prior.

He modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride. Swift.

4. To macerate or harass, in order to reduce the body to compliance with the mind.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Excite the mortified man. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

We mortify ourselves with fish, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from flesh. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Mortify'd he was to that degree,
A poorer than himself he would not see. Dryden.

With fasting mortify'd, worn out with tears,
And bent beneath the load of seventy years. Harte.

5. To humble; to depress; to vex.

Let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakspeare.

He is controuled by a nod, mortified by a frown, and transported by a smile. Addison, Guardian.

How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise so high as he thinks they ought. Addison, Spect.

To MO'RTIFY. v. n.

MO'RTPAY. n. s. [mort and pay.] Dead pay; payment not made.

This parliament was merely a parliament of war, with some statutes conducing thereunto; as the severe punishing of mortpayes, and keeping back of soldiers' wages. Bacon.

MO'RTRESS. n. s. [from mortier de sagesse, Fr. Skinner.] A dish of meat of various kinds beaten together.

A mortress made with the brawn of capons, stamped, strained, and mingled with like quantity of almond butter, is excellent to nourish the weak. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MO'RTUARY.† n. s. [mortuaire, French; mortuarium, Latin.]

1. A burial-place. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson, or any of our lexicographers. See also the adjective mortuary.

Look on thy full table as a mortuary of the dispeopled elements; where their slain are huddled up. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654,) p. 36.

2. A gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the recompence of his personal tithes and offerings not duly paid in his life-time. Harris. — Mortuaries are a kind of ecclesiastical heriots, being a customary gift claimed by and due to the minister in very many parishes on the death of his parishioners. They seem to have been originally, like lay heriots, only a voluntary bequest to the church. Blackstone.

MO'RTUARY.* adj. [mortuaire, Fr.] Belonging to the burial of the dead.

Near the pyramids and mortuary caves. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 323.

MOSA'ICAL.† } adj. [mosaique, Fr. supposed to be MOSA'ICK. } corrupted from musæus, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Mosaick work, the opus musæum of the Latins; Gr. Barb. μῆσα, tessella variè picturata; whence μησάκιον, musaicum, mosaicum. V. Meursii Gloss.] Mosaick is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cockles, and shells of sundry colours; and of late days likewise with pieces of glass figured at pleasure; an ornament in truth, of much beauty, and long life, but of most use in pavements and floorings. Wotton, Architecture.

The trees were to them [the flowers] a pavilion, and they to the trees a mosaical floor. Sidney, Arcad. b. 1.

Each beauteous flower,
Iris all hues, roses, and jessamin,
Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought

The most remarkable remnant of it is a very beautiful mosaick pavement, the finest I have ever seen in marble; the parts are so well joined together, that the whole piece looks like a continued picture. Addison on Italy.

MOSA'ICAL.* } adj. Denoting the writings or law of MOSA'ICK. } Moses.

For his acquaintance with the Mosaical learning, as it is more credible in itself, so I have also better proof. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 188.

The Mosaick sacrifices were types (and by both the dispensations of the Law and Gospel declared to be so) of the great vicarious sacrifice of the cross. Warburton, Div. Leg. ix. 2.

MO'SCHATEL. n. s. [moschatellina, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

In this mosque we saw several large incense-pots, candlesticks for altars, and other church-furniture, being the spoils of Christian churches at the taking of Cyprus.
Maundrel, Trav. p. 14.

MOSS.† n. s. [muscus, Latin; meoſ, Saxon.]

1. A plant.

Though moss was formerly supposed to be only an excrescence produced from the earth and trees, yet it is no less a perfect plant than those of greater magnitude, having roots, flowers, and seeds, yet cannot be propagated from seeds by any art: the botanists distinguish it into many species: it chiefly flourishes in cold countries, and in the winter season, and is many times very injurious to fruit trees: the only remedy in such cases, is to cut down part of the trees, and plough up the ground between those left remaining; and in the spring, in moist weather, you should with an iron instrument scrape off the moss. Miller.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees; but it may be better sorted as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining oziers fenc'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.

Such mosses as grow upon walls, roofs of houses, and other high places have seeds that, when shaken out of their vessels, appear like vapour or smoke. Ray on the Creation.

2. A morass, or boggy place. [mossa, Su. Goth. mussa, low Lat.] Still used in the north of England.

In many of the mosses of the West Riding of Yorkshire are often dug up birch-trees. Evelyn, 1. ch. xvii. § 2.

The justices of Northumberland and Cumberland may make order in sessions for charging the respective counties for securing the same against the moss-troopers; that is, thieves and robbers, who, after having committed offences in the borders, do escape through the wastes and mosses. Stat. 13 & 14 Ch. II. c. 22.

To MOSS. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with moss.

An oak whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

Will these moss'd trees,
That have out-liv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out? Shakspeare, Timon.

MOSS-GROWN.* adj. Covered or overgrown with moss.

The moss-grown domes with spiry turrets crown'd.

And all inferiour beauteous things. Cowley.

The mossy fountains and the sylvan shades
Delight no more. Pope, Messiah.

MOST.† adj. the superlative of more. [mæſt, Saxon; meest, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Tooke has charged Junius with saying untruly that most is formed from the positive mæpe, having mæpne as the comparative, and mæpeſt, by contraction mæſt, as the superlative. But candour required that this singularity in the Saxon should have been mentioned, that mæpe is used both as a positive, magnus, and a comparative, major; while mæpeſt is the superlative. It does not appear, indeed, that this is the origin of mæſt, which occurs in the simple form of maists, M. Goth. from the comparative maiza. Dr. Jamieson in V. MA. And thus Serenius deduces most; M. Goth. maiza, maists; Icel. meire, moire, moist, most, major, maximus.]

Throw your distemper'd weapons to the ground
And hear the sentence of your moved prince. Shakspeare.

7. To put into commotion.

When they were come to Bethlehem, all the city was moved about them. Ruth, i. 19.

8. To incite; to produce by incitement.

Then feed on thoughts, that voluntary move
Harmonious numbers. Milton, P. L.

9. To conduct regularly in motion.

They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute
Days, months, and years, tow'rds his all chearing lamp,
Turn swift their various motions. Milton, P. L.

To MOVE. v. n.

1. To be in a state of changing place; not to rest.

Whether heaven move or earth
Imports not, if thou reckon right. Milton, P. L.

The senses represent the earth as immovable; for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glanville.

2. To have a particular direction of passage.

The sun
Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat. Milton, P. L.

3. To go from one place to another.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say a moving grove. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

On the green bank I sat and listen'd long,
Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryden.

This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.

When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move, but seems to be a perfect entire circle of that matter. Locke.

The goddess moves
To visit Paphos, and her blooming groves. Pope, Odyss.

4. To have vital action.

In him we live, move, and have our being. Acts, xvii. 28.
Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you. Gen.

He moves with manly grace, how rich with regal spoils. Dryden, Æn.

6. To march as an army.

Anon they move
In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood. Milton, P. L.

7. To go forward.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium. Dryden, Æn.

8. To change the posture of the body in ceremony.

When Haman saw Mordecai that he stood not up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation. Esth. v. 9.

MOVE. n. s. The act of moving, commonly used at chess.

I saw two angels play'd the mate;
With man alas no otherwise it proves,
An unseen hand makes all their moves. Cowley.

MO'VELESS. adj. Unmoved; not to be put out of the place.

The lungs, though untouched, will remain moveless as to any expansion or contraction of their substance. Boyle.

The Grecian phalanx, moveless as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet resists his pow'r. Pope, Iliad.

MO'VEMENT. n. s. [mouvement, French.]

1. Manner of moving.

What farther relieves descriptions of battles, is the art of introducing pathetick circumstances about the heroes, which raise a different movement in the mind, compassion and pity. Pope, Ess. on Homer.

Under workmen are expert enough at making a single wheel in a clock, but are utterly ignorant how to adjust the several parts, or regulate the movement. Swift.

2. Motion.

Could he whose laws the rolling planets bind,
Describe or fix one movement of the mind,

Kon-

Is thy name mouldy?
— Yea.
— 'Tis the more time thou wert used.
— Ha, ha, ha; most excellent. Things that are mouldy lack use. Well said, Sir John. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The marble looks white, as being exposed to the winds and salt sea-vapours, that by continually fretting it preserve it from that mouldy colour which others contract. Addison.

To MOULT.† v. n. [muyten, Teut. Thus our own word at first was mout or mowt; from muto, Lat. to change. "To mowten as fowlis, plumeo." Prompt. Parv.] To shed or change the feathers; to lose feathers.

Some birds upon moulting turn colour, as Robin-red-breasts, after their moulting, grow to be red again by degrees. Bacon.

Time shall moult away his wings,
Ere he shall discover
In the wide whole world again
Such a constant lover. Suckling.

The widow'd turtle hangs her moulting wings,
And to the woods in mournful murmur sings. Garth.

MOUN.* May; must. See MOWT.

To MOUNCH.† } v. a. [mouch, to eat much. Ainsworth.
To MAUNCH. } This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the obtunded action of toothless gums on a hard crust, or any thing eatable: it seems to be a corruption of the French word manger. Macbean, and Dr. Johnson. — It may be from the Fr. macher, or mascher, to chew; obvious at least in mouch, as this word was also written; and as it is yet in some places pronounced. But they are all to be referred to the Lat. mando, to eat. See MOUTH.] To chew; to masticate.

Some of them would mouche their meate alone. Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. i. 915.

A sailor's wife had chesnuts in her lap,
And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht. Shakspeare, Mach.

MOUND.† n. s. [munðian, Saxon, to defend. Dr. Johnson. — Goth. mund, Sueth. mynd, tutela; Icel. mynda, tueri; mund, manus. Serenius.] Any thing raised to fortify or defend: usually a bank of earth and stone.

His broad branches, laden with rich fee,
Did stretch themselves without the utmost bound
Of this great garden, compass'd with a mound. Spenser, F. Q.

The sea's a thief whose liquid surge resolves
The mounds into salt tears. Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

God had thrown
That mountain as his garden mound, high rais'd. Milton, P. L.

Such as broke through all mounds of law, such as laughed at the sword of vengeance which divine justice brandished in their faces. South, Serm.

Nor cold shall hinder me with horns and hounds
To thrid the thickets, or to leap the mounds. Dryden.

The state of Milan is like a vast garden surrounded by a noble mound-work of rocks and mountains. Addison.

To MOUND.† v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify with a mound.

We will sweep the curled vallies
Brush the banks that mound our alleys;
We will muster nature's dainties. Drayton, Muses Elysium, (1630.)

A spacious city stood with firmest walls
Sure mounded. Philips, Cider, B. i.

MOUNT.† n. s. [munт, Saxon; mont, French; mons, Lat.]

1. A mountain; a hill.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of snow. Dryden.

2. An artificial hill raised in a garden or other place.

He might see what mounts they had in short time cast, and what a number there was of warlike soldiers. Knolles.

3. A publick treasure; a bank. Now obsolete.

These examples confirmed me in a resolution to spend my time wholly in writing; and to put forth that poor talent God hath given me, not to particular exchanges, but to banks or mounts of perpetuity, which will not break. Bacon.

To MOUNT.† v. n. [monter, French.]

1. To rise on high.

Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high? Job, iii. 27.

I'll strive with troubled thoughts to take a nap,
Lest leaden slumber poise me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory. Shakspeare.

A base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakspeare.

The fire of trees and houses mounts on high,
And meets half-way new fires that show'r from sky. Cowley.

If the liturgy should be offered to them, it would kindle jealousy, and as the first range of that ladder which should serve to mount over all their customs. Clarendon.

Ambitious meteors set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun, not considering, that they have no more time allowed them in their mounting than the single revolution of a day; and that when the light goes from them they are of necessity to fall. Dryden.

2. To tower; to be built up to great elevation.

Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish. Job, xx. 6

3. To get on horseback.

He was readie to his steede to mount. Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 16.

4. [For amount.] To attain in value.

Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope

To MOUNT.† v. a.

1. To raise aloft; to lift on high.

The fire that mounts the liquor till it runs o'er,
Seeming to augment, wastes it. Shakspeare.

What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye? Shakspeare.

The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Ralegh.

2. To ascend; to climb.

Shall we mount again the rural throne,
And rule the country kingdoms once our own. Dryden

3. To place on horseback; to furnish with horses.

Three hundred horses in high stables fed,
Of these he chose the fairest and the best,
To mount the Trojan troop. Dryden, Æn.

Clear reason, acting in conjunction with a well-disciplined, but strong and vigorous fancy, seldom fail to attain their end: fancy without reason, is like a horse without a rider; and reason without fancy is not well mounted. Grew, Cos. Sac.

4. To embellish with ornaments.

5. To MOUNT guard. To do duty and watch at any particular post.

Is not "statio" properly a military term, signifying a soldier's being upon his duty, or (as we now say in England) mounting the guard? Harris on the 53. Ch. of Isaiah, (2d ed. 1739,) p. 225.

6. To MOUNT a cannon. To set a piece on its wooden frame for the more easy carriage and management in firing it.

MO'UNTABLE.* adj. [from mount; Fr. montable.] That may be ascended. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

MO'UNTAIN. n. s. [montaigne, French.]

1. A large hill; a vast protuberance of the earth.

And by his false worship such power he did gain,
As kept him o' the mountain, and us on the plain. Ralegh.

The ark no more now floats, but seems on ground,
Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd. Milton, P. L.

From Acmon's hands a rolling stone there came,
So large, it half deserv'd a mountain's name. Dryden.

2. Any thing proverbially huge.

I had been drowned; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man, and what should I have been when I had been swelled? I should have been a mountain of mummy. Shakspeare.

She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body. Shakspeare.

Mo'untain. adj. [montanus, Latin.] Found on the mountains; pertaining to the mountains; growing on the mountains.

Now for our mountain sport, up to yond hill,
Your legs are young. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakspeare.

Mountaine'er.† } n. s. [from mountain. This word
Mo'untainer. } is certainly written mountainer, as well as mountaineer, though Dr. Johnson notices only the latter. Nor has Bentley written it mountaineer, as Dr. Johnson exhibits the word in the example from his Sermons; but mountainer. Mountainer also is in the old dictionary of Sherwood.]

1. An inhabitant of the mountains.

Amiternian troops, of mighty fame,
And mountaineers that from Severus came. Dryden, Æn.

A few mountainers may escape, enough to continue human race; and yet being illiterate rusticks (as mountainers always are) they can preserve no memoirs of former times. Bentley, Serm. (ed. 1724,) p. 108.

2. A savage; a free booter; a rustick.

Yield, rustick mountaineer. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

No savage, fierce bandit, or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity. Milton, Comus.

Mo'untainet. n. s. [from mountain.] A hillock; a small mount. Elegant, but not in use.

Her breasts sweetly rose up like two fair mountainets in the pleasant vale of Tempe. Sidney.

Mo'untainous. adj. [from mountain.]

1. Hilly; full of mountains.

The ascent of the land from the sea to the foot of the mountains, and the height of the mountains from the bottom to the top, are to be computed, when you measure the height of a mountain, or of a mountainous land, in respect of the sea. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Large as mountains; huge; bulky.

What custom wills in all things, should we do't,
Mountainous errour would be too highly heapt
For truth to o'erpeer. Shakspeare.

On earth, in air, amidst the seas and skies,
Mountainous heaps of wonders rise;
Whose towering strength will ne'er submit
To reason's batteries, or the mines of wit. Prior.

3. Inhabiting mountains.

In destructions by deluge and earthquake, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant and mountainous people, that can give no account of the time past. Bacon, Essays.

Your aprons mountant; you're not oathable,
Although, I know, you'll swear. Shakspeare, Timon.

MO'UNTEBANK.† n. s. [monta in banco, Ital. Florio, 1598. To the etymology, viz. mounting on a bank, our old writers thus allude: "Fellows to mount a bank: — the Italian mountebanks." B. Jonson, Fox. "The paltriest mime that ever mounted upon bank." Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.]

1. A doctor that mounts a bench in the market, and boasts his infallible remedies and cures.

I bought an unction of a mountebank,
So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,
Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare,
Can save the thing from death. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

She, like a mountebank, did wound
And stab herself with doubts profound,
Only to shew with how small pain
The sores of faith are cur'd again. Hudibras.

But Æschylus, says Horace in some page,
Was the first mountebank that trod the stage. Dryden.

It looks like a mountebank to boast infallible cures. Baker.

2. Any boastful and false pretender.

As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakspeare.

There are mountebanks, and smatterers in state. L'Estrange.

Nothing so impossible in nature but mountebanks will undertake. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark

2. To wear the habit of sorrow.

We mourn in black; why mourn we not in blood? Shakspeare.

Friends in sable weeds appear,
Grieve for an hour, perhaps then mourn a year;
And bear about the mockery of woe
To midnight dances, and the puppet show. Pope.

3. To preserve appearance of grief.

Feign thyself to be a mourner, and put on mourning apparel. 2 Sam. xiv. 2.

Publish it that she is dead;
Maintain a mourning ostentation,
Hang mournful epitaphs. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

To MOURN. v. a.

1. To grieve for; to lament.

A flood thee also drown'd,
And sunk thee as thy sons; till gently rear'd
By the angel, on thy feet thou stood'st at last,
Though comfortless, as when a father mourns
His children all in view destroy'd at once. Milton, P. L.
The muse that mourns him now his happy triumph sung. Dryden.

Portius himself oft falls in tears before me,
As if he mourn'd his rival's ill success. Addison, Cato.

2. To utter in a sorrowful manner.

The love lorn nightingale,
Nightly to thee her sad song mourneth well. Milton, Comus.

MOURNE. n. s. [morne, French.] The round end of a staff; the part of a lance to which the steel part is fixed, or where it is taken off.

He carried his lances, which though strong to give a lancely blow indeed, yet so were they coloured with hooks near the mourne, that they prettily represented sheep hooks. Sidney.

MO'URNER. n. s. [from mourn.]

1. One that mourns; one that grieves.

The kindred of the queen must die at Pomfret.
— Indeed I am no mourner for that news,
Because they have been still my adversaries. Shakspeare.
To cure thy woe she shews thy fame;
Lest the great mourner should forget
That all the race whence orange came,
Made virtue triumph over fate. Prior.
From noise and riot he devoutly kept,
Sigh'd with the sick, and with the mourner wept. Harte.

2. One who follows a funeral in black.

Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The boar
Deals glancing wounds; the fearful dogs divide,
All spend their mouth aloft, but none abide. Dryden.

You don't now thunder in the capitol,
With all the mouths of Rome to second thee. Addison.

6. Distortion of the mouth; wry face, in this sense, is said to make mouths.

Persevere, counterfeit sad looks,
Make mouths upon me when I turn my back. Shakspeare.

Against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Isa. lvii. 4.

Why they should keep running asses at Coleshill, or how making mouths turns to account in Warwickshire, more than any other parts of England, I cannot comprehend. Addison.

7. Down in the Mouth. Dejected; clouded in the countenance.

But, upon bringing the net ashore, it proved to be only one great stone, and a few little fishes: upon this disappointment they were down in the mouth. L'Estrange.

To Mouth. v. n. [from the noun.] To speak big; to speak in a strong and loud voice; to vociferate.

Nay, an thou'lt mouth
I'll rant as well as thou. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

When Progne's or Thyestes' feast they write,
And for the mouthing actor verse indite;
Thou neither like a bellows swell'st thy face,
Nor canst thou strain thy throat. Dryden, Pers.

I'll bellow out for Rome, and for my country,
And mouth at Cæsar till I shake the senate. Addison.

To Mouth.† v. a.

1. To utter with a voice affectedly big; to roll in the mouth with tumult.

Speak the speech as I pronounced it, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, I had as lieve the town-crier had spoke my lines. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Twitch'd by the sleeve he mouths it more and more,
Till with white froth his gown is slaver'd o'er. Dryden.

2. To chew; to eat; to grind in the mouth.

Corne carried let such as be poore go and glean,
And after thy cattel to mouth it up clean. Tusser, Husb.

Death lines his dead chaps with steel,
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his phangs;
And now he feasts mouthing the flesh of men. Shakspeare.

3. To seize in the mouth.

He keeps them, like an apple, in the corner of his jaw; first mouth'd to be last swallowed. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Lucilius never fear'd the times;
Mutius and Lupus both by name he brought,
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.

4. To form by the mouth.

In regard the cub comes forth involved in the chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, and which the dam doth after tear asunder; the beholder at first sight imputes the ensuing form to the mouthing of the dam. Brown

5. To insult; to attack with reproachful language.

If death was nothing, and nought after death;
If when men died, at once they ceas'd to be,
Returning to the barren womb of nothing,
Whence first they sprung; then might the debauchee
Untrembling mouth the heavens. Blair, The Grave.

Mo'uthed. adj. [from mouth.]

1. Furnished with a mouth.

One tragick sentence if I dare deride,
Which Betterton's grave action dignify'd,
Or well mouth'd Booth with emphasis proclaims. Pope.

To MOW. v. a. preter. mowed, part. mown. [mapan, Saxon. Mow the noun, and mow the verb, meaning to put in a mow, is pronounced as now; mow to cut, as mo.]

1. To cut with a scythe.

Of all the seed that in my youth was sowne,
Was nought but brakes and brambles to be mown. Spenser.
The care you have
To mow down thorns that would annoy our foot,
Is worthy praise. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Forth he goes,
Like to a harvest man, that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Whatever
The scythe of time mows down, devour unspar'd. Milton, P. L.
Beat, roll and mow carpet-walks and cammomile. Evelyn.

2. To cut down with speed and violence.

He will mow down all before him, and leave his passage poll'd. Shakspeare, Coriol.
What valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Thou and I, marching before our troops,
May taste fate to 'em; mow 'em out a passage,
Begin the noble harvest of the field. Dryden, All for Love.
Stands o'er the prostrate wretch, and as he lay,
Vain tales inventing, and prepar'd to pray,
Mows off his head. Dryden, Æn.

To Mow. v. n. To gather the harvest.

Gold, though the heaviest metal, hither swims:
Ours is the harvest where the Indians mow,
We plough the deep, and reap what others sow. Waller.

MOW. n. s. [probably corrupted from mouth: moue, Fr.] Wry mouth; distorted face. This word is now out of use, but retained in Scotland.

The very abjects came together against me unawares, making mows at me. Psal. xxxv. 15. Com. Pr.

Some Smithfield ruffian takes up some new mowing with the mouth, some wrenching with the shoulder, some fresh, new oath, that will run round in the mouth. Ascham.

3. Ability.

Without whiche mowyng the wretched wyl shoulde languishe without effecte. Chaucer, Boeth. iv. pr. 4.

Mo'xa. n. s. An Indian moss, used in the cure of the gout by burning it on the part aggrieved. Temple.

Moyle. n. s. A mule; an animal generated between the horse and the ass.

Ordinary husbandmen should quit breeding of horses, and betake themselves to moyles; a beast which will fare hardly, live very long, draw indifferently well, carry great burthens, and hath also a pace swift and easy enough. Carew.
'Twould tempt a moyle to fury. May.

MUCH.† adj. [Su. Goth. myeken, great, much; Icel. miok, mikit, much. Hence the Span. mucho, as well as our much. Dr. Jamieson in V. Myche, the Scottish form of much. We had formerly the substantive michel, apparently in the sense of magnitude, size; "of one michel and might." Vis. of P. Pl. fol. 89. b. See Mr. Tyrwhitt's Gloss. in V. Mokel.]

1. Large in quantity; long in time: opposed to little.

Thou shalt carry much seed out, and shalt gather but little in; for the locust shall consume it. Deut. xxiv. 38.
I am well served, to take so much pains for one resolved to make away with himself. L'Estrange.
You were pressed for the sea-service, and got off with much ado. Swift, Dir. to Servants.

2. Many in number: opposed to few.

Let us know
If 'twill tie up thy discontented sword,
And carry back to Sicily much tall youth,
That else must perish here. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

MUCH. adv.

1. In a great degree; by far: before some word of comparison.

Isaac, thou art much mightier than we. Gen. xxvi. 16.

Excellent speech becometh not a fool, much less do lying lips a prince. Prov. xvii. 17.

We have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? Heb. xii. 9.

If they escaped not who refused him that spoke on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven. Heb. xii. 25.

Full of doubt I stand,
Whether I should repent me now of sin
By me done or occasioned, or rejoice
Much more, that much more good thereof shall spring. Milton, P. L.

Patron or intercessor none appear'd,
Much less that durst upon his own head draw
The deadly forfeiture. Milton, P. L.

2. To a certain degree.

He charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it. St. Mark, vii. 36.

There is, said Michael, if thou well observe,
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught. Milton, P. L.

3. To a great degree.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong
Life much, bent rather how I may be quit
Fairest and easiest of this cumbrous charge. Milton, P. L.

So spake, so wish'd much humbled Eve, but fate

Somewhat aw'd, I shook with holy fear,
Yet not so much but that I noted well
Who did the most in song and dance excel. Dryden.

To thee thy much-afflicted mother flies,
And on thy succour and thy faith relies. Dryden.

Your much-lov'd fleet shall soon
Besiege the petty monarchs of the land. Dryden.

If his rules of reason be not better than his rules for health, he is not like to be much follow'd. Baker on Learning.

Oh much experienc'd man! Pope, Odyss.

Sad from my natal hour my days have ran,
A much afflicted, much enduring man. Pope, Odyss.

4. Often, or long.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking, sigh. Dryden.

Homer shall last, like Alexander, long,
As much recorded, and as often sung. Granville.

5. Nearly.

All left the world much as they found it, ever unquiet, subject to changes and revolutions. Temple.

MUCH. n. s.

1. A great deal; multitude in number; abundance in quantity: opposed to a little.

They gathered against Moses and Aaron, and said, Ye take too much upon you. Num. xvi. 3.

Nor grudge I thee the much the Grecians give,
Nor murm'ring take the little I receive. Dryden, Iliad.

They have much of the poetry of Mecænas, but little of his liberality. Dryden, Pref. to All for Love.

The fate of love is such,
That still it sees too little or too much. Dryden.

Much suffering heroes next their honours claim;
Those of less noisy and less guilty fame,
Fair virtue's silent train. Pope, Temple of Fame.

2. More than enough; a heavy service or burthen.

Thou think'st it much to tread the ooze
Of the salt deep. Shakspeare, Tempest.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton, P. L.

This gracious act the ladies all approve,
Who thought it much a man should die for love,
And with their mistress join'd in close debate. Dryden.

3. Any assignable quantity or degree.

The waters covered the chariots and horsemen; there remained not so much as one. Exod. xiv. 28.

We will cut wood out of Lebanon as much as thou shalt need. 2 Chron. ii. 16.

The matter of the universe was created before the flood; and if any more was created, then there must be as much annihilated to make room for it. Burnet, Theory.

Who is there of whom we can with any rational assurance, or perhaps so much as likelihood, affirm, here is a man whose nature is renewed, whose heart is changed. South.

4. An uncommon thing; something strange.

It was much that one that was so great a lover of peace should be happy in war. Bacon, Hen. VII.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing all that long duration which had past before that time. Tillotson.

5. To make MUCH of. To treat with regard; to fondle; to pamper.

Though he knew his discourse was to entertain him from a more streight parley, yet he durst not but kiss his rod, and gladly make much of that entertainment which she allotted unto him. Sidney.

The king understanding of their adventure, suddenly falls to take a pride in making much of them, extolling them with infinite praises. Sidney.

When thou camest first,
Thou stroak'd'st, and mad'st much of me; and would'st give me
Water with berries in't. Shakspeare, Tempest.

MUCH at one. Nearly of equal value; of equal influence.

Then prayers are vain as curses, much at one
In a slave's mouth, against a monarch's power. Dryden.

MUCH is often used in a kind of composition with participles both active and passive: when it is joined with a passive, as much loved, it seems to be an adverb; when it is joined with an active, as much enduring, it may be more properly considered as a noun.

MU'CHEL. adj. for muckle or mickle. [mycel, Saxon.] Much.

He had in arms abroad won muchel fame,
And fill'd far lands with glory of his might. Spenser, F. Q.

MU'CHNESS.* n. s. [from much.] Quantity. It is sometimes, in low language, used for quality: " much of a muchness," i. e. much of the same kind.

This sluggish humour is condemned long ago for a misspender of time. And surely it is not alone very dangerous, in regard to the quantity and muchness of time which it filcheth; but also in regard of the quality and goodness: for it ordinarily feeds gluttonously on the very fat of time; it eats the very flower of the day; and consumes the first fruits of our hours, even the morning season. Whately, Redemption of Time, (1634,) p. 20.

MU'CHWHAT. adv. [much and what.] Nearly.

The motion being conveyed from the brain of man to the fancy of another, it is there received; and the same kind of strings being moved, and muchwhat after the same manner as in the first imaginant. Glanville, Scepsis.

The bigness of her body and bill, as likewise the form of them, is muchwhat as follows. More, Ant. against Atheism.

If we will disbelieve every thing, because we cannot know all things, we shall do muchwhat as wisely as he who would not use his legs because he had no wings to fly. Locke.

Unless he can prove cælibatum a man or a woman, this Latin will be muchwhat the same with a solecism. Atterbury.

MU'CID. adj. [mucidus, Latin; mucre, Fr.] Slimy; musty.

MU'CIDNESS. n. s. [from mucid.] Sliminess; mustiness. Ainsworth.

MU'CILAGE. n. s. [mucilage, French.] A slimy or viscous mass; a body with moisture sufficient to hold it together.

Dissolution of gum tragacanth, and oil of sweet almonds, do commingle, the oil remaining on the top till they be stirred, and make the mucilage somewhat more liquid. Bacon.

Your alaternus seed move with a broom, that the seeds clog not together, unless you will separate it from the mucilage, for then you must a little bruise it wet. Evelyn.

Both the ingredients improve one another; for the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation. Ray on Creation.

MUCILA'GINOUS. adj. [mucilagineux, French, from mucilage.] Slimy; viscous; soft with some degree of tenacity.

There is a twofold liquor prepared for the inunction and lubrification of the heads or ends of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow; and a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the articulations. Ray on Creation.

There is a sort of magnetism in all, not mucilaginous but resinous gums, even in common rosin. Grew, Cosmol. Sac.

MUCILA'GINOUS glands.

Mucilaginous glands are of two sorts: some are small, and in a manner milliary glands; the other sort are conglomerated, or many glandules collected and planted one upon another. Quincy.

MUCILA'GINOUSNESS. n. s. [from mucilaginous.] Sliminess; viscosity.

MUCK.† n. s. [meox, Saxon; mock, Su. Goth. fimus.]

1. Dung for manure of grounds.

Hale out thy mucke, and plow out thy ground. Tusser.

It is usual to help the ground with muck, and likewise to recomfort with muck put to the roots; but to water it with muck water, which is like to be more forcible, is not practised. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The swine may see the pearl, which yet he values but with the ordinary muck. Glanville, Apology.

There are, who
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land
Induce laborious, and with fattening muck
Besmear the roots. Philips.

Morning insects that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

2. Any thing low, mean, and filthy, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Spenser. The word may be rather intended simply for a heap, from the Sax. mucg.

Reward of worldly muck doth foully blend,
And low abase the high heroick spirit
That joys for crowns. Spenser, F. Q.

Your gathering sires so long heap muck together,
That their kind sons, to rid them of their care,
Wish them in heaven. Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate

A huge mass of treasure — the fatal muck
We quarrell'd for. Beaum. and Fl. Sea-Voyage.

3. To run a MUCK, signifies, I know not from what derivation, to run madly, and attack all that we meet. Dr. Johnson. — Tavernier says, certain Java lords, on a particular occasion, called the English traitors, and drawing their poisoned daggers cried a mocca upon the English! killing a great number of them, before they had time to put themselves in a posture of defence. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 202. Again he tells us, that a Bantamois, newly come from Mecca, was upon the design of moqua; that is, in their language, when the rascality of the Mahometans return from Mecca, they presently take their axe in their hand, which is a kind of poniard, the blade whereof is half poisoned, with which they run through the streets, and kill all those which are not of the Mahometan law, till they be killed themselves. Ibid. p. 199. Rev. Mr. Pegge, Gent. Mag. vol. xxxviii. p. 283. — The inhabitants of the islands to the eastward of Bengal, such as Sumatra, Berneo, Banco, and the coast of Malay, are very famous for cock-fighting, in which they carry gaming to a much greater excess than the customs of Europe can admit. They stake first their property; and when by repeated losses all their money and effects are gone, they stake their wives and children. If fortune still frowns, so that nothing is left, the losing gamester begins to chew or eat what is called bang, which I imagine to be the same as opium: when it begins to operate, he disfigures himself and furnishes himself with such weapons as he can get, the more deadly, the fitter for his purpose; and the effect of the opium increasing, he at length becomes mad. This madness is of the furious kind; and when it seizes him, he rushes forth, and kills whatever comes in his way, whether man or beast, friend or foe; and commits every outrage which may be expected from a man in such circumstances. This is what the Indians call a muck. Gent. Mag. vol. xl. p. 564. — A-mocca, or a-muck, (for so the word should be written,) is used in the Malay language, adverbially, as one word, and signifies, if we may so write, killingly. "He runs a-muck, i. e. he runs with a savage intent to kill whomsoever he meets." Malone, Dryden's Prose-Works, Add. and Emend. p. 155.]

Frontless and satire-proof he scow'rs the streets,
And runs an Indian muck at all he meets. Dryden

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run a muck, and tilt at all I meet. Pope, Hor.

To MUCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with muck; to dung.

Thy garden plot lately wel trenched and muckt
Would now be twifallowed. Tusser.

MU'CKENDER.† n. s. [mouchoir, French; mocadero, Spanish; muccinium, low Latin. Dr. Johnson. — It is, in some places, called muckinger; and in Barret's old dictionary mucketer. The root is the Lat. mucus; old Fr. mouc, whence moucadou, an old word for mouchoir.] A handkerchief.

Be of good comfort; take my muckinder,
And dry thine eyes. B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub

For thy dull fancy a muckender is fit,
To wipe the slabberings of thy snotty wit. Dorset.

To MU'CKER.† v. a. [from muck, a heap; mucg, Sax. mucchiare, Ital. to heap up; mocka, Icel.] To hoard up; to get or save meanly: a word used by Chaucer, and still retained in conversation.

That gold, and that money, shineth, and yeveth better renowne to them that dispenden it, than to thilke folke that mukeren it. Chaucer, Boeth. ii. pr. 5.

Pense that he can muckre and ketche. Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 1381.

MU'CKERER.† n. s. [from mucker.] One that muckers; a miser; a niggard.

Avarice maketh alwaie muckerers to ben hated. Chaucer, Boeth. ii. pr. 5.

MU'CKHEAP.* n. s. [muck and heap.] A dunghill.

A very midden or muckheap of all the grossest errors and heresies of the Roman church. Favour, Antiq. Triümph. over Novelty, (1619,) p. 518.

MU'CKHILL.† n. s. [muck and hill.] A dunghill.

Old Euclio — as he went from home, seeing a crow scrat upon the muck-hill, returned in all haste, taking it for an ill sign his money was digged up. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 116.

Hitherto amongst you I have liv'd,
Like an unsavoury muck-hill to myself.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

MU'CKMIDDEN.* n. s. [muck and midden.] A dunghill. Used in the north of England. See MIDDEN.

MU'CKINESS. n. s. [from mucky.] Nastiness; filth.

MU'CKLE. adj. [mycel, Saxon.] Much.

MU'CKSWEAT. n. s. [muck and sweat: in this low word, muck signifies wet, moist.] Profuse sweat.

MU'CKWORM. n. s. [muck and worm.]

1. A worm that lives in dung.
2. A miser; a curmudgeon.

Worms suit all conditions;
Misers are muckworms, silkworms beaus,
And death-watches physicians. Swift, Miscell.

MU'CKY. adj. [from muck.] Nasty; filthy.

Mucky filth his branching arms annoys
And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys. Spenser, F. Q.

MU'COUS. adj. [mucosus, Lat.] Slimy; viscous.

The salamander being cold in the fourth, and moist in the third degree, and having also a mucous humidity above and under the skin, may a while endure the flame. Brown.

About these the nerves and other vessels make a fine web, covered over with a mucous substance, to moisten these papillæ pyramidales. Cheyne, Philos. Principles.

MU'COUSNESS. n. s. [from mucous.] Slime; viscosity.

MU'CRO. n. s. [Latin.] A point.

The mucro, or point of the heart inclineth unto the left, by this position it giving way unto the ascension of the midriff. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MU'CRONATED. adj. [mucro, Lat.] Narrowed to a sharp point.

Gems are here shot into cubes consisting of six sides, and mucronated or terminating in a point. Woodward.

MU'CULENT. adj. [from mucus, Lat.] Viscous; slimy. Dict.

MU'CUS. n. s. [Latin.] It is more properly used for that which flows from the papillary processes through the os cribriforme into the nostrils; but it is also used for any slimy liquor or moisture, as that which daubs over and guards the bowels and all the chief passages in the body; and it is separated by the mucilaginous glands. Quincy.

In the action of chewing, the mucus mixeth with the aliment: the mucus is an humour different from the spittle, and the great quantity of air which it contains helps to dissolve the aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

MUD.† n. s. [moder, German; modd, Su. Goth. cœnum.] The slime and uliginous matter at the bottom of still water.

The purest spring is not so free from mud,
As I am clear from treason. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Water in mud doth putrefy, as not able to preserve itself. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The channel was dried up, and the fish left dead and sticking in the mud. L'Estrange.

The force of the fluid will separate the smallest particles, so as to leave vacant interstices, which will be again filled up by particles carried on by the succeeding fluid, as a bank by the mud of the current, which must be reduced to that figure which gives least resistance to the current. Arbuthnot.

A fountain in a darksome wood,
Nor stain'd with falling leaves nor rising mud. Addison.

To MUD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bury in the slime or mud.

I wish
Myself were mudded in that oozy bed,
Where my son lies. Shakspeare, Tempest.

2. To make turbid; to pollute with dirt; to dash with dirt; to foul by stirring up the sediment.

I shall not stir in the waters which have been already mudded by so many contentious enquiries. Glanville, Scepsis.

MU'DDILY. adv. [from muddy.] Turbidly; with foul mixture.

Lucilius writ not only loosely and muddily, with little art, and much less care, but also in a time which was not yet sufficiently purged from barbarism. Dryden.

MU'DDINESS. n. s. [from muddy.] Turbidness; foulness caused by mud, dregs, or sediment.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber: the season of the year, the muddiness of the stream, with the many green trees hanging over it, put me in mind of the delightful image that Virgil has given when Æneas took the first view of it. Addison on Italy.

Turn the bottle upside down; by this means you will not lose one drop, and the froth will conceal the muddiness. Swift, Direct. to Servants.

To MU'DDLE. v. a. [from mud.]

1. To make turbid; to foul; to make muddy.

The neighbourhood told him, he did ill to muddle the water and spoil the drink. L'Estrange.

Yet let the goddess smile or frown,
Bread we shall eat, or white or brown;
And in a cottage, or a court,
Drink fine champagne, or muddled port. Prior.

2. To make half drunk; to cloud or stupify.

I was for five years often drunk, always muddled; they carried me from tavern to tavern. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Epicurus seems to have had his brains so muddled and confounded, that he scarce ever kept in the right way, though the main maxim of his philosophy was to trust to his senses, and follow his nose. Bentley, Serm.

To MU'DDLE.* v. n. To contract filth; to be in a dirty or confused state.

He never muddles in the dirt. Swift.
His summum bonum is muddling in parchments. Greville.

MU'DDLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A confused or turbid state: a vulgar expression.

MU'DDY. adj. [from mud.]

1. Turbid; foul with mud.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakspeare.

Her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Carry it among the whitsters in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames. Shakspeare.

Who can a pure and crystal current bring
From such a muddy and polluted spring? Sandys, Paraph.

I strove in vain the infected blood to cure,
Streams will run muddy where the spring's impure. Roscommon.

Till by the fury of the storm full blown,
The muddy bottom o'er the clouds is thrown. Dryden.

Out of the true fountains of science painters and statuaries are bound to draw, without amusing themselves with dipping in streams which are often muddy, at least troubled; I mean the manner of their masters, after whom they creep. Dryden.

2. Impure; dark; gross.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims;
Such harmony is in immortal sounds;
But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakspeare.

If you chuse, for the composition of such ointment, such ingredients as do make the spirits a little more gross or muddy, thereby the imagination will fix the better. Bacon.

3. Soiled with mud.

His passengers
Expos'd in muddy weeds, upon the miry shore Dryden.

4. Dark; not bright.

The black
A more inferiour station seeks,
Leaving the fiery red behind,
And mingles in her muddy cheeks. Swift, Miscell.

5. Cloudy in mind; dull;

Do'st think I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Yet I,
A dull and muddy mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant in my cause,
And can say nothing. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To MU'DDY. v. a. [from mud.] To make muddy; to cloud; to disturb.

The people muddied,
Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers. Shakspeare.

Excess, either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head; or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water-shop, burns him down to the ground; or if it flames not out, charks him to a coal; muddies the best wit, and makes it only to flutter and froth high. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

MU'DDY-HEADED.* adj. [muddy and head.] Having a cloudy understanding.

Many boys are muddy-headed, till they be clarified with age; and such afterwards prove the best. Fuller, Holy State, p. 100.

MU'DSUCKER. n. s. [mud and suck.] A sea fowl.

In all water-fowl, their legs and feet correspond to that way of life; and in mudsuckers, two of the toes are somewhat joined, that they may not easily sink. Derham.

MU'DWALL. n. s. [mud and wall.]

1. A wall built without mortar, by throwing up mud and suffering it to dry.

If conscience contract rust or soil, a man may as well expect to see his face in a mudwall, as that such a conscience should give him a true report of his condition. South.

2. [apiaster.] A bird so called. Ainsworth.

MU'DWALLED. adj. [mud and wall.] Having a mudwall.

As folks from mudwall'd tenement
Bring landlords pepper-corn for rent;
Present a turkey, or a hen,
To those might better spare them ten. Prior.

To MUE.† v. a. [muer, Fr.]

1. To moult; to change feathers; to change. See To MEW.

Their nakedness with sackcloth let them hide,
And mue the vestments of their silken pride.
Quarles, Hist of Jonah, (1620,) II. 3.

2. To low as a cow; usually pronounced moo, though mue should seem to be the orthography. [muir, old French; muhen, Germ. mugio, Lat.]

MUFF. n. s. [muff, Swedish.] A soft cover for the hands in winter.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough,
This a gantlet, that a muff. Cleaveland.

What! no more favours, not a ribbon more,
Not fan, not muff? Suckling.

The lady of the spotted muff began. Dryden.

A child that stands in the dark upon his mother's muff, says he stands upon something, he knows not what. Locke.

MU'FFIN.* n. s. A kind of light cake.

To MU'FFLE.† v. a. [from mouffle, French; a winter glove. Dr. Johnson.— Rather from the old French mufle, "la partie inférieure de la tête de quelques animaux." Lacombe. "Mufle, snout or muzzle." Cotgrave. The original meaning is to conceal part of the face; not to cover from the weather, as Dr. Johnson has given it; nor is there any occasion for his second distinction of to blindfold; most of the examples under which belong to the first.]

1. To conceal part or the whole of the face; "to muffle the mouth." Barret.

Alas that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his ill. Shakspeare.

We've caught the woodcock, and will keep him muffled.
Shakspeare, All's Well.

Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the fore-runner of death: when the malefactor comes once to be muffled, and the fatal cloth drawn over his eyes, we know that he is not far from his execution. South.

Bright Lucifer
That night his heavenly form obscur'd with tears;
And since he was forbid to leave the skies,
He muffled with a cloud his mournful eyes. Dryden.

His muffled feature speaks him a recluse,
His ruins prove him a religious house. Cleaveland.

You must be muffled up like ladies. Dryden.

The face lies muffled up within the garment. Addison.

2. To wrap; to cover.

Balbutius muffled in his sable cloke,
Like an old druid from his hollow oak. Young.

3. To conceal; to involve; to wrap up.

This is one of the strongest examples of a personation that ever was: although the king's manner of shewing things by pieces, and by dark lights, hath so muffled it, that it hath left it almost as a mystery. Bacon, Hen. VII.

No muffling clouds, nor shades infernal, can
From his inquiry hide offending man. Sandys, Paraph.

Our understandings lie grovelling in this lower region, muffled up in mists and darkness. Glanville, Scepsis.

The thoughts of kings are like religious groves,
The walks of muffled gods. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

One, muffled up in the infallibility of his sect, will not enter into a debate with a person that will question any of those things which to him are sacred. Locke.

They were in former ages muffled up in darkness and superstition. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

To MU'FFLE.† v. n. [muffelen, moffelen, Dutch. The true word is maffle; which is still in use. See To MAFFLE.] To speak inwardly; to speak without clear and distinct articulation.

The freedom or apertness and vigour of pronouncing, as in the Bocca Romana, and giving somewhat more of aspiration; and the closeness and muffling, and laziness of speaking, render the sound of speech different. Holder.

MU'FFLER.† n. s. [from muffle.]

1. A cover for the face.

Fortune is painted with a muffler before her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is blind. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Mr. Hales has found out the best expedients for preventing immediate suffocation from tainted air, by breathing through mufflers, which imbibe these vapours. Arbuthnot on Air.

2. A part of a woman's dress, by which the face was partially, or almost wholly, covered; a kind of mask.

There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a handkerchief, and so escape. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

The goddess Angerona was with a muffler upon her mouth placed upon the altar of Volupia, to represent, that those persons who bear their sicknesses and sorrows without murmur, shall certainly pass from sorrow to pleasure.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 4. ch. 3.

The Lord will take away your tinkling ornaments, chains, bracelets, and mufflers. Isa. iii. 19.

MU'FTI.† n. s. [a Turkish word.] The high priest of the Mahometans.

The Indians have their brachmans, the Turks their muftis.
Featley, Dippers Dipt, p. 130.

I tell thee, mufti,
Good feasting is devout, and thou our head,
Hast a religious ruddy countenance. Dryden.

MUG.† n. s. [Skinner derives it from mwygl, Welsh, warm; implying that our mug is a cup for warming drink. The word is of no great age in our language; and is not enumerated among the many quaint appellations of pots and glasses which are to be found in Heywood's Drunkard Opened, 1635. It is a word coined perhaps in sport. In Young's Description of Drunkennesse, 1617, it is said, "I have seene a company amongst the very woods and forrests drinking for a muggle. Sixe determined to trye their strengths who could drinke most glasses for the muggle. The first drinks a glasse of a pint, the second two, the next three, and so every one multiplieth till the last taketh six." sign. E. 4. b. What this muggle means I know not; and therefore am unable to pronounce mug as connected with it.] A cup to drink in.

Ah Bowzybee, why didst thou stay so long?
The mugs were large, the drink was wondrous strong. Gay.

MU'GGARD.* adj. Sullen; displeased. Exmore dialect. Grose. Probably a corruption of mugger, as used in hugger-mugger; morcker, Dan. darkness.

MU'GGY.† } MU'GGISH. } adj. [corrupted from mucky, for damp]

1. Moist; damp; mouldy.

Cover with muggy straw to keep it moist. Mortimer.

2. Thick; close; misty. [from moky, which see.]

MUGGLETO'NIAN.* n. s. One of a sect of enthusiasts formed about the year 1657 by Lodowick Muggleton, a journeyman taylor, who set up for a prophet.

The Seekers, a sect in those times, renounced all ordinances; and so did the sect of the Muggletonians. Grey, Notes on Hudibras.

MU'GHOUSE.† n. s. [mug and house.] An ale house; a low house of entertainment.

He has the confidence to say, that there is a mug-house near Long-Acre, where you may every evening hear an exact account of distresses of this kind. Tatler, No. 180.

Our sex has dar'd the mughouse chiefs to meet,
And purchas'd fame in many a well fought street. Tickell.

MU'GIL.* n. s. [mugil, Lat.] A name for the mullet.

In common constructions, mugil is rendered a mullet, which, notwithstanding, is a different fish from the mugil described by authours. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 104.

It is thought wonderful among the seamen, that mugil, of all fishes the swiftest, is found in the belly of the bret, of all the slowest. Lily, Campaspe.

MU'GIENT. adj. [mugiens, Latin.] Bellowing.

That a bittern maketh that mugient noise or bumping, by putting its bill into a reed, or by putting the same in water or mud, and after a while retaining the air, but suddenly excluding it again, is not easily made out. Brown.

MU'GWORT. n. s. [mugƿyꞃt, Saxon; artemisia, Lat.] The flowers and fruit of the mugwort are very like those of the wormwood, but grow erect upon the branches. Miller.

Some of the most common simples with us in England are comfry, bugle, Paul's betony, and mugwort. Wiseman.

MULA'TTO.† n. s. [mulata, Spanish; mulat, French; from mulus, Lat.] One begot between a white and a black, as a mule between different species or animals.

Purgatory, which is a device to make men be mulatas, as the Spaniard calls, half Christians.
Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. ii. § 3.

Mulattos are not Ethiopians. Young, Centaur, Lett. 2.

MU'LBERRY. } MU'LBERRY tree. } n. s. [moꞃbeꞃiᵹ, Saxon; morus, Latin.]

1. The mulberry tree hath large, rough, roundish leaves; the male flowers, or katkins, which have a calyx consisting of four leaves, are sometimes produced upon separate trees, at other times at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the fruit is composed of several protuberances, to each of which adhere four small leaves; the seeds are roundish, growing singly in each protuberance; it is planted for the delicacy of the fruit. The white mulberry is commonly cultivated for its leaves to feed silkworms, in France and Italy, though the Persians always make use of the common black mulberry for that purpose. Miller.

Morton, archbishop of Canterbury, was content to use mor upon a tun; and sometimes a mulberry tree, called morus in Latin, out of a tun. Camden, Rem.

2. The fruit of the tree.

The ripest mulberry,
That will not hold the handling. Shakspeare, Coriol.

A body black, round, with small grain-like tubercles on the surface; not very unlike a mulberry. Woodward on Fossils.

MULCH.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of mull.] Rotten or crumbled dung. See MULL.

If mulch be used, it should be thoroughly rotten, and almost reduced to mould. Adelphi Transactions, xv. 158.

MULCT. n. s. [mulcta, Latin.] A fine; a penalty: used commonly of pecuniary penalty.

Doe you then Argive Hellena, with all her treasure, here
Restore to us, and pay the mulct that by your vows is due. Chapman.

Because this is a great part, and Eusebius hath said nothing, we will, by way of mulct or pain, lay it upon him. Bacon.

Look humble upward, see his will disclose
The forfeit first, and then the fine impose;
A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
Had not eternal wisdom found the way. Dryden.

To MULCT.† v. a. [mulcto, Latin; mulcter, French.] To punish with fine or forfeiture.

Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents' inheritance. Bacon, New Atlantis.

All fraud must be banished out of their markets; or, if it dares to intrude, soundly punished, and mulcted with due satisfaction. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 1. C. 7.

MU'LCTUARY.* adj. [from mulct.] Punishing with fine or forfeiture.

He wishes fewer laws, so they were better observed; and for those [that] are mulctuary, he understands their institution not to be like briers, and springs, to catch every thing they lay hold of; but like sea-marks, — to avoid the shipwreck of ignorant passengers. Overbury, Charact. (1627,) sign. N. 4. b.

Fines, or some known mulctuary punishments upon other crimes. Temple, Intr. Hist. of Eng. p. 172.

MULE.† n. s. [mul, Saxon; mule, mulet, French; mula, Latin.] An animal generated between a he ass and a mare, or sometimes between a horse and a she ass.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part. Shakspeare.

Five hundred asses yearly took the horse,
Producing mules of greater speed and force. Sandys.

Those effluvia in the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation, as is demonstrable in a mule, which doth more resemble the parent, that is, the ass, than the female. Ray.

Twelve young mules, a strong laborious race. Pope.

MULETE'ER.† n. s. [muletier, French; mulio, Latin.] Mule-driver; horse-boy.

Base muleteers,
Like peasant foot-boys, do they keep the walls,
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen. Shakspeare.

Your ships are not well mann'd,
Your mariners are muleteers, reapers. Shakspeare.

About a quarter of an hour farther, we came up with our muleteers; they having pitched our tents, before they had gone so far as we intended. Maundrel, Trav. p. 20.

Mulie'brity.† n. s. [muliebris, Lat.] Womanhood; the contrary to virility; the manners and character of woman.

The ladies of Rhodes, hearing that you have lost
A capital part of your lady-ware,
Have made their petition to Cupid,
To plague you above all other,
As one prejudicial to their muliebrity.
Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

Mu'lish.* adj. [from mule.] Like a mule; obstinate as a mule. Modern.

Mull.* n. s. [M. Goth. muld; Su. Goth. mull.] Dust; rubbish. See Mullock.

That other cofre of straw and mull
With stones meynd he fill'd also;
Thus be they full bothe two. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

To Mull. v. a. [mollitus, Lat.]

1. To soften and dispirit, as wine is when burnt and sweetened. Hanmer.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy,
Mull'd, deaf, sleepy, insensible. Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. To heat any liquor, and sweeten and spice it.

Drink new cyder mull'd, with ginger warm. Gay.

Mulle'in. n. s. [verbascum, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

Mu'ller.† n. s. [mouleur, French; from mola, Icel. to crumble, to break into small pieces.] A stone held in the hand with which any powder is ground upon a horizontal stone. It is now often called improperly mullet.

The best grinder is the porphyry, white or green marble, with a muller or upper stone of the same, cut very even without flaws or holes; you may make a muller also of a flat pebble, by grinding it smooth at a grindstone. Peacham.

Mu'llet.† n. s. [mullus, Latin; mulet, French.] A sea fish.

Care must be taken, lest, being deceived by the identity of names, we take our English mullet to be the mullus of the ancients. Ray, Dict. Triling. p. 25.

Of carps and mullets why prefer the great?
Yet for small turbots such esteem profess. Pope, Hor.

Mu'lligrubs.† n. s. Twisting of the guts; sometimes sullenness. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. — Sick of the mulligrubs; low-spirited; having an imaginary sickness. Grose, Class. Dict. Dr. Jamieson defines the Scottish molligrant, molligrub, or mullygrub, the act of whining, complaining, or murmuring; and cites the Icel. mogla, murmur, and graun, the countenance, q. d. such whining as distorts the countenance; or, as including two ideas nearly connected, grunnia, murmuring and grunting. He finds another apparent etymon in the Teut. muylen, to mutter, with the Germ. grob, great, q. d. a great complaint or muttering. Whether this be the origin or not, the word certainly seems to have been old in English, as a contemptuous expression; though Dr. Johnson could find no example of it.

What's the matter?
Whither go all these men-menders? these physicians?
Whose dog lies sick o' the mulligrubs.
Beaum. and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

Mu'llion.* n. s. [moulure, Fr.] A division in a window frame; a bar; a munnion, or munion, which is commonly, and perhaps correctly, pronounced mullion.

To Mu'llion. v. a. [from the noun.] To shape into divisions in a window.

Such is the fabrick of our ancient churches and cathedrals. The slender pillars imitate the taper trunk of a tree. The curve of the arches is from the delicate branching of the boughs in a wood or grove. The mullion'd lacework of the windows, the like; intercepting the dubious light, as in a real grove. Stukeley, Palæogr. Sacra, (1763,) p. 18.

Mu'llock.† n. s. Rubbish. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. — This is an old word, the same as mull; and yet used in several places, signifying dirt, rubbish, or ashes. See Mull.

The mullok on an hepe ysweped was.
Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

Mulse. n. s. [mulsum, Latin.] Wine boiled and mingled with honey. Dict.

MULTA'NGULAR.† adj. [multus and angulus, Latin.] Many cornered; having many corners; polygonal.

Multica'psular. adj. [multus and capsula, Latin.] Divided into many partitions or cells. Dict.

Multica'vous. adj. [multus and cavus.] Full of holes. Dict.

MULTIFA'RIOUS. adj. [multifarius, Lat.] Having great multiplicity; having different respects; having great diversity in itself.

There is a multifarious artifice in the structure of the meanest animal. More, Divine Dialogues.

When we consider this so multifarious congruity of things in reference to ourselves, how can we withhold from inferring, that that which made both dogs and ducks made them with a reference to us? More, Antid. against Atheism.

His science is not moved by the gusts of fancy and humour, which blow up and down the multifarious opinionists.
Glanville to Albius.

We could not think of a more comprehensive expedient, whereby to assist the frail and torpent memory through so multifarious and numerous an employment. Evelyn, Kalendar

Multifa'riously. adv. [from multifarious.] With multiplicity; with great variety of modes or relations.

If only twenty-four parts may be so multifariously placed, and ordered, as to make many millions of millions of differing rows: in the supposition of a thousand parts, how immense must that capacity of variation be? Bentley, Serm.

Multifa'riousness. n. s. [from multifarious.] Multiplied diversity.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris, Miscell.

Multi'fidous. adj. [multifidus, Latin.] Having many partitions: cleft into many branches.

These animals are only excluded without sight which are multiparous and multifidous, which have many at a litter and have feet divided into many portions. Brown.

MU'LTIPLICATE. adj. [from multiplico, Lat. Consisting of more than one.

In this multiplicate number of the eye, the object seen is not multiplied, and appears but one, though seen with two or more eyes. Derham, Physico-Theol.

MULTIPLICA'TION. n. s. [multiplication, French; multiplicatio, Lat.]

1. The act of multiplying or increasing any number by addition or production of more of the same kind.

Although they had divers stiles for God, yet under many appellations they acknowledged one divinity; rather conceiving thereby the evidence or acts of his power in several ways than a multiplication of essence, or real distractions of unity in any one. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. [In arithmetick.]

Multiplication is the increasing of any one number by another, so often as there are units in that number, by which the one is increased. Cocker's Arithmetick.

A man had need be a good arithmetician to understand this author's works: his description runs on like a multiplication table. Addison on Anc. Medals.

MULTIPLICA'TOR. n s [multiplicateur, Fr. from multiplico, Lat.] The number by which another number is multiplied.

MULTIPLI'CITY. n. s. [multiplicité, Fr.]

1. More than one of the same kind.

Had they discoursed rightly but upon this one principle that God was a being infinitely perfect, they could never have asserted a multiplicity of gods: for, can one God include in him all perfection, and another God include in him all perfections too? Can there be any more than all? And if this all be in one, can it be also in another? South, Serm.

Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and abates the torrent of a common odium, by deriving it into many channels; and therefore if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of the object. South, Serm.

2. State of being many.

You equal Donne in the variety, multiplicity, and choice of thoughts. Dryden, Ded. to Juvenal.

MULTIPLI'CIOUS. adj. [multiplex, Lat.] Manifold. Not used.

Amphisbæna is not an animal of one denomination; for that animal is not one, but multiplicious, or many, which hath a duplicity or gemination of principal parts. Brown.

MU'LTIPLIER.† n. s. [from multiply; Fr. multiplieur.]

MULTITU'DINOUS.† adj. [from multitude.]

1. Having the appearance of a multitude.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather
Thy multitudinous sea incarnardine,
Making the green one red. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Manifold.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet that is their poison. Shakspeare.

3. Belonging to a multitude.

There was another parting speech, which was to have been presented in the person of a youth, and accompanied with divers gentlemen's younger sons of the country; but, by reason of the multitudinous press, was hindered. B. Jonson, Entertainments.

MULTI'VAGANT., MULTI'VAGOUS. adj. [multivagus, Latin.] That wanders or strays much abroad. Dict.

MUM. interject. [Of this word the supposed original is mentioned in mome: it may be observed, that when it is pronounced it leaves the lips closed. Mumme, Danish, a mask; whence mummers and maskers are the same. Upton.] A word denoting prohibition to speak, or resolution not to speak; silence; hush.

But to his speach he aunswered no whit,
But stood still mute, as if he had beene dum,
Ne signe of sence did shew, ne common wit,
As one with griefe and anguishe over-cum,
And unto every thing did aunswere mum. Spenser, F. Q.

Mum then, and no more proceed. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Well said, master; mum! and gaze your fill. Shakspeare.

Intrust it under solemn vows
Of mum, and silence, and the rose. Hudibras.

MUM.* adj. Silent.

The citizens are mum, say not a word. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

They rage with wrath, they daily fret and fume;
Ruthfull revenge them alwaies hath in sute,
And right in time makes might both mum and mute. Mir. for Mag. p. 212.

The mum club is an institution of the same nature, and as great an enemy to noise. Addison, Spect. No. 9.

MUM-BUDGET.* interj. [mum and budget. "I come to her in white, and cry mum; she cries, budget; and by that we know one another." Shakspeare, Merr. Wives of Windsor. "To play mumbudget, demeurer court, Fr." which Cotgrave renders "to be gravelled, put to silence or a nonplus."] An expression denoting secrecy as well as silence; used in a contemptuous or ludicrous manner.

I thought he laught not merier than I, when I got this money;
But mumbouget; for Carisophus I espie. Damon and Pithias, sign. C. iii. b.

They neither alledge the fond surmised causes by Frarine, nor mumble them over in mum budget, but plainlie declare the reasonable, sufficient, and necessarie causes. Fulke, Answ. to P. Frarine, (1580,) p. 20.

If a man call them to accomptes, and aske the cause of all these their tragical and cruel doings, he shall have a short answer with mum budget. Orat. against the Unl. Insur. of the Protestants, (1615,) sign. C. 8.

Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled?
Nor did I ever wince or grudge it,
For thy dear sake. Quoth she, mum-budget. Hudibras, i. iii.

MUM-CHANCE.* n. s.

1. Silence. Huloet.

To MU'MMIFY.* v. a. [mummy, and fio, Lat.] To preserve as a mummy; to make a mummy of.
Thy virtues are
The spices that embalm thee; thou art far
More richly laid, and shalt more long remaine
Still mummified within the hearts of men,
Than if to lift thee in the rolls of fame
Each marble spoke thy shape, all brass thy name. J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 50.

MU'MMY.† n. s. [mumie, French; mumia, Latin; derived by Salmasius from amomum, Lat. by Bochart from the Arabick mumia. Dr. Johnson. — The Spaniards call pissasphalt cera de minera, mineral wax, perhaps from its consistency; but the Arabians term it mumia; whence, it may be, embalmed bodies came to be called mummies, from their being preserved with this pissasphalt: and this we are the more apt to believe, since the true asphalt, or bitumen Judaicum, was very scarce. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, 1705, p. 277.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.
We have two substances for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spice; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is preserved in vials, or suffered to dry: the first kind is brought in large pieces, of a friable texture, light and spungy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second, in its liquid state, is a thick, opake, and viscous fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell: in its indurated state it is a dry, solid substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort so cheap, that we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of any bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhaled, and the embalming matter has penetrated. Hill, Mat. Med.
It is strange how long carcases have continued uncorrupt, as appeareth in the mummies of Egypt, having lasted some of them three thousand years. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Sav'd by spice, like mummies, many a year,
Old bodies of philosophy appear. Pope, Dunciad.

Goth. mord, the Teut. moord, and the old French murdre.] The act of killing a man unlawfully; the act of killing criminally.

Blood hath been shed ere now, i' the olden time,
Ere human statute purg'd the general weal;
Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd
Too terrible for the ear. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Slaughter grows murder when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryden.
The killing of their children had, in the account of God, the guilt of murder, as the offering them to idols had the guilt of idolatry. Locke.

To MU'RDER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To kill a man unlawfully.

If he dies, I murder him, not they. Dryden.

2. To destroy; to put an end to.

Can'st thou quake and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin, and stop again? Shakspeare.
Let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars to the fiery sun;
Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work. Shakspeare, Coriol.

MU'RDER. interj. An outcry when life is in danger.

Kill men i' the dark! where be these bloody thieves?
Ho, murder! murder! Shakspeare, Othello.

MU'RDERER.† n. s. [from murder.]

1. One who has shed human blood unlawfully; one who has killed a man criminally.

Thou dost kill me with thy falsehood, and it grieves me not to die; but it grieves me that thou art the murderer. Sidney.
I am his host
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eyes;
'Tis pretty sure,
That eyes, that are the frail'st and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atomies,
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers. Shakspeare.
The very horrour of the fact had stupified all curiosity, and so dispersed the multitude, that even the murderer himself might have escaped. Wotton.
Like some rich or mighty murderer,
Too great for prison, which he breaks with gold,
Who fresher for new mischiefs does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old. Dryden.
This stranger having had a brother killed by the conspirator, and having sought in vain for an opportunity of revenge, chanced to meet the murderer in the temple. Addison.
With equal terrors, not with equal guilt,
The murderer dreams of all the blood he spilt. Swift.

2. A small piece of ordnance, in ships of war; called also a murdering-piece.

A case-shot is any kind of small bullets, nailes, old iron, or the like, to put into the case, to shoot out of the ordnances or murderers. Smith's Sea Grammar, (1627.)

Mu'rderess n. s. [from murderer.] A woman that commits murder.

When by thy scorn, O murderess! I am dead,
Then shall my ghost come to thy bed,
And thee feign'd vestal in worse arms shall see. Donne.

Diana's vengeance on the victor shown,
The murderess mother, and consuming son. Dryden.

Art thou the murderess then of wretched Laius. Dryden.

Mu'rdering-piece.* n. s. A small piece of ordnance. The small cannon, which are, or were, used in the forecastle, half-deck, or steerage of a ship of war, were within a century called murdering-pieces. Malone.

This,
Like to a murdering-piece, in many places
Gives me superfluous death. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

And, like a murdering-piece, aims not at one,
But all that stand within the dangerous level.
Beaum. and Fl. Doub. Marriage.

Mu'rderment. n. s. [from murder.] The act of killing unlawfully. Not in use.

To her came message of the murderment. Fairfax.

Ere twice in murk, and occidental damp,
Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp. Shakspeare.

Murk. n. s. Husks of fruit. Ainsworth.

Mu'rky. adj. [morck, Danish.] Dark; cloudy; wanting light.

The murkiest den,
The most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion
Shall never melt mine honour into lust. Shakspeare, Tempest.

So scented the grim feature, and up-turn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air,
Sagacious of his quarry. Milton, P. L.

A murky storm deep lowering o'er our heads
Hung imminent, that with impervious gloom
Oppos'd itself to Cynthia's silver ray. Addison.

MU'RMUR. n. s. [murmur, Lat. murmure, Fr.]

1. A low shrill noise.

Flame as it moveth within itself, or is blown by a bellows, giveth a murmur or interiour sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

When the wing'd colonies first tempt the sky,
Or setting, seize the sweets the blossoms yield,
Then a low murmur runs along the field. Pope.

Black Melancholy sits,
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horrour on the woods. Pope.

2. A complaint half suppressed; a complaint not openly uttered.

Some discontents there are; some idle murmurs;
How idle murmurs!
The doors are all shut up; the wealthier sort,
With arms across, and hats upon their eyes,
Walk to and fro before their silent shops. Dryden.

To Mu'rmur. v. n. [murmuro, Lat. murmurer, Fr.]

1. To give a low shrill sound.

The murmuring surge,
That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes
Can scarce be heard so high. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Amid an isle around whose rocky shore
The forests murmur, and the surges roar,
A goddess guards in her enchanted dome. Pope.

The busy bees with a soft murmuring strain,
Invite to gentle sleep the lab'ring swain. Dryden.

2. To grumble: to utter secret and sullen discontent: with at before things, and against before persons.

The good we have enjoy'd from heaven's free will;
And shall we murmur to endure the ill? Dryden.

Murmur not at your sickness, for thereby you will sin against God's providence. Wake, Prep. for Death.

The good consequences of this scheme, which will execute itself without murmuring against the government, are very visible. Swift.

Mu'rmurer. n. s. [from murmur.] One who repines; one who complains sullenly; a grumbler; a repiner; a complainer.

Heaven's peace be with him!
That's christian care enough; for living murmurers
There's places of rebuke. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The murmurer is turned off to the company of those doleful creatures, which were to inhabit the ruins of Babylon.
Gov. of the Tongue.

Still might the discontented murmurer cry,
Ah hapless fate of man! ah wretch doom'd once to die.
Blackmore, Creation.

Mu'rmuring.* n. s. [from murmur.]

1. A low sound; a continued murmur; a confused noise

A cloud of cumbrous gnatts doe him molest,
All striving to infixe their feeble stinges,
That from their noyance he no where can rest;
But with his clownish hands their tender wings
He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their murmurings.
Spenser, F. Q.

His voice was hoarse and hollow, yet so strong,
As when you hear the murmuring of a throng
In some vast arched hall; or like as when
A lordly lion anger'd in his den
Grumbles within the earth. Drayton, David and Goliah.

2. Complaint half suppressed.

Do all things without murmurings and disputings. Phil. ii. 14.

At his return to the court he found no change in faces, but smothered murmurings for the loss of so many gallant gentlemen. Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

Murmuring is a secret discontented muttering one to another of things that we dislike, or persons that we distaste; and the very word in all languages seems as harsh unto our ears, as the sin is hateful unto our souls. Bp. Williams, Chariot of Truth, p. 238.

MU'RMURINGLY.* adv. [from murmuring.] With a low sound; mutteringly. Sherwood.

MU'RMUROUS.* adj. [from murmur.] Exciting murmur.

MURR.* n. s. A catarrh. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson notices this word in the etymology of murrain.

I never spit nor cough more than this; and that but since I caught this murre. Gascoigne, Tr. of Ariosto's Supposes, (1566.)

MU'RRAIN. † n. s. [The etymology of this word is not clear; mur is an old word for a catarrh, which might well answer to the glanders; muriana, low Latin. Skinner derives it from mori, to die. Dr. Johnson. — Minsheu derives it, with greater probability, from the Greek μαραίνω, to waste, to consume; whence the old French marrane, "sorte de maladie epidemique." Roq. Gloss. Our word was formerly written morren.] The plague in cattle.

Away ragg'd rams, care I what murrain kill. Sidney.

Some trials would be made of mixtures of water in ponds for cattle, to make them more milch, to fatten, or to keep them from murrain. Bacon.

A hallowed band
Cou'd tell what murrains, in what months begun. Garth.

MU'RRAIN.† adj. Infected with the murrain.

The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrain flock. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

MU'SCADEL.† } MU'SCADINE. } n. s. [muscat, muscadel, Fr. moscatello, Italian; either from the fragrance resembling the nutmeg, nux moscata, or from musca, a fly; flies being eager of those grapes.] A kind of sweet grape, sweet wine, and sweet pear.

[He] quaff'd off the muscadel,
And threw the sops all in the sexton's face. Shakspeare.

The muscadine stays for the bride at church. Armin, Hist. of the Two Maids, &c. (1609.)

MU'SCLE. n. s. [muscle, Fr. musculus, Lat. muscula, Sax.]

1. Muscle is a bundle of thin and parallel plates of fleshy threads or fibres, inclosed by one common membrane: all the fibres of the same plate are parallel to one another, and tied together at extremely little distances by short and transverse fibres: the fleshy fibres are composed of other smaller fibres, inclosed likewise by a common membrane: each lesser fibre consists of very small vesicles or bladders, into which we suppose the veins, arteries, and nerves to open, for every muscle receives branches of all those vessels, which must be distributed to every fibre: the two ends of each muscle or the extremities of the fibres are, in the limbs of animals, fastened to two bones, the one moveable, the other fixed; and therefore, when the muscles contract, they draw the moveable bone according to the direction of their fibres. Quincy.

The instruments of motion are the muscles, the fibres whereof, contracting themselves, move the several parts of the body. Locke.

2. A bivalve shell-fish.

Of shell-fish, there are wrinkles, limpets, cockles and muscles. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

The muse shall sing, and what she sings shall last. Pope.

To MUSE. v. n. [muser, Fr. muysen, Dutch; musso, Lat.]

1. To ponder; to think close; to study in silence.

If he spake courteously, he angled the people's hearts; if he were silent, he mused upon some dangerous plot. Sidney.

St. Augustine, speaking of devout men, noteth, how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they give unto the chapters read, how careful they were to remember the same, and to muse thereupon by themselves. Hooker.

Cæsar's father oft,
When he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses. Shakspeare.

My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and my heart muse of understanding. Psalm xlix. 3.

Her face upon a sudden glittered, so that I was afraid of her, and mused what it might be. 2 Esdras, x. 25.

All men mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not. St. Luke, iii. 15.

On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind. Dryden.

We muse so much on the one, that we are apt to overlook and forget the other. Atterbury, Serm.

2. To be absent of mind; to be attentive to something not present; to be in a brown study.

Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks?
And given my treasures and my rights of thee,
To thick-ey'd musing and curs'd melancholy. Shakspeare.

You suddenly arose and walk'd about,
Musing and sighing with your arms across. Shakspeare.

The sad king
Feels sudden terror and cold shivering,
Lists not to eat, still muses, sleeps unsound. Daniel.

3. To wonder; to be amazed.

Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will. Shakspeare.

Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends:
I have a strange infirmity. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To Muse.* v. a. To meditate; to think on.

Mu'ser. n. s. [from muse.] One who muses; one apt to be absent of mind.

Mu'set.† n. s. [in hunting.] The place through which the hare goes to relief. Dr. Johnson from Bailey. — Muset is a gap in a hedge. Cotgrave in V. Trouee.

The purblind hare,—
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles:
The many musits through the which he goes,
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes. Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.

Muse'um.† n. s. [μυσεῖον.] A repository of learned curiosities.

Our sciolists will often write musæum for museum; as Mr. Thoresby, in the account he has given us of his collection of rarities, and others; but the Greek word is μυσεῖον, i. e. museum, in English. Pegge, Anonym. v. 43.

Mu'shroom. n. s. [muscheron, Fr.]

1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered: the true champignon or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and explicate themselves almost to a flatness, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour: in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young mushrooms; these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot beds. Miller.

2. An upstart; a wretch risen from the dunghill.

Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unsown; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
The lowly native of a country town. Dryden.

Mu'shroomstone. n. s. [mushroom and stone.] A kind of fossil.

Fifteen mushroomstones of the same shape. Woodward.

Mu'sick. n. s. [μυσικὴ; musique, Fr.]

1. The science of harmonical sounds.

The man that hath no musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Now look into the musick-master's gains,
Where noble youth at vast expence is taught,
But eloquence not valu'd at a groat. Dryden, Juv.

2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.

When she spake,
Sweet words, like droping honey, she did shed;
And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly brake
A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make. Spenser, F. Q.

Such musick, as 'tis said,
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung. Milton, Ode Nativ.

By musick minds an equal temper know,
Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
Warriours she fires with animated sounds,
Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.

We have dancing-masters and musick-masters. Arbuthnot, and Pope.

3. Entertainments of instrumental harmony.

What musick, and dancing, and diversions, are to many in the world, that prayers, and devotions, and psalms are to you. Law.

Mu'sical. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]

1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.

The merry birds
Chaunted above their chearful harmony,
And made amongst themselves a sweet consort,
That quicken'd the dull sp'rit with musical comfort. Spenser, F. Q.

Sweet bird that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy;
Thee chauntress oft the wood among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton, Il Pens.

Neither is it enough to give his author's sense, in poetical expressions and in musical numbers. Dryden.

2. Belonging to musick.

Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern musick. Addison.

Mu'sically.† adv. [from musical.]

1. Harmoniously; with sweet sound.

Valentine, musically coy,
Shunn'd Phædra's arms. Addison.

2. In conformity to the rules of musick.

Though he be not apt to break out into singing, — yet he will drink often musically a health to every one of these six notes, ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la. Howell, Lett. ii. 54.

MU'SICALNESS.† n. s. [from musical.] Harmony.

The peculiar musicalness of the first of these lines, in particular, arises principally from its consisting entirely of iambic feet. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

MUSI'CIAN. n. s. [musicus, Lat. musicien, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of musick.

Though the musicians that shall play to you,
Stand in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet strait they shall be here. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakspeare.

A painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in musick, and not by rule. Bacon, Essays.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung;
Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young. Dryden.

MU'SING.* n. s. [from muse.] Meditation; contemplation.

If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Wisdom and knowledge — are sweet as the wakened musings of delightful thoughts, which not only dew the mind with perfume that ever refresh us, but raise us to the mountain that gives us view of Canaan; and shews us rays and glimpses of the glory that shall after crown us. Yet it is the object only that makes these good unto men, when God is the ocean that all his streams make way unto. Feltham on Eccles. ii. 11.

Men of learning are wont to be vilified, that they use to be so much affected with the pleasant musings of their own thoughts, as to abhor the roughness and toil of business. Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 335.

MUSK.† n. s. [muschio, Italian; musc, Fr. from the Arab. moscha, whence μόσχος or μῦσχος, Gr. Barb. V. Meursii Gloss.]

A dry, light, and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity: its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochin China: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat but taller: the bag which contains the musk, is three inches long and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly. Hill.

1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.

But ever and anon turning her muzzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a surfeit to any weak lover's stomach. Sidney.

Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the muzzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun. Cheyne.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with the tongs; if the tongs be not at hand, use the muzzle of the bellows. Swift, Direct. to Servants.

2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.

The fifth Harry from curbed licence plucks
The muzzle of restraint; and the wild dog
Shall flesh his tooth on ev'ry innocent. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;
With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound Dryden.

To MU'ZZLE. v. n. To bring the mouth near.

The bear muzzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him. L'Estrange.

To MU'ZZLE. v. a.

1. To bind the mouth.

This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd, and I
Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore best
Not wake him in his slumber. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bower,
And muzzled though they seem, the mutes devour. Dryden.
Through the town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear. Gay, Past.

2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.

The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child. L'Estrange.

3. To restrain from hurt.

My dagger muzzled
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

MU'ZZY.* adj. [a corruption from to muse; or from the Fr. musard.] Absent; forgetful; dreaming; bewildered by thought; bewildered by liquor. A low expression.

MY. pronoun possessive. [See MINE.] Belonging to me. My is used before a consonant, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both. My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.

Her feet she in my neck doth place. Spenser.
I conclude my reply with the words of a Christian poet. Bp. Bramhall.
If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection. Waller.
I shall present my reader with a journal. Addison.

MY'NCHEN. n. s. [mynchen, Saxon.] A nun. Dict.

MYNHE'ER.* n. s. [Dutch.] Sir, my lord or master, among the Dutch; among us, it usually means a Dutchman.

Our connoisseurs in their zeal all became mynheers. Coventry.

MY'OGRAPHY. n. s. [μυογραφία.] A description of the muscles.

MY'OLOGY.† n. s. [myologie, Fr. μῦς, a muscle, and λόγος, discourse, Gr.] The description and doctrine of the muscles.

To instance in all the particulars, were to write a whole system of myology. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

MY'OPE.* n. s. [myope, French; μύωψ, Gr. claudens oculos, from μύω, to close or shut, and ὤψ, the eye.] A short-sighted person. It is sometimes myops in the singular number; and myope is uncommon.

Upon the same principle we may account for the short-sighted so often rarely shutting their eye-lids, from whence they were formerly denominated myopes. Adams on Vision.

MY'OPY. n. s. [μύωψ.] Shortness of sight.

MY'RIAD.† n. s. [μυριὰς.]

1. The number of ten thousand.

Thou seest, brother, how many thousands, or rather how many myriads, that is, ten thousands, of the Jews there are which believe. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

2. Proverbially any great number.

Assemble thou,
Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief. Milton, P. L.

Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tillotson.

Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapes. Prior.

MY'RMIDON. n. s. [μυρμηδὼν.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the soldiers of Achilles.

The mass of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curio, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and composed of their own representatives. Swift.

MYRO'BALAN. n. s. [myrobalanus, Lat.] A fruit.

The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste: they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preserved. Hill.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is sweet, and yet astringent. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MYRO'POLIST. n. s. [μῦρον and πωλέω.] One who sells unguents.

MYRRH. n. s. [myrrha, Latin; myrrhe, Fr.] A gum.

Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper-corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow: its taste is bitter and acrid with a peculiar aromatick flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name. Hill, Mat. Med.

The myrrhe sweet-bleeding in the bitter wound. Spenser, F. Q.

I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wiseman, Surgery.

MY'RRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Latin.] Made of the myrrhine stone.

How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups imboss'd with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton, P. R.

MY'RTIFORM. adj. [myrtus, Lat. and form.] Having the shape of myrtle.

MY'RTLE. n. s. [myrtus, Latin; myrte, Fr.] A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.

The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rose; upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short star-like cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle
Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Marlow.

I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted though a good space one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peacham.

Nor can the muse the gallant Sidney pass
The plume of war! with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Thomson, Summer.

MYSE'LF. n. s. [my and self.]

1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it, that is, not I by proxy; not another.

As his host,
I should against his murderer shut the door,
Nor bear the knife myself. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique case.

They have missed another pain, against which I should have been at a loss to defend myself. Swift, Examiner.

3. I is sometimes omitted, to give force to the sentence.

Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
And try to gain his pardon. Addison.

MY'STAGOGUE.† n. s. [μυσαγωγος; mystagogus, Lat. mystagogue, Fr.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relicks, and shews them to strangers. Cockeram.

The mystagogue taught them, that Jupiter, Mercury, Bacchus, Venus, Mars, and the whole rabble of licentious deities, were only dead mortals. Warburton, Div. Legat. ii. § 4.

MYSTE'RIAL.* adj. [from mystery.] Containing a mystery or enigma.

Beauty and love, whose story is mysterial,
In yonder palm-tree and the crown imperial,
Do, from the rose and lily so delicious,
Promise a shade, shall ever be propitious
To both the kingdoms. B. Jonson, Masques.

MYSTE'RIARCH. n. s. [μυςήριον and ἀρχὴ.] One presiding over mysteries.

MYSTE'RIOUS. adj. [mysterieux, Fr. from mystery.]

1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.

God at last
To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd,
Though in mysterious terms. Milton, P. L.

Then the true Son of knowledge first appear'd,
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd. Denham.

2. Artfully perplexed.

Those princes who were distinguished for mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift.

Myste'riously. adv. [from mysterious.]

1. In a manner above understanding.

2. Obscurely; enigmatically.

Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

Each stair mysteriously was meant. Milton, P. L.

Myste'riousness. n. s. [from mysterious.]

1. Holy obscurity.

My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.

To My'sterize. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.

Mysterizing their ensigns, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiack. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MY'STERY.† n. s. [μυςήριον; mystere, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Upon holy days, let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Bp. Taylor.

If God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the Trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift.

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.

To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Important truths still let your fables hold,
And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.

3. A trade; a calling: in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mistery, from mestier, French, a trade. Dr. Johnson. — Mystery is a specious and easy corruption of mastery or mastery, the English of the Latin magisterium, or artificium; in French, maistrise, mestier, mestrie. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. xxxvii. Chaucer writes it mistere.

In youth he lerned hadde a good mistere:
He was a wel good wright, a carpentere. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
And that which is the noblest mysterie,
Brings to reproach and common infamy. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Instruction, manners, mysteries and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakspeare.

4. [mistere, old Fr.] A kind of ancient dramatick representation.

Dramatick poetry, in this and most other nations of Europe, owes its origin, or at least its revival, to those religious shows, which in the dark ages were usually exhibited on the more solemn festivals. At those times they were wont to represent, in the churches, the lives and miracles of the saints, or some of the more important stories of Scripture. And as the most mysterious subjects were frequently chosen, such as the Incarnation, Passion, and Resurrection of Christ, &c. these exhibitions acquired the general name of mysteries. Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Orig. of the Eng. Stage.

My'stical.
My'stick. } adj. [mysticus, Lat.]

1. Sacredly obscure.

Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor concerning the mystical way to heaven. Hooker.

From salvation all flesh being excluded this way, God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker.

2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical.

Ye five other wandering fires! that move
In mystick dance not without song, resound
His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light. Milton, P. L.

It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire. Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

3. Obscure; secret.

Lest new fears disturb the happy state,
Know, I have search'd the mystick rolls of fate. Dryden.

My'stically.† adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning; emblematically.

These two in thy sacred bosom hold,
Till mystically join'd but one they be. Donne.

Unto which I conceive the prophet Isaiah to allude, in that passage touching the city of Tyre, representing there mystically the church of Rome. More, Ant. against Idolatry, ch. 10.

My'sticalness. n. s. [from mystical.] Involution of some secret meaning.

My'sticism.* n. s. [from mystick.] The pretences of the mysticks; fanaticism.

How much nobler a field of exercise, to the devout and aspiring soul, are the seraphick entertainments of mysticism and extasy, than the mean and ordinary practice of a mere earthly and common virtue! Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

This ingenious man — has spent a long life in hunting after, and with an incredible appetite devouring, the trash dropt from every species of mysticism. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, p. 306.

My'stick.* n. s. One of an old fanatick sect, pretending to talk and think of religion in a manner above the understanding of common Christians; dissipating all due composure and recollection of mind, and laying open the heart to all the wild extravagances of frantick enthusiasm.

It is this way of thinking and talking in religion, that, I suppose, has given rise to what is called mystical theology; the teachers whereof have accordingly been styled mysticks. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

My'thical.*
My'thick. } adj. [μυθικὸς, Gr.] Fabulous.

The account we have of them, so far from being mythick or unintelligible, is most plainly written for our admonition. Shuckford on the Creation, (1753,) Pref. p. v.

Mytho'grapher.* n. s. [μῦθος, fable, and γράφω, to write, Gr.] A writer of fables.

The statues of Mars and Venus I imagined had been copied from Fulgentius, Boccacio's favourite mythographer. Warton, Hist. E. P. Add. ii. sign. e. 3.

Mytholo'gical.†
Mytholo'gick. } adj. [from mythology.] Relating to the explication of fabulous history.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by tradition stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A relation, which her masters of the mythologick prosopopeia expressed, we may suppose, by giving them in marriage to each other. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

Mytholo'gically.† adv. [from mythological.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.

The relating mythologically physical or moral truths concerning the origin and nature of things, was not perhaps, as modern writers too hastily imagine, the customary practice of Moses's age; but rather began after his times.

Shuckford on the Creat. Pref. p. vii.

MYTHO'LOGIST. n. s. [from mythology.] A relater or expositor of the ancient fables of the heathens.

The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings. Creech.

It was a celebrated problem among the ancient mythologists, What was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest? Norris, Miscell.

To MYTHO'LOGIZE. † v. n. [from mythology, mythologiser, Fr. Cotgrave.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.

MYT

He mythologizeth upon that fiction.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 320.

They mythologized, that five gods were now born, Osiris, Orus, Typho, Isis, and Nephte.

Shuckford on the Creat. Pref. p. x.

MYTHO'LOGY. n. s. [μῦθος and λόγος; mythologie, French.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.

The modesty of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance; it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia. Bentley.

N.

N, A semivowel, has in English an invariable sound: as, no, name, net; it is sometimes after m almost lost; as, condemn, contemn.

To NAB.† v. a. [nappa, Swedish.] To catch unexpectedly; to seize without warning. A word seldom used but in low language.

Old cassock, we'll nab you. Duke of Wharton, Song.

NA'DIR. n. s. [Arabick.] The point under foot directly opposite to the zenith.

As far as four bright signs comprize,
The distant zenith from the nadir lies. Creech.

NÆVE.* n. s. [neve, Fr. nævus, Lat.] A spot. This is one of the words which Dryden has been blamed for using, and is supposed to have introduced into our language. It is certainly a bad word; yet probably was in use before his employment of it; at least it was a favourite expression of his contemporary, Aubrey.

So many spots, like næves on Venus' soil.
Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

I am sorry so great a wit should have such a næve.
Aubrey, Of Chillingworth, Anecd. ii. 286.

He was a tall, handsome, and bold man; but his næve was, that he was dampnably proud.
Ib. Of Sir W. Ralegh, Anecd. ii. 509.

NAFF. n. s. [mergus cirrhatus.] A kind of tufted seabird.

NAG.† n. s. [negge, Belg. naek, Germ. from hnegga, Icel. to neigh. Serenius.]

1. A small horse. A horse in familiar language.

A hungry lion would fain have been dealing with good horse-flesh; but the nag would be too fleet. L'Estrange.

Thy nags, the leanest things alive,
So very hard thou lov'st to drive. Prior.

2. A paramour: in contempt.

Your ribauld nag of Egypt
Hoists sails, and flies. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

NA'IAD.* n. s. [Naiade, Fr. Naias, Lat.] A water-nymph.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wandering brooks,
With your sedg'd crowns, and ever harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels. Shakspeare, Tempest.

What though nor fabled Dryad haunt their grove,
Nor Naiads near their fountains rove. Shenstone.

NAIL. n. s. [næᵹl, Saxon; nagel, Germ.]

1. The hard crust or horny substance at the ends of the fingers and toes.

My nails can reach unto thine eyes. Shakspeare.

The meanest sculptor in th' Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brass, the nails and hair;
Expert in trifles. Dryden.

The nails of our fingers give strength to those parts in the various functions they are put to; and defend the numerous nerves and tendons that are under them. Ray.

2. The talons of birds; the claws or paws of beasts.

3. A spike of metal by which things are fastened together.

As one nail by strength drives out another;
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object soon forgotten. Shakspeare.

For the body of ships, no nation doth equal England, nor for the oaken timber to build them; and we need not borrow iron for spikes or nails, to fasten them together. Bacon.

The loadstone mines in the shore of India, are so placed in abundance and vigour, that it proves an adventure of hazard to pass those coasts in a ship with iron nails. Brown.

A beechen pail
Hung by the handle, on a driven nail. Dryden.

An equivocal word used for the nail of the hand or foot, and for an iron nail to fasten any thing. Watts.

4. A stud; a boss.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd avails
To writing of good sense.

...and slepten.
St. Matt. xxv.
Mancip. Prol.

5. A measure of length; two inches and

6. On the nail. Readily; immediately; without delay. I once supposed it from a counter studded with nails, but have since found in an old record, solvere super unguem. It therefore means into the hand.

We want our money on the nail,
The banker's ruin'd if he pays. Swift.

To NAIL.† v. a. [nægian, Sax.]

1. To fasten with nails; to fasten as with nails.

How shall they come to thee, whom thou hast nayled to their bed? Donne, Dev. (1624,) p. 50.

To the cross he nails thy enemies,
The law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind, with him are crucify'd. Milton, P. L.

He clasp'd his hand upon the wounded part.
The second shaft came swift and unespy'd,
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.

Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy.

NA'KED.† adj. [naquath, Goth. nacod, Sax. from na-cenned, newly born. Wachter.]

1. Wanting clothes; uncovered; bare.

A philosopher being asked in what a wise man differed from a fool? answered, Send them both naked to those who know them not, and you shall perceive. Bacon.

He pitying how they stood
Before him naked to the air, that now
Must suffer change;—
As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton, P. L.

2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprovided.

Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age,
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords,
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow. Addison.

3. Plain; evident; not hidden. [" nuda veritas." Hor.]

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.

Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men, saving only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude; but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues. Hooker.

N'·'··DLY.† adv.

ut covering.

·· things, which we pass by in their common ·s when they are nakedly represented.
Burke, Vindic. of Nat. Society.

merely; baely; in the abstract.

Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulations only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that property in all letters of aptness, to be conjoined in syllables. Holder.

3. Discoverably; evidently.

So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wise
This overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they lie. Daniel.

Truth seeketh no holes to hide itself: Princes, that will hold covenant, must deal openly and nakedly.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 92.

NA'KEDNESS.† n. s. [nacednyſſe, Sax.]

1. Nudity; want of covering.

My face I'll grime with filth;
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Nor he their outward only, with the skins
Of beasts, but inward nakedness, much more
Opprobrious! with his robe of righteousness

I entreat my gentle readers to sow on their tuckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness, but the innocence of their mother Eve. Addison, Guardian.

Thou to be strong must put off every dress,
Thy only armour is thy nakedness. Prior.

2. Want of provision for defence.

Ye are spies; to see the nakedness of the land you are come.
Genesis, xlii. 9.

3. Plainness; evidence; want of concealment.

Why seekest thou to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness? Shakspeare.

The nakedness of which opinion will not permit me to look any longer thereupon. Spencer on Prodigies, p. 221.

NALL. n. s. An awl, such as collar-makers or shoemakers use.

Whole bridle and saddle, whitleather and nall,
With collars and harness. Tusser.

NAME.† n. s. [namo, Gothick; nama, Saxon; naem, Dutch.]

1. The discriminative appellation of an individual.

What is thy name?
—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
—No: though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.
—My name's Macbeth. Shakspeare.

He called their names after the names his father had called them. Gen. xxvi. 18.

Thousands there were in darker fame that dwell,
Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryden.

2. The term by which any kind of species is distinguished.

What's in a name? That which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet. Shakspeare.

If every particular idea that we take in, should have a distinct name, names must be endless. Locke.

3. Person.

They list with women each degenerate name,
Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryden.

4. Reputation; character.

The king's army was the last enemy the west had been acquainted with, and had left no good name behind. Clarendon.

5. Renown; fame; celebrity; eminence; praise; remembrance; memory; distinction; honour.

Of them the highest. Milton, P. L.

NA'MELESS. ✝ adj. [nameleaꝛ, Saxon.]

1. Not distinguished by any discriminative appellation.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.
The milky way,
Fram'd of many nameless stars. Waller.
Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.

2. One of which the name is not known or mentioned.

Little credit is due to accusations of this kind, when they come from suspected, that is, from nameless pens. Atterbury.

Such imag'ry of greatness ill became
A nameless dwelling, and an unknown name. Harte.

NA'MELY. adv. [from name.] Particularly; specially; to mention by name.

It can be, to nature no injury, that of her we [illegible] which diligent beholders of her works have [illegible], that she provideth for all living creatures nourishment which may suffice. [illegible]

Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
To none of these, except it be the last;
Namely, some love that drew him oft from home. Shakspeare.

The council making remonstrances unto queen Elizabeth, of the continual conspiracies against her life; and namely, that a man was lately taken, who stood ready in a very suspicious manner to do the deed; advised her to go less abroad weakly attended. But the queen answered, that she had rather be dead, than put in custody. Bacon.

For the excellency of the soul, namely, its power of divining in dreams; that several such divinations have been made, none can question. Addison, Spect.

Naptakings, assaults, spoilings, and firings, have in our forefathers' days, between us and France, been common. Carew.

NAPE.† n. s. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it to come from nap, the hair that grows on it; Junius, with his usual Greek sagacity, from νάπη, a hill; perhaps from the same root with knob. Dr. Johnson. — That is from cnæp, Sax. any protuberance; hnappr, Icel. globus.] The joint of the neck behind.

Turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interiour survey of your good selves. Shakspeare.

Domitian dreamed, the night before he was slain, that a golden head was growing out of the nape of his neck. Bacon.

NA'PERY.† n. s. [naperia, Ital. nappa, a table-cloth, a napkin; nappe, Fr. naparia, low Lat. from mappa, Lat. The Scotch use naiprie, which Dr. Jamieson has noticed with this remark: "Dr. Johnson mentions napery, but without any authority; the word being scarcely known in English." It happens, however, (though Dr. Johnson indeed could find no example,) that this word is common in English, and supported by indisputable authority.] Linen for the table; linen in general.

Some her husband's gowne,
Some a pillowe of downe,
Some of the napery;
And all this shifte they make
For the good ale sake. Skelton, Poems, p. 138.

What use was there of a towel, where was no water? She that made a fountain of her eyes, made precious napary of her hair: that better flax shamed the linen in the Pharisee's chest. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Ye may see it in a servingman's fresh napery. Overbury, Charact. sign. E. 3.

NA'PHTHA.† n. s. [naphtha, Lat. naphte, Fr. Cotgrave. In the Persian language, neft, or napht. See Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 182. and Hole's Remarks on the Arabian Nights' Entert. p. 170.]

Naphtha is a very pure, clear, and thin mineral fluid, of a very pale yellow, with a cast of brown in it. It is soft and oily to the touch, of a sharp and unpleasing taste, and of a brisk and penetrating smell; of the bituminous kind. It is extremely ready to take fire. Hill, Mat. Med.

Strabo represents it as a liquation of bitumen. It swims on the top of the water of wells and springs. That found about Babylon is in some springs whitish, though it be generally black, and differs little from petroleum. Woodward.

This nephta is an oily or fat liquid substance; in colour not unlike soft white clay. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 182.

From the arched roof
Pendant by subtle magick, many a row
Of starry lamps, and burning cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. Milton, P. L.

NA'PPINESS. n. s. [from nappy.] The quality of having a nap.

NA'PKIN.† n. s. [from nap; which etymology is oddly favoured by Virgil, "Tonsisque ferunt mantilia villis;" naperia, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — It is rather a corruption, as napery is, of the Latin mappa, a cloth. See NAPERY.]

1. A cloth used at table to wipe the hands.

By art were weaved napkins, shirts, and coats, inconsumptible by fire. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Are oddly join'd by fate. Swift.

2. Obscenity; grossness of ideas.

Their nastiness, their dull obscene talk and ribaldry, cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any who does not baulk his own reason, out of love to their vice. South.

A divine might have employed his pains to better purpose, than in the nastiness of Plautus and Aristophanes. Dryden.

NA'TAL. adj. [natal, Fr. natalis, Lat.] Native; relating to nativity.

Since the time of Henry III. princes children took names from their natal places, as Edward of Carnarvon, Thomas of Brotherton. Camden.

Propitious star! whose sacred power
Presided o'er the monarch's natal hour,
Thy radiant voyages for ever run. Prior.

NATALI'TIAL.* adj. [natalitius, Lat.] Given at the day of one's nativity; consecrated to the nativity of a person.

We read in the life of Virgil, how far his natalitial poplar had outstripped the rest of its contemporaries. Evelyn, B. iv. § 13.

NA'TALS.* n. s. pl. [natalis, Lat.] Time and place of nativity. Not in use.

Why should not we with joy resound and sing
The blessed natals of our heavenly King?

NATA'TION. n. s. [natatio, Latin.] The act of swimming.

In progressive motion, the arms and legs move successively, but in natation both together. Brown, Vulg. Err.

NA'TATORY.* adj. [from natation.] Enabling to swim.

When they feel the necessity of sleep, their natatory bladder is much inflated: they can support themselves at different heights by their levity only.
On Lacepede's Hist. of Fishes, Brit. Crit. (1799,) p. 212.

NATCH.* n. s. [corrupted perhaps from notch. Malone.] That part of the ox which lies near the tail or rump, between the two loins.
Fitzherbert's Husbandry.

Width (of a cow) at the nache, 14 inches. Marshall.

NA'THLESS.† adv. [na, Sax. that is, not the less.] Nevertheless; formed thus, natheless, nath'less. Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer use natheless; and as a poetical word it was certainly of three syllables, as Spenser also uses it; afterwards contracted into two. Now obsolete.

Yet nathelesse it could not doe him die.
Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 54.

Nath'less, my brother since we passed are
Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Spenser.

The torrid clime
Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire.
Nathless he so endur'd, till on the beach
Of that inflamed sea he stood, and call'd
His legions. Milton, P. L.

NA'THMORE.† adv. [na the more.] Never the more. Spenser, from whom Dr. Johnson cites his example, does not use nathmore as a word only of two syllables, but as of three, both in the passage incorrectly cited by Dr. Johnson, and elsewhere. Obsolete.

Yet nathemore by his bold hartie speach
Could his blood-frosen heart emboldened be.
Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 25.
Yet nathemore his meaning she ared. Ib. iv. viii. 14.

NA'TION. n. s. [nation, French; natio, Latin.]

1. A people distinguished from another people; generally by their language, original, or government.

If Edward III. had prospered in his French wars, and peopled with English the towns which he won, as he began at Calais driving out the French, his successors holding the same course, would have filled all France with our nation. Ralegh.

A nation properly signifies a great number of families derived from the same blood, born in the same country, and living under the same government. Temple.

2. A great number: emphatically.

When after battle I the field have seen
Spread o'er with ghastly shapes, which once were men;
A nation crush'd! a nation of the brave!
A realm of death! and on this side the grave!
Are there, said I, who from this sad survey,
This human chaos, carry smiles away!

NA'TIONAL. adj. [national, French; from nation.]

1. Publick; general; not private; not particular.

They in their earthly Canaan plac'd,
Long time shall dwell and prosper, but when sins
National interrupt their publick peace. Milton, P. L.

Such a national devotion inspires men with sentiments of religious gratitude, and swells their hearts with joy and exultation. Addison, Freeholder.

The astonishing victories our armies have been crowned with, were in some measure the blessings returned upon that national charity which has been so conspicuous. Addison.

God, in the execution of his judgements, never visits a people with publick and general calamities, but where their sins are publick and national too. Rogers.

2. Bigotted to one's own country.

NATIONA'LITY.* n. s. [from national.] National character.

Let our friendship, let our love, that nationality of British love, be still strengthened. Howell, Lett. (dat. 1621,) ii. 18.

He could not but see in them that nationality, which I believe no liberal Scotsman will deny. Boswell, Tour to the Heb. p. 11.

To NA'TIONALIZE.* v. a. [from national.] To distinguish nationally. This is a very modern word, like denationalize. It is in use; but I have mislaid an example of it.

NA'TIONALLY. adv. [from national.] With regard to the nation.

The term adulterous chiefly relates to the Jews, who being nationally espoused to God by covenant, every sin of theirs was in a peculiar manner spiritual adultery. South.

NA'TIONALNESS. n. s. [from national.] Reference to the people in general.

NA'TIVE.† adj. [nativus, Latin; natif, Fr.]

1. Produced by nature; natural, not artificial.

She more sweet than any bird on bough,
Would oftentimes amongst them bear a part,
And strive to pass, as she could well enough,
Their native musick by her skilful art. Spenser.

This doctrine doth not enter by the ear,
But of itself is native in the breast. Davies.

2. Natural; such as is according to nature; original.

The members, retired to their homes, reassume the native sedateness of their temper. Swift.

3. Conferred by birth; belonging by birth.

But ours is a privilege ancient and native,
Hangs not on an ordinance, or power legislative;
And first, 'tis to speak whatever we please. Denham.

4. Relating to the birth; pertaining to the time or place of birth.

If these men have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment; though they can outstrip men they have no wings to fly from God. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Many of our bodies shall, no doubt,
Find native graves. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

5. Original; that which gave being.

Have I now seen death? is this the way
I must return to native dust? O sight
Of terrour, foul, and ugly to behold. Milton, P. L.

6. Born with; co-operating with; congenial.

The head is not more native to the heart,
The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

NA'TIVE. n. s.

1. One born in any place; original inhabitant.

Make no extirpation of the natives, under pretence of planting religion, God surely will no way be pleased with such sacrifices. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
The lowly native of a country town. Dryden, Juv.

There stood a monument to Tacitus the historian, to the emperors Tacitus and Florianus, natives of the place. Addison.

...es have a fuller habit, squarer, and more extended ch... than the people that be beyond us to the south. Blackmore.

... Offspring.

The accusation,
All cause unborn, could never be the native
Of our so frank donation. Shakspeare, Coriol.

NA'TIVELY.* adv. [from native.]

1. Naturally; not artificially.

We wear hair which is not natively our own. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 77.

There is something so natively great and good in a person that is truly devout, that an awkward man may as well pretend to be genteel, as an hypocrite to be pious. Tatler, No. 211.

2. Originally.

I take two names given to Christ — to be natively Chaldee words. Lightfoot, Miscell. p. 118.

This goodness of God natively proceedeth from his will, as thought and truth proceedeth from his mind. Shelford, Learned Disc. p. 184.

NA'TIVENESS. n. s. [from native.] State of being produced by nature.

NATI'VITY. n. s. [nativité, French.]

1. Birth; issue into life.

Concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour, in whose birth the births of all are only blessed. Bacon.

They looked upon those as the true days of their nativity, wherein they were freed from the pains and sorrows of a troublesome world. Nelson.

2. Time, place, or manner of birth.

My husband, and my children both,
And you the calenders of their nativity,
Go to a gossip's feast. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance or death. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

When I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears. Shakspeare, Mid. N. Dream.

Thy birth and thy nativity is of Canaan. Ezek. xvi. 3.

3. State or place of being produced.

These, in their dark nativity, the deep
Shall yield us, pregnant with infernal flame. Milton, P. L.

NA'TRON.* n. s. A sort of black salt imported from Egypt.

NA'TURAL. adj. [naturalis, Latin; naturel, Fr.]

1. Produced or effected by nature; not artificial.

There is no natural motion of any particular heavy body, which is perpetual, yet it is possible from them to contrive such an artificial revolution as shall constantly be the cause of itself. Wilkins, Dædalus.

2. Illegitimate; not legal.

This would turn the vein of that we call natural, to that of legal propagation; which has ever been encouraged as the other has been disfavoured by all institutions. Temple.

3. Bestowed by nature; not acquired.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem that the advantage lies on the side of children born from noble and wealthy parents. Swift.

4. Not forced; not farfetched; dictated by nature.

I will now deliver a few of the properest and naturallest considerations that belong to this piece. Wotton.

5. Following the stated course of things.

If solid piety, humility, and a sober sense of themselves, is much wanted in that sex, it is the plain and natural consequence of a vain and corrupt education. Law.

6. Consonant to natural notions.

Such unnatural connections become, by custom, as natural to the mind as sun and light: fire and warmth go together, narrowne...m to carry with them as natural an evidence as self-4. Meanness themselves. Locke.

anxietas.] ...e by reason, not revealed.

If God will fit...ural religion, which men might know, and and emptying th... unto, by the meer principles of reason, im- to the narrowne...leration and experience, without the help of but mercy in a... Wilkins.

8. Tender; affectionate by nature.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes, ...
He wants the natural touch. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

9. Unaffected; according to truth and reality.

What can be more natural than the circumstances in the behaviour of those women who had lost their husbands on this fatal day. Addison.

10. Opposed to violent: as, a natural death.

NA'TURAL. n. s. [from nature.]

1. An idiot; one whom nature debars from understanding; a fool.

That a monster should be such a natural. Shakspeare.

Take the thoughts of one out of that narrow compass he has been all his life confined to, you will find him no more capable of reasoning than a perfect natural. Locke.

2. Native; original inhabitant. Not in use.

The inhabitants and naturals of the place, should be in a state of freemen. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

Oppression, in many places, wears the robes of justice, which domineering over the naturals may not spare strangers, and strangers will not endure it. Ralegh, Essays.

3. Gift of nature: nature; quality. Not in use.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things. B. Jonson.

To consider them in their pure naturals, the earl's intellectual faculties were his stronger part, and the duke, his practical. Wotton.

NA'TURALISM.* n. s. [from natural.] Mere state of nature.

Those frolicksome, revelling, and thoroughly natural people, who give a full swing to their desires and appetites: — Those spirited and wanton cross-worms, as they call themselves, who are striving with speed and alacrity to come up to the naturalism and lawless privileges of the first class. Bp. Lavington, Moravians Comp. and Det. p. 63.

Lord Bolingbroke died in 1751, and his philosophical works were published in 1753. Every one knows the principles and presumption of that unhappy nobleman. He was of that sect, which, to avoid a more odious name, chooses to distinguish itself by that of naturalism. Hurd, Life of Bp. Warburton.

NA'TURALIST.† n. s. [naturaliste, Fr. Cotgrave.] A student in physicks, or natural philosophy.

Admirable artifice! wherewith Galen, though a mere naturalist, was so taken, that he could not but adjudge the honour of a hymn to the wise Creator. More.

It is not credible, that the naturalist could be deceived in his account of a place that lay in the neighbourhood of Rome. Addison on Italy.

NATURA'LITY.* n. s. [naturalité, Fr.] Naturalness. Not in use.

This distinction will be found of most general use, forasmuch as there is such an intricate mixture of naturality and preternaturality in age. Smith on Old Age, (1666,) p. 133.

NATURALIZA'TION n. s. [from naturalize.] The act of investing aliens with the privileges of native subjects.

The Spartans were nice in point of naturalization; whereby, while they kept their compass, they stood firm; but when they did spread, they became a windfal Bacon.

Encouragement may be given to any merchants that shall come over and turn a certain stock of their own, as naturalization, and freedom from customs the two first years. Temple.

Enemies, by taking advantage of the general naturalization act, invited over foreigners of all religions. Swift.

To NA'TURALIZE.† v. a. [naturalizer, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. To adopt into a community; to invest with the privileges of native subjects.

The lords informed the king, that the Irish might not be naturalized without damage to themselves or the crown. Davies.

2. To make natural; to make easy like things natural.

He rises fresh to his hammer and anvil; custom has naturalized his labour to him. South.

NA'TURALLY. adv. [from natural.]

1. According to the power or impulses of unassisted nature.

Our sovereign good is desired naturally; God, the author of that natural desire, hath appointed natural means whereby to fulfil it; but man having utterly disabled his nature unto these means, hath had other revealed, and hath received from heaven a law to teach him, how that which is desired naturally, must now supernaturally be attained. Hooker.

If sense be not certain in the reports it makes of things to the mind, there can be naturally no such thing as certainty of knowledge. South.

When you have once habituated your heart to a serious performance of holy intercession, you have done a great deal to render it incapable of spite and envy, and to make it naturally delight in the happiness of mankind. Law.

2. According to nature; without affectation: with just representation.

These things so in my song, I naturally may show;
Now as the mountain high; then as the valley low;
Here fruitful as the mead; there, as the heath be bare;
Then, as the gloomy wood, I may be rough, tho' rare. Drayton.

That part
Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd. Shakspeare.

This answers fitly and naturally to the place of the abyss before the deluge, inclos'd within the earth. Burnet.

The thoughts are to be measured only by their propriety, that is, as they flow more or less naturally from the persons and occasions. Dryden.

3. Spontaneously; without art; without cultivation: as there is no place where wheat naturally grows.

NA'TURALNESS. n. s. [from natural.]

1. The state of being given or produced by nature.

The naturalness of a desire, is the cause that the satisfaction of it is pleasure, and pleasure importunes the will; and that which importunes the will, puts a difficulty on the will refusing or forbearing it. South.

2. Conformity to truth and reality: not affectation.

He must understand what is contained in the temperament of the eyes, in the naturalness of the eyebrows. Dryden.

Horace speaks of these parts in an ode that may be reckoned among the finest for the naturalness of the thought, and the beauty of the expression. Addison.

NA'TURE. n. s. [natura, Latin; nature, Fr.]

1. An imaginary being supposed to preside over the material and animal world.

Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

When it was said to Anaxagoras, the Athenians have condemned you to die; he said, and nature them. Bacon.

Let the postilion nature mount, and let
The coachman art be set. Cowley.

Heaven bestows
At home all riches that wise nature needs. Cowley.

Simple nature to his hope was giv'n,
Beyond the cloud topt hill an humbler heav'n. Pope.

2. The native state or properties of any thing, by which it is discriminated from others.

Why leap'd the hills, why did the mountains shake,
What ail'd them their fix'd natures to forsake. Cowley.

Between the animal and rational province, some animals have a dark resemblance of the influxes of reason: so between the corporeal and intellectual world, there is man participating much of both natures. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The nature of brutes, besides what is common to them with plants, doth consist in having such faculties, whereby they are capable of apprehending external objects, and of receiving pain or pleasure from them. Wilkins.

3. The constitution of an animated body.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rd earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakspeare.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Disposition of mind; temper.

Nothing could have subdued nature
To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters. Shakspeare.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. The regular course of things.

My end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence. Shakspeare.

6. The compass of natural existence.

If their dam may be judge, the young apes are the most beautiful things in nature. Glanville.

7. The constitution and appearances of things.

The works, whether of poets, painters, moralists, or historians, which are built upon general nature, live for ever; while those which depend for their existence on particular customs and habits, a partial view of nature, or the fluctuation of fashion, can only be coeval with that which first raised them from obscurity. Reynolds.

8. Natural affection, or reverence; native sensations.

Have we not seen
The murdering son ascend his parent's bed,
Through violated nature force his way,
And stain the sacred womb where once he lay? Pope.

9. The state or operation of the material world.

He binding nature fast in fate,
Left free the human will. Pope.

10. Sort; species.

A dispute of this nature caused mischief in abundance, betwixt a king and an archbishop. Dryden.

11. Sentiments or images adapted to nature, or conformable to truth and reality.

Only nature can please those tastes which are unprejudiced and refined. Addison.

Nature and Homer were, he found, the same. Pope.

12. Physicks; the science which teaches the qualities of things.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night,
God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

13. Of this word which occurs so frequently, with significations so various, and so difficultly defined, Boyle has given an explication, which deserves to be epitomised.

Nature sometimes means the Authour of Nature, or natura naturans; as, nature hath made man partly corporeal and partly immaterial. For nature in this sense may be used the word Creator.

Nature sometimes means that on whose account a thing is what it is, and is called, as when we define the nature of an angle. For nature in this sense may be used essence or quality.

Nature sometimes means what belongs to a living creature at its nativity, or accrues to it by its birth, as when we say, a man is noble by nature, or a child is naturally forward. This may be expressed by saying, the man was born so; or, the thing was generated such.

Nature sometimes means an internal principle of local motion, as we say, the stone falls, or the flame rises by nature; for this we may say, that the motion up or down is spontaneous, or produced by its proper cause.

Nature sometimes means the established course of things corporeal; as, nature makes the night succeed the day. This may be termed established order, or settled course.

Nature means sometimes the aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, especially a living one;

as when physicians say, that nature is strong, or nature left to herself, will do the cure. For this may be used, constitution, temperament, or structure of the body.

Nature is put likewise for the system of the corporeal works of God; as there is no phœnix or chimera in nature. For nature thus applied, we may use the world, or the universe.

Nature is sometimes indeed commonly taken for a kind of semideity. In this sense it is best not to use it at all.

Boyle, Free Enq. into the Received Notion of Nature.

To NA'TURE.* v. a. To endow with natural qualities. We have long ceased to use the verb, but we retain the participle in good-natured, ill-natured, and other compounds.

He whiche natureth every kynde,
The myghty God, so as I fynde,
Of man, whiche is his creature,
Hath so devyded the nature. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

NATU'RITY. n. s. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. Not used.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto naturity. Brown.

NA'VAL. adj. [naval, Fr. navalis, Lat.]

1. Consisting of ships.

Encamping on the main,
Our naval army had besieged Spain;
They that the whole world's monarchy design'd,
Are to their ports by our bold fleet confin'd. Waller.
As our high vessels pass their watery way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay. Prior.

2. Belonging to ships.

Masters of such numbers of strong and valiant men, as well as of all the naval stores that furnish the world. Temple.

NA'VALS.* n. s. pl. Used by Clarendon for naval affairs; perhaps by no other writer.

It was a day of signal triumph, the action of it having much surpassed all that was done in Cromwell's time, whose navals were much greater than had ever been in any age.
Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 507.

NA'VARCHY.* n. s. [navarchus, Lat. captain of a ship.] Knowledge of managing ships.

Navarchy, and making models for buildings and riggings of ships. Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Harthb, (1648,) p. 6.

NAVE. n. s. [naf, Sax.]

1. The middle part of the wheel in which the axle moves.

Out, out, thou strumpet fortune! all you gods
In general synod take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n,
As low as to the fiends. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

In the wheels of waggons the hollows of the naves, by their swift rotations on the ends of the axle-trees, produce a heat sometimes so intense as to set them on fire. Ray.

2. [From navis, nave, old Fr.] The middle part of the church distinct from the aisles or wings.

It comprehends the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel. Ayliffe, Parergon.

NA'VEL. n. s. [nafela, navela, Sax.]

1. The point in the middle of the belly, by which embryos communicate with the parent.

Imbrasides addrest
His javeline at him, and so ript his navill, that the wound,
As endlessly it shut his eyes, so open'd on the ground,
It pour'd his entrailes. Chapman.
Our children, while within the womb they live,
Feed by the navel: here they feed not so. Davies.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments. Brown.

Me from the womb the midwife muse did take,
She cut my navel. Cowley.

There is a superintending providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the secundines, and parted from the navelstring. Derham.

2. The middle; the interiour part.

Being press'd to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Within the navel of this hideous wood,
Immur'd in cypress shades, a sorcerer dwells. Milton, Comus.

NA'VELGALL. n. s.

Navelgall is a bruise on the top of the chine of the back, behind the saddle, right against the navel, occasioned either by the saddle being split behind, or the stuffing being wanting, or by the crupper buckle sitting down in that place, or some hard weight or knobs lying directly behind the saddle.

NA'VELWORT. n. s. [cotyledon.] A plant. It hath the appearance of houseleek. Miller.

NA'VEW. n. s. [napus, Lat. navet, naveau, French.] A plant. It agrees in most respects with the turnep; but has a lesser root, and somewhat warmer in taste. In the isle of Ely the species, which is wild, is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil. Miller.

NAU'FRAGE.* n. s. [naufrage, old Fr. naufragium, Lat.] Shipwreck. Cockeram.

Guilty of the ruin and naufrage, and perishing of infinite subjects. Bacon, Speech at taking his Place in Chancery.

NAU'FRAGOUS.* adj. [from naufragus, Lat.] Causing shipwreck.

That tempestuous, and oft naufragous sea, wherein youth and handsomeness are commonly tossed with no less hazard to the body than the soul. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 33.

NAUGHT. adj. [nahe, naphihe, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.] Bad; corrupt; worthless: it is now hardly used but in ludicrous language.

With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught. Hooker.

Thy sister's naught: Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here. Shakspeare.

NAUGHT. n. s. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly, written nought. See AUGHT, NOUGHT, and OUGHT.

Be you contented
To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench. Shakspeare.

NAU'GHTILY. adv. [from naughty.] Wickedly; corruptly.

NAU'GHTINESS.† n. s. [from naughty.] Wickedness; badness. Slight wickedness or perverseness, as of children.

No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own; and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I loth to do. Sidney.

Idleness, the bane of body and mind, the nurse of naughtiness. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 83.

NAU'GHTLY.* adv. [from naught.] Badly; corruptly.

Thus did I for want of better wit,
Because my parents naughtly brought me up.
Mir. for Mag. p. 297.

NAU'GHTY. adj. The same with naught.

1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney.

These naughty times
Put bars between the owners and their rights. Shakspeare.

How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shakspeare.

2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.

If gentle slumbers on thy temples creep,
But, naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,
Betake thee to thy bed. Dryden.

NAVI'CULAR. adj. [navicularis, Lat. naviculaire, Fr.] In anatomy, the third bone in each foot that lies between the astragalus and ossa cuneiformia. Dict.

NA'VIGABLE. adj. [navigable, French; navigabilis, Lat.] Capable of being passed by ships or boats.

The first-peopled cities were all founded upon these navigable rivers or their branches, by which the one might give succour to the other. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Many have motioned to the council of Spain, the cutting of a navigable channel through this small isthmus, so to shorten their common voyages to China, and the Moluccoes. Heylin.

Almighty Jove surveys
Earth, air, and shores, and navigable seas. Dryden.

NA'VIGABLENESS. n. s. [from navigable.] Capacity to be passed in vessels.

To NA'VIGATE. v. n. [navigo, Lat. naviger, Fr.] To sail; to pass by water.

The Phœnicians navigated to the extremities of the western ocean. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To NA'VIGATE. v. a. To pass by ships or boats.

Drusus, the father of the emperour Claudius, was the first who navigated the northern ocean. Arbuthnot on Coins.

NAVIGA'TION. n. s. [navigation, Fr. from navigate.]

1. The act or practice of passing by water.

Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever. Bacon.

The loadstone is that great help to navigation. More.

Rude as their ships, was navigation then,
No useful compass or meridian known;
Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
And knew no north but when the polestar shone. Dryden.

When Pliny names the Pœni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phœnicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Vessels of navigation.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

NA'VIGATOR. n. s. [navigateur, Fr. from navigate.] Sailor; seaman; traveller by water.

By the sounding of navigators, that sea is not three hundred and sixty foot deep. Brerewood.

The rules of navigators must often fail. Brown.

The contrivance may seem difficult, because the submarine navigators will want winds, tides, and the sight of the heavens. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only a globe in speculation, has since been surrounded by the boldness of many navigators. Temple.

NAU'LAGE.✝ n. s. [naulage, Fr. Cotgrave; from naulum, Lat.] The freight of passengers in a ship.

NAU'MACHY.✝ n. s. [naumachie, Fr. naumachia, Lat.] A mock sea fight. Cockeram.

And now the naumachie begins,
Close to the surface. Lovelace, Luc. Posth. (1659,) p. 43.

NAUSEA.✱ n. s. [Latin; ναυτία, Gr. from ναῦς, a ship.] Sea-sickness; any sickness.

The sickness and nausea, usual in other cases of the like nature, being marvellously in this transferred to the by-standers. Dodsley.

To NAU'SEATE.✝ v. n. [from nauseo, Lat.] To grow squeamish; to turn away with disgust.

We are apt to nauseate a very [illegible] know that an ill cook did dress it. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, [illegible]

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be [illegible] with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it. [illegible] Mind.

To NAU'SEATE. v. a.

1. To loath; to reject with disgust.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cry'd up in one age, which are decryed and nauseated in another. Brown.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauseates the praise, which in her youth she won,
And hates the muse by which she was undone. Dryden.

The patient nauseates and loaths wholesome foods. Blackmore.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the best,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.

He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were nauseated, then gave her a lash with his tail. Swift.

NAU'SEOUS. adj. [from nausea, Latin; nauseé, Fr.] Loathsome; disgustful; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles, wherein children take delight,
Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite:
And from those gaieties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome. Ray.

Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.

NAU'SEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsomely; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nauseously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve. Dryden.

Their satire's praise;
So nauseously and so unlike they paint. Garth, Disp.

NAU'SEOUSNESS. n. s. [from nauseous.] Loathsomeness; quality of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

NAU'TICAL.✝ } adj. [nauticus, Lat.] Pertaining to NAU'TICK. } sailors.

He elegantly shewed by whom he was drawn, which depainted the nautical compass with aut magnes, aut magna. Camden.

How did thy senses quail,
Seeing the shores so swarm'd, and round about
Hearing confused shoutings of the nautick rout!
Fanshaw, Poems, (1676,) p. 288.

NAUTILUS. n. s. [Latin; nautile, Fr.] A shell fish furnished with something analogous to oars and a sail.

Learn of the little nautilus to sail,
Spread the thin oar and catch the driving gale. Pope.

NA'VY.✝ n. s. [navye, nave, old French; navis, Lat.] An assemblage of ships, commonly ships of war; a fleet.

We mette of shyppes a grete nave,
Full of people that wolde in to Irlonde.
Old Morality of Hycke-Scorner.

On the western coast rideth a puissant navy. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Levy money, and return the same to the treasurer of the navy for his majesty's use. Clarendon.

The narrow seas can scarce their navy bear,
Or crowded vessels can their soldiers hold. Dryden.

NAWL.✱ n. s. An awl. See NALL.

The master was appointed to bore their ears through with a nawl, and so to mark them for perpetual servants. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 120.

NAY.† adv. [Goth. ne; Sax. na, or ne aye.]

1. No; an adverb of negation.

Disputes in wrangling spend the day,
Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

2. Not only so, but more. A word of amplification.

A good man always profits by his endeavour, yea, when he is absent; nay, when dead, by his example and memory; so good authors in their stile. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

He catechized the children in his chamber, giving liberty nay invitation to as many as would, to come and hear. Fell, Life of Hammond.

This is then the allay of Ovid's writings, which is sufficiently recompensed by his other excellencies; nay, this very fault is not without its beauties; for the most severe censor cannot but be pleased. Dryden.

If a son should strike his father, not only the criminal but his whole family would be rooted out, nay, the inhabitants of the place where he lived, would be put to the sword, nay, the place itself would be razed. Addison, Spect.

3. Word of refusal.

They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out. Acts, xvi. 37.

The fox made several excuses, but the stork would not be said nay; so that at last he promised him to come. L'Estrange.

He that will not when he may,
When he would he shall have nay. Old Proverb.

Nay.* n. s. Denial; refusal. See Denay.

There is a faire bedde there also, which she determineth to sell, and would have you to have the first nay of it. Radcliffe, Letters, (L. Mar. 26. 1613.)

There was no nay, but I must in,
And take a cup of ale. W. Browne.

To Nay. v. a. To refuse. Obsolete.

The state of a cardinal — was naied and denaied him. Holinshed, Chron. of Eng. p. 620.

Na'yward.* n. s. [nay and ward.] Tendency to denial. This word has been given by Dr. Johnson as a third illustration of nayword, but Shakspeare's expression is certainly nayward, as Mr. Mason also has noticed.

But I'd say, he had not,
And, I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying,
Howe'er you lean to the nayward. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Na'yword.† n. s. [nay and word.]

1. A proverbial reproach; a bye word.

If I do not gull him into a nayword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

2. A watch word. Not in use.

I have spoke with her; and we have a nayword how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry mum; she cries budget; and by that we know one another. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Nazare'ne.* n. s.

1. One of Nazareth.

He shall be called a Nazarene. St. Matt. ii. 23.

2. One of the early Christian converts, so denominated, from their faith in Jesus of Nazareth, both by Jew and Gentile.

A ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarenes. Acts, xxiv. 5.

The Pharisees seem to have composed the chief body of those Christian converts, who, in the earlier times, were distinguished by the appellation of Nazareens. These, though they embraced Christianity, yet they entered so little into the real spirit and genius of it, that they were still fond of the beggarly elements and carnal ordinances of the ceremonial law. Bp. Percy.

Na'zarite.* n. s. [from the Heb. nazar, to separate, to distinguish.] One separated from others by a profession of some extraordinary and special acts of religion. Bp. Patrick.

When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to separate themselves unto the Lord; he shall separate himself from wine and strong drink. Num. vi. 2, 3.

I with this messenger will go along,
Nothing to do, be sure, that may dishonour
Our Law, or stain my vow of Nazarite. Milton, S. A.

Ne.† adv. [Saxon. This particle was formerly of very frequent use, both singly and by contraction in compound words: as, nill for ne will or will not; nas for ne has or has not; nis for ne is or is not.]

1. Neither.

His warlike shield all cover'd closely was,
Ne might of mortal eye be ever seen,
Not made of steel, nor of enduring brass. Spenser, F. Q.

2. Not.

Yet who was that Belphœbe, he ne wist. Spenser, F. Q.

But when she saw at last, that he ne would
For ought or nought be wonne unto her will,
She turn'd her love to hatred manifold. Ib. v. iv. 30.

Neaf.† n. s. [nefi, Icelandick.] A fist. It is retained in Scotland, and the north of England: pl. neaves. See Neif.

Give me thy neaf, Monsieur Mustardseed. Shakspeare.

To NEAL.† v. a. [anælan, Sax. to heat; neelen, old French, to enamel.] To temper by a gradual and regulated heat.

The workmen let it cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their nealing heats; lest it should shiver by a violent succeeding of air in the room of fire. Digby.

This did happen for want of the glasses being gradually cooled or nealed. Boyle.

If you file, engrave, or punch upon your steel, neal it first, because it will make it softer, and consequently work easier. The common way is to give it a blood-red heat in the fire, then let it cool of itself. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

To Neal. v. n. To be tempered in fire.

Reduction is chiefly effected by fire, wherein if they stand and neal, the imperfect metals vapour away. Bacon.

NEAP.* n. s. [nep-flod, Sax. Skinner derives it from næpre, næpτιζ, want, poor; implying, I suppose, that a neap is when the water flows not copious.] Low tide. Seamen use the expression "deep neap."

The mother of waters, the great deep, hath lost nothing of her ancient bounds. Her motion of ebbing and flowing, of high springs and dead neaps, are as constant as the changes of the moon. Hakewill on Providence.

Neap.† adj. Low; decrescent. Used only of the tide. See the substantive.

The waters are in perpetual agitation of flux and refluxes; even when no wind stirs, they have their neap and spring tides. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 66.

How doth the sea constantly observe its ebbs and flows, its springs and neap-tides, and still retain its saltness, so convenient for the maintenance of its inhabitants. Ray.

Ne'aped.* adj. [from neap.] Wanting sufficient depth of water. Spoken of ships. The same as beneaped. See Beneaped.

Neapo'litan.* n. s. A native of the kingdom of Naples.

O Stephano! two Neapolitans 'scap'd. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Neapo'litan.* adj. Belonging to Naples.

When a Neapolitan cavalier has nothing else to do, he gravely shuts himself up in his closet, and falls a tumbling over his papers to see if he can start a law-suit, and plague any of his neighbours. Addison on Italy.

NEAR.† prep. [neah, Sax. from neah, nigh; Su. Goth. and Belg. naer.] At no great distance from;

close to; nigh; not far from. It is used both of place and time.

I have heard thee say,
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love died. Shakspeare.
Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
As one near death to those that wish him live. Shakspeare.
With blood the dear alliance shall be bought,
And both the people near destruction brought. Dryden.
To the warlike steed thy studies bend,
Near Pisa's flood the rapid wheels to guide. Dryden.

This child was very near being excluded out of the species of man, barely by his shape. Locke.

And flatter'd out of all, believing lies
Against his Maker: no decree of mine
Concurring to necessitate his fall. Milton, P. L.

Our voluntary service he requires,
Not our necessitated. Milton, P. L.

Neither the Divine Providence, or his determinations, persuasions, or inflexions of the understanding, or will of rational creatures doth deceive the understanding, or pervert the will, or necessitate or incline either to any moral evil. Hale.

The politician never thought that he might fall dangerously sick, and that sickness necessitate his removal from the court. South.

The Eternal, when he did the world create
And other agents did necessitate,
So what he order'd they by nature do,
Thus light things mount, and heavy downward go,
Man only boasts an arbitrary state. Dryden.

The perfections of any person may create our veneration, his power, our fear, and his authority arising thence, a servile and necessitated obedience, but love can be produced only by kindness. Rogers.

NECESSITA'TION. n. s. [from necessitate.] The act of making necessary; fatal compulsion.

This necessity, grounded upon the necessitation of a man's will without his will, is so far from lessening those difficulties which flow from the fatal destiny of the Stoicks, that it increaseth them. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Where the law makes a certain heir, there is a necessitation to one; where the law doth not name a certain heir, there is no necessitation to one, and there they have power or liberty to choose. Bramhall against Hobbes.

NECE'SSITIED. adj. [from necessity.] In a state of want. Not used.

This ring was mine, and when I gave it Helen,
I bad her, if her fortunes ever stood
Necessitied to help, that by this token
I would relieve her. Shakspeare, All's well.

NECE'SSITOUS.✝ adj. [necessiteux, Fr. Cotgrave.] Pressed with poverty.

They who were envied found no satisfaction in what they were envied for, being poor and necessitous. Clarendon.

In local seisures, and righting himself on those who, though not perfectly insolvent, are yet very necessitous, a good man will not be hasty in going to extremities. Kettlewell.

There are multitudes of necessitous heirs and penurious parents, parsons in pinching circumstances, with numerous families of children. Arbuthnot.

NECE'SSITOUSNESS. n. s. [from necessitous.] Poverty, want, need.

Universal peace is demonstration of universal plenty, for where there is want and necessitousness, there will be quarrelling. Burnet, Theory.

NECE'SSITUDE. n. s. [from necessitudo, Lat.]

1. Want; need.

The mutual necessitudes of human nature necessarily maintain mutual offices between them. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Friendship.

NECE'SSITY. n. s. [necessitas, Lat.]

1. Cogency, compulsion; fatality.

Necessity and chance
Approach not me, and what I will is fate. Milton, P. L.

Though there be no natural necessity, that such things must be so, and that they cannot possibly be otherwise, without implying a contradiction, yet may they be so certain as not to admit of any reasonable doubt concerning them. Wilkins.

2. State of being necessary; indispensableness.

Urge the necessity, and state of times. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Racine used the chorus in his Esther, but not that he found any necessity of it: it was only to give the ladies an occasion of entertaining the king with vocal musick. Dryden.

We see the necessity of an augmentation, to bring the enemy to reason. Addison.

3. Want; need; poverty.

The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The cause of all the distractions in his court or army, proceeded from the extreme poverty, and necessity his majesty was in. Clarendon.

We are first to consult our own necessities, but then the necessities of our neighbours have a christian right to a part of what we have to spare. L'Estrange.

4. Things necessary for human life.

These should be hours for necessities,
Not for delights, times to repair our nature
With comforting repose, and not for us
To waste these times. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Great part of the world are free from the necessities of labour and employment, and have their time and fortunes in their own disposal. Law.

5. Cogency of argument; inevitable consequence.

There never was a man of solid understanding, whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensive inspection advised, but that he hath found, by an irresistible necessity, one true God and everlasting being. Ralegh, Hist.

Good-nature, or beneficence and candour, is the product of right reason, which of necessity will give allowance to the failings of others. Dryden.

6. Violence; compulsion.

Never shall
Our heads get out, if once within we be,
But stay compell'd by strong necessity. Chapman.

NECK.✝ n. s. [Sax. hnecca, necca, collum; Icel. hnacke, Su. nacke, occiput; ab Icel. and Sueth. ant. hniga, inclinare, (to bow, to bend.) Serenius.]

1. Exigency; pressing difficulty; necessity.

The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

That spirit that first rush'd on thee,
In the camp of Dan,
Be efficacious in thee now at need. Milton, S. A.
In thy native innocence proceed,
And summon all thy reason at thy need. Dryden.

2. Want; distressful poverty.

Famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shakspeare.

Defer not to give to him that is in need. Ecclus. iv. 3.

The distant heard, by fame, her pious deeds;
And laid her up for their extreamest needs;
A future cordial for a fainting mind. Dryden.

God sometimes calls upon thee to relieve the needs of thy brother, sometimes the necessities of thy country, and sometimes the urgent wants of thy prince. South.

3. Want; lack of any thing for use.

God grant we never may have need of you. Shakspeare.

God, who sees all things intuitively, neither stands in need of logick, nor uses it. Baker.

To NEED. v. a. [from the noun.] To want; to lack; to be in want of; to require.

Basest beggars
Are in the poorest thing superfluous;
Allow not nature more than nature needs,
Man's life is cheap as beast's. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The whole need not a physician, but the sick. St Matt.

Thou thy regal sceptre shalt lay by,
For regal sceptre then no more shall need. Milton.

To ask whether the will has freedom? is to ask, whether one power has another? A question too absurd to need an answer. Locke.

To NEED. v. n.

1. To be wanted; to be necessary.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me whiles the famous ancestors
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Spenser.

When we have done it, we have done all that is in our power, and all that needs. Locke.

2. To have necessity of any thing; to be in want of any thing.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep: but how incoherent and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being, those who are acquainted with dreams need not be told. Locke.

He that would discourse of things, as they agree in the complex idea of extension and solidity, needed but use the word body. Locke.

NEE'DER. n. s. [from need.] One that wants any thing.

If the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send
O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
In th' absence of the needer. Shakspeare, Coriol.

NEE'DFUL.† adj. [need and full.]

1. Distresed; in want. This is the primary sense, but not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

He nought helpeth needful in their neede.

Why standest thou so far off, O Lord, and hidest thy face in the needful time of trouble. Psalm x. 1. Common Pr.

2. Necessary; indispensably requisite.

Give us all things that be needful, both for our souls and bodies. Common Prayer.

Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needful in our loves, fitting our duty? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

All things needful for defence abound,
Mnestheus, and brave Seresthus walk the round. Dryden.

To my present purpose it is not needful to use arguments, to evince the world to be finite. Locke.

A lonely desart and an empty land,
Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A single house to their benighted guest. Addison on Italy.

NEE'DFULLY. adv. [from needful.] Necessarily.

They who
Dare for these poems, yet both ask and read,
And like them too; must needfully, though few,
Be of the best. B. Jonson.

NEE'DFULNESS. n. s. [from needful.] Necessity.

NEE'DILY. adv. [from needy.] In poverty; poorly.

NEE'DINESS. n. s. [from needy.] Want; poverty.

Whereas men have many reasons to persuade; to use them all at once, weakeneth them. For it argueth a neediness in every of the reasons, as if one did not trust to any of them, but fled from one to another. Bacon.

NEE'DLE.† n. s. [Goth. nethal; Sax. nedl; Icel. nael; à Teut. neten, suere. Wachter and Serenius.]

1. A small instrument pointed at one end to pierce cloth; and perforated at the other to receive the thread, used in sewing.

For him you waste in tears your widow'd hours,
For him your curious needle paints the flowers. Dryden.

The most curious works of art, the sharpest finest needle, doth appear as a blunt rough bar of iron coming from the furnace of the forge. Wilkins.

2. The small steel bar which in the mariner's compass stands regularly north and south.

Go bid the needle its dear north forsake,
To which with trembling reverence it doth bend. Cowley.

The use of the loadstone, and the mariners' needle was not then known. Burnet, Theory.

NEE'DLE-WORK. n. s. [needle and work.]

1. The business of a sempstress.

2. Embroidery by the needle.

In needle-works and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a lightsome ground, than a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground. Bacon.

In a curious brede of needle-work, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one from the first appearance of the other. Addison.

NEE'DLESS. adj. [from need.]

1. Unnecessary; not requisite.

Their exception against easiness, as if that did nourish ignorance, proceedeth altogether of a needless jealousy. Hooker.

This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Would not these be great and needless abatements of their happiness, if it were confined within the compass of this life only. Atterbury.

Money we either lock up in chests, or waste it in needless and ridiculous expences upon ourselves, whilst the poor and the distressed want it for necessary uses. Law.

2. Not wanting. Out of use.

For his weeping in the needless stream,
Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament,
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Shakspeare, As you like it.

NEE'DLESSLY. adv. [from needless.] Unnecessarily; without need.

The consequences whereof have been to render languages more difficult to be learnt, and needlessly to advance orthography into a troublesome and laborious art. Holder, Elem. of Speech, Pref.

NEE'DLESSNESS. n. s. [from needless.] Unnecessariness.

To explain St. Paul's epistles, after so great a train of expositors, might seem censurable for its needlessness, did not daily examples of pious and learned men justify it. Locke.

NEE'DMENT. n. s. [from need.] Something necessary.

Behind
His scrip did hang, in which his needments he did bind. Spenser, F. Q.

NEEDS.† adv. [neder, Saxon, unwilling. Dr. Johnson. — It is merely need is, used parenthetically. Mr. H. Tooke.] Necessarily; by compulsion; indispensably.

The general and perpetual voice of men is as the sentence of God himself; for that which all men have at all times learned, nature herself must needs have taught. Hooker.

God must needs have done the thing which they imagine was to be done. Hooker.

I must needs after him, madam, with my letter. Shakspeare.

Another being elected and his ambassadours returned, he would needs know the cause of his repulse. Davies.

I perceive
Thy mortal sight to fail: objects divine
Must needs impair, and weary, human sense. Milton, P. L.

To say the principles of nature must needs be such as philosophy makes them, is to set bounds to omnipotence. Glanville.

A trial at law must needs be innocent in itself, when nothing else corrupts it; because it is a thing which we cannot but want, and there is no living in this world without it. Kettlewell.

I have affairs below,
Which I must needs dispatch before I go. Dryden.

NEE'DY. adj. [from need.] Poor; necessitous; distressed by poverty.

Their gates to all were open evermore,
And one sat waiting ever them before,
To call in comers by, that needy were and poor. Spenser.

— In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An aligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

The poor and needy praise thy name. Ps. lxxiv. 21.

We bring into the world a poor needy uncertain life, short at the longest, and unquiet at the best. Temple.

Being put to right himself upon the needy, he will look upon it as a call from God to charity. Kettlewell.

Nuptials of form, of interest, or of state,
Those seeds of pride are fruitful in debate:
Let happy men for generous love declare,
And choose the needy virgin, chaste and fair. Granville.

To relieve the needy, and comfort the afflicted, are duties that fall in our way every day. Addison, Spect.

NEEL.* n. s. [nael, Icel. naael, Dan.] A needle. Written also neele and neld.

These and ill lucke together —
Have stacke away my dear neele.

Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry.
Shakspeare, Pericles, (1607.)

Their thimbles into armed gauntlets change,
Their neelds to lances. Shakspeare, K. John.

For thee fit weapons were
Thy neld and spindle, not a sword and spear.
Fairfax, Tass. xx. 95.

NE'ER. [for never.]

It appears I am no horse,
That I can argue and discourse;
Have but two legs, and ne'er a tail. Hudibras.

To NEESE.† v. n. [nieren, Saxon; niesen, Teut. niessen, German; from naje, the nose.] To sneeze; to discharge flatulencies by the nose. Used in Scotland, and in the north of England.

He went up and stretched himself upon him; and the child neesed seven times, and opened his eyes. 2 Kings, iv. 35.

The whole quire hold their hips, and loffe;
And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and swear
A merrier hour was never wasted there.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

How apt our nature is to catch and propagate the infection of a superstitious tradition, may appear from that ancient and modern usage of praying for a person upon neezing, the vulgar presages consequent to the approach of any strange fish to our shore, the regarding of any casual stops and breaches in any known rivers, any odd noises, &c. Spencer on Prodigies, p. 61.

NEE'SING.* n. s. [from neese.] The act of sneezing; sternutation.

By his neesings a light doth shine, and his eyes are like the eye-lids of the morning. Job, xli. 18.

You summer neezings when the sun is set,
That fill the air with a quick fading fire,
Cease from your flashings! More, Philos. Poems, (1647,) p. 323.

NEE'SWORT.* n. s. An herb. Sherwood.

NEF. n. s. [old French; from nave.] The body of a church; the nave.

In vain our sires have nobly fought.
Green's Poem of the Spleen, (1754,) p. 23.

NEFA'RIOUS. adj. [nefarius, Latin.] Wicked; abominable.

The most nefarious bastards, are they whom the law stiles incestuous bastards, which are begotten between ascendants and descendants, and between collateral, as far as the divine prohibition extends. Ayliffe, Parergon.

NEFA'RIOUSLY.* adv. [from nefarious.] Abominably; wickedly.

That unhallowed villany nefariously attempted upon the person of our agent. Milton, Letters of State.

NEGA'TION. n. s. [negatio, Lat. negation, Fr.]

1. Denial: the contrary to affirmation.

Our assertions and negations should be yea and nay, for whatsoever is more than these is sin. Rogers.

2. Description by denial, or exclusion, or exception.

Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be present with it; as when we say a stone is inanimate, or blind, or deaf. Watts, Logick.

Chance signifies, that all events called casual, among inanimate bodies, are mechanically and naturally produced according to the determinate figures, textures, and motions of those bodies, with this only negation, that those inanimate bodies are not conscious of their own operations. Bentley.

3. Argument drawn from denial.

It may be proved in the way of negation, that they came not from Europe, as having no remainder of the arts, learning, and civilities of it. Heylin.

NE'GATIVE.† adj. [negatif, Fr. negativus, Lat.]

1. Denying; contrary to affirmative.

If thou wilt confess,
Or else be impudently negative,
To have nor eyes, nor ears, nor thought.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Implying only the absence of something; not positive; privative.

There is another way of denying Christ with our mouths which is negative, when we do not acknowledge and confess him. South.

Consider the necessary connection that is between the negative and positive part of our duty. Tillotson.

3. Having the power to withhold, though not to compel.

Denying me any power of a negative voice as king, they are not ashamed to seek to deprive me of the liberty of using my reason with a good conscience. King Charles.

NE'GATIVE. n. s.

1. A proposition by which something is denied.

Of negatives we have the least certainty; they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillotson.

2. A particle of denial; as, not.

A purer substance is defin'd,
But by an heap of negatives combin'd;
Ask what a spirit is, you'll hear them cry,
It hath no matter, no mortality. Cleaveland.

To NE'GATIVE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To dismiss by negation.

The proposal was negatived by a small majority. Andrews, Anecd. p. 169.

NE'GATIVELY. adv. [from negative.]

This my long suffering, and my day of grace,
Those who neglect and scorn shall never taste. Milton, P. L.

3. To postpone.

I have been long a sleeper; but I trust
My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded. Shakspeare.

NEGLE'CT. n. s. [neglectus, Lat.]

1. Instance of inattention.

2. Careless treatment; scornful inattention.

I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence or purpose of unkindness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. Negligence: frequency of neglect.

Age breeds neglect in all, and actions
Remote in time, like objects remote in place,
Are not beheld at half their greatness. Denham.

4. State of being unregarded.

Rescue my poor remains from vile neglect,
With virgin honours let my herse be deck't,
And decent emblem. Prior.

NEGLE'CTER.† n. s. [from neglect.] One who neglects.

Christianity has backed all its precepts with eternal life, and eternal death, to the performers or neglecters of them. South, Serm. vii. 99.

NEGLE'CTFUL. adj. [neglect and full.]

1. Heedless; careless; inattentive: with of.

Moral ideas not offering themselves to the senses, but being to be framed to the understanding, people are neglectful of a faculty they are apt to think wants nothing. Locke.

Though the Romans had no great genius for trade, yet they were not entirely neglectful of it. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Treating with indifference.

If the father caress them when they do well, shew a cold and neglectful countenance to them upon doing ill, it will make them sensible of the difference. Locke on Education.

NEGLE'CTFULLY. adv. [from neglectful.] With heedless inattention; careless indifference. Not used.

NEGLE'CTINGLY.* adv. [from the part. neglecting.] Carelessly; inattentively.

I then, all smarting with my wounds, being cold,
Out of my grief and my impatience
To be so pester'd with a popinjay,
Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what. Shakspeare, Hen. IV, P. I.

NEGLE'CTION. n. s. [from neglect.] The state of being negligent.

Sleeping neglection doth betray to loss
The conquests of our scarce cold conqueror. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

NEGLE'CTIVE.† adj. [from neglect.] Inattentive to; regardless of.

An absolute forbearance, and neglective forgetfulness, of all earthly comforts. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 167.

It is a wonder they should be so neglective of their own children. Fuller, Holy War, p. 202.

I wanted not probabilities sufficient to raise jealousies in any king's heart, not wholly stupid, and neglective of the publick peace. King Charles.

*NEGLIGE'E. n. s. [French.] A sort of fashionable gown, which the ladies continued to wear in the early part of the present reign.

He fancied twenty Cupids prepared for execution in every folding of her white negligee. Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

NE'GLIGENCE.† n. s. [negligence, Fr. negligentia, Latin.]

1. Habit of omitting by heedlessness, or of acting carelessly.

By a thorough contempt of little excellencies, he is perfectly master of them. This temper of mind leaves him under no necessity of studying his air; and he has this peculiar distinction, that his negligence is unaffected. Spectator, No. 75.

2. Instance of neglect.

She let it drop by negligence
And, to the advantage, I being here, took't up. Shakspeare.

NE'GLIGENT. adj. [negligent, Fr. negligens, Lat.]

1. Careless; heedless; habitually inattentive.

My sons, be not now negligent; for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him. 2 Chron. xxix. 11.

2. Careless of any particular: with of before a noun.

Her daughters see her great zeal for religion; but then they see an equal earnestness for all sorts of finery. They see she is not negligent of her devotion; but then they see her more careful to preserve her complexion. Law.

We have been negligent in not hearing his voice. Baruch, i. 19.

3. Scornfully regardless.

Let stubborn pride possess thee long,
And be thou negligent of fame;
With ev'ry muse to grace thy song,
May'st thou despise a poet's name. Swift, Miscell.

NE'GLIGENTLY. adv. [from negligent.]

1. Carelessly; heedlessly; without exactness.

Insects have voluntary motion, and therefore imagination; and whereas some of the ancients have said that their motion is indeterminate, and their imagination indefinite, it is negligently observed; for ants go right forwards to their hills, and bees know the way to their hives. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame.
In both our English genius is exprest,
Lofty and bold, but negligently drest. Waller.

In comely figure rang'd my jewels shone,
Or negligently plac'd for thee alone. Prior.

2. With scornful inattention.

Nego'tiable.✱ adj. [negotium, Latin.] Capable of being negotiated.

Nego'tiant.✱ n. s. [from negotiate.] A negotiator; one employed to treat with others.

Ambassadours, negotiants, and generally all other ministers of mean fortune, in conversation with princes and superiours must use great respect. Ralegh, Arts of Emp. ch. 25.

To NEGO'TIATE. v. n. [negocier, Fr. from negotium, Lat.] To have intercourse or business; to traffick; to treat: whether of publick affairs, or private matters.

Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

She was a busy negotiating woman, and in her withdrawing chamber had the fortunate conspiracy for the king against king Richard been hatched. Bacon, Hen. VII.

It is a common errour in negotiating; whereas men have many reasons to persuade, they strive to use them all at once, which weakeneth them. Bacon.

They that received the talents to negotiate with, did all of them, except one, make profit of them. Hammond.

A steward to embezzle those goods he undertakes to manage; an embassador to betray his prince for whom he should negotiate; are crimes that double their malignity from the quality of the actors. Decay of Chr. Piety.

I can discover none of these intercourses and negotiations, unless that Luther negotiated with a black boar. Atterbury.

To Nego'tiate.✱ v. a. To manage; to conclude by treaty or agreement.

Lady—is gone into the country with her lord, to negotiate, at leisure, their intended separation. Ld. Chesterfield.

Negotia'tion. n. s. [negociation, Fr. from negotiate.] Treaty of business, whether publick or private.

Oil is slow, smooth, and solid; so are Spaniards observed to be in their motion: Though it be a question yet unresolved, whether their affected gravity and slowness in their negotiations have tended more to their prejudice or advantage. Howard.

They ceased not from all worldly labour and negotiation. White.

Nego'tiator. n. s. [negociateur, Fr. from negotiate.] One employed to treat with others.

Those who have defended the proceedings of our negotiators at Gertruydenberg, dwell much upon their zeal in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands; but say nothing to justify those demands. Swift.

NE'GRO. n. s. [Spanish; negre, Fr.] A blackmoor.

Negroes transplanted into cold and flegmatic habitations, continue their hue in themselves and their generations. Brown.

Ne'gus.✱ n. s. A mixture of wine, water, sugar, lemon, and nutmeg.

The mixture now called negus was invented in Queen Anne's time by Colonel Negus. Malone, Life of Dryden, p. 484.

Reach me thy neif. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

To NEIGH.† v. n. [hnægan, Saxon; naeyen, Teut. hinnio, Latin.] To utter the voice of a horse or mare.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shakspeare.

They were as fed horses, every one neighed. Jer. v. 8.

The generous horse, that nobly wild,
Neighs on the hills, and dares the angry lion. Smith.

Neigh. n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of an horse.

It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage. Shakspeare.

Nei'ghing.✱ n. s. [from neigh.] The voice of a horse or mare.

The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan: the whole land trembled at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones. Jer. viii. 16.

Shrill neighings fill the neighbouring plain. Dryden.

NEI'GHBOUR.† n. s. [nehȝebuр, nehbuр, Saxon; from neh, nigh, near, and ȝebuр, an inhabitant.]

1. One who lives near to another.

A kid sometimes for festivals he slew,
The choicer part was his sick neighbour's due. Harte.

2. One who lives in familiarity with another; a word of civility.

Masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,
Will you undo yourselves? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. Intimate; confident.

The deep revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shakspeare.

4. [In divinity.] One partaking of the same nature, and therefore entitled to good offices.

Sins against men are injuries; hurts, losses and damages, whereby our neighbour is in his dignity, life, chastity, wealth, good name, or any way justly offended, or by us hindred. Perkins.

The gospel allows no such term as a stranger; makes every man my neighbour. Sprat, Serm.

You should always change and alter your intercessions, according as the needs and necessities of your neighbours or acquaintance seem to require. Law.

Nei'ghbour.✱ adj. Near to another; adjoining; next.

I long'd the neighbour town to see. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Jan.

The Woodberry so nigh, and neighbourly doth live,
With Abberley his friend. Drayton.

He steals my customers; twelve he has under bonds never to return; judge if this be neighbourly dealing. Arbuthnot.

NEI'GHBOURLY.† adv. [from neighbour.] With social civility.

'Being neighbourly admitted, — by the courtesy of England, to hold possessions in our province, a country better than their own. Milton, Observ. on the Articles of Peace.

NEI'GHBOURSHIP.* n. s. [from neighbour.] State of being near each other.

How happy are the dead, who quietly rest
Beneath these stones! each by his kindred laid,
Still in a hallow'd neighbourship with those,
Who when alive his social converse shar'd.
Miss Baillie, Series of Plays on the Passions, (1798)

NEI'THER.† conjunct. [naþðer, naðær, Sax. ne either.]

1. Not either. A particle used in the first branch of a negative sentence, and answered by nor. Dr. Johnson. — Improperly used when more than two things come under consideration: as where Addison uses "determined in his conduct neither by the dictates of his own conscience, the suggestions of true honour, nor the principles of religion," he should have either left out "the suggestions of true honour," or he should have said, "is not determined by the dictates of his own conscience, the suggestions of true honour, or the principles of religion." Bp. Hurd.

He was neither there ne here,
But clene out of himselfe away,
That he n'ot wot to thinke or say. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king. 1 Kings, xxii. 31.

Men lived at home, neither intent upon any foreign merchandise, nor inquisitive after the lives and fortunes of their neighbours. Heylin.

2. It is sometimes the second branch of a negative or prohibition to any sentence.

Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it. Gen. iii. 3.

This commandment standeth not for a cypher, neither is it read and expounded in vain among Christians. White.

3. Sometimes at the end of a sentence it follows as a negative; and though not very grammatically, yet emphatically, after another negative; in old English two negatives denied.

If it be thought that it is the greatness of distance, whereby the sound cannot be heard; we see that lightnings and coruscations, near at hand, yield no sound neither. Bacon.

Men come not to the knowledge of which are thought innate, till they come to the use of reason, nor then neither. Locke.

NEI'THER. pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Which of them shall I take?
Both, one, or neither? neither can be
If both remain alive. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The balance, by a propensity to either side, inclined to neither. Fell.

Suffice it that he's dead; all wrongs die with him:
Thus I absolve myself, and excuse him,
Who sav'd my life and honour, but praise neither. Dryden.

Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither. Locke.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother; but independent of each other. Locke.

NEM-CON.* An abbreviation of the Latin nemine contradicente, no one opposing; often used in colloquial language. See CON.

NE'MOROUS.* adj. [nemorosus, Lat.] Woody. Cockeram.

Paradise itself was but a kind of nemorous temple, or sacred grove. Evelyn, B. iv. § 4.

To NEMPNE.* v. a. [nemnan, Saxon.] To name. Obsolete.

Ye moten nempne him to what place also. Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

As much disdeigning to be so misdempt,
Or a warmonger to be basely nempt. Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 29.

*NE'NIA. n. s. [Greek.] A funeral song; an elegy.

NE'NUPHAR. n. s. [nymphæa, Latin.] Water lily, or water rose.

NEOLO'GICAL.* adj. [neologique, Fr.] Employing new words or phrases.

Such examples really make one tremble; and will, I am convinced, determine my fair fellow-subjects and their adherents to adopt, and scrupulously conform to, [Dr.] Johnson's rules of true orthography by book. In return to this concession, I seriously advise him to publish, by way of appendix to his great work, a genteel neological dictionary, containing those polite, though perhaps not strictly grammatical, words and phrases, commonly used, and sometimes understood, by the beau monde. Ld. Chesterfield, World, No. 101.

*NEO'LOGY. n. s. [neologie, Fr. from the Greek νέος, new, and λόγος, a word, discourse.] Invention or use of new words and phrases.

They endeavour by a sort of neology of their own to confound all ideas of write and wrong. Boothby on Burke, p. 266.

NEO'LOGISM.* n. s. [neologisme, Fr.] A new and quaint expression.

NE'OPHYTE.† n. s. [neophyte, Fr. νεὸς and φύω.] One regenerated; a convert; one entered into a new state.

In effects of grace, which exceed far the effects of nature, we see St. Paul makes a difference; between those he calls neophytes, that is newly grafted into Christianity; and those that are brought up in the faith. Bacon, Sp. on the Union of Laws.

He tells thee true, my noble neophyte; my little grammaticaster, he does. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

NE'OPHYTE.* adj. Newly entered into an employment.

It is with your young grammatical courtier, as with your neophyte player, a thing usual to be daunted at the first presence or interview. B. Jonson, Cynth. Revels.

NEOTE'RICK.† n. s. [neotericus, Lat. from νέος, new, Gr. νεώτερος, more recent.] One of modern times.

I refer you to the voluminous tomes of Galen, Areteus, Rhasis, &c. and those exact neotericks, Savanorala, Capivaccius, Donatus. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 7.

The students in that profession [divinity] should apply themselves in the first place to the reading of the Scriptures, next the councils and ancient fathers, and then the schoolmen; excluding those neotericks, both Jesuits and Puritans, who are known to be meddlers in matters of state and monarchy.

The King's Lett. to Vice-Ch. of Oxf. (1622.) A. Wood, Ann.

We are not to be guided either by the misreports of some ancients, or the capricios of one or two neotericks. Grew.

NEOTE'RICAL.* } NEOTE'RICK. } adj. Modern; novel; late.

They were the inventions of men, which lived in diverse ages, and had also diverse ends, some being ancient, others neoterical. Bacon, Pref. to Wisdom of the Ancients.

I advise you not to neglect old authors; for though we be come as it were to the meridian of truth, yet there be many neoterical commentators, and self-conceited writers, that eclipse her in many things, and go from " obscurum" to " obscurius." Howell, Lett. iv. 31.

NEP.† n. s. [nepeta, Lat.] The herb catmint.

The dog when he is stomach-sick can go right to his proper grass, the cat to her nep, the goat to his hemlock.
Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 51.

NEPE'NTHE.† n. s. [Gr. νη, and πένθος; Fr. népenthès.] A drug that drives away all pains.

Not that Nepenthes, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this. Milton, Comus.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transport,
Lull'd with the sweet nepenthe of a court;
There where no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,
Once break their rest nor stir them from their place. Pope.

NE'PHEW. n. s. [nepos, Latin; neveu, French.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.

Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brighest nephew and whom best I love. Dryden.

I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother? Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.

With what intent they were first published, those words of the nephew of Jesus do plainly signify, after that my grandfather Jesus had given himself to the reading of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and had gotten therein sufficient judgement, he proposed also to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom. Hooker.

Her sire at length is kind,
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.

All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd. Spenser.

NEPHRI'TICAL.† } NEPHRI'TICK. } adj. [νεφριτικός; nephretique, Fr.]

1. Belonging to the organs of urine.

Mr. Harison hath been of late somewhat more than heretofore troubled with certain nephritical fits; but they are transient and light. Wotton to Sir E. Bacon, Rem. p. 481.

A very valuable medicine, and of great account in divers cases, particularly asthmas, nephritick pains, nervous colicks, and obstructions. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 62.

2. Troubled with the stone.

The diet of nephritick persons ought to be opposite to the alkalescent nature of the salts in their blood. Arbuthnot.

3. Good against the stone.

The nephritick stone is commonly of an uniform dusky green; but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow. Woodward.

NE'POTISM. n. s. [nepotisme, French; nepos, Latin.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendour; for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families. Addison on Italy.

NE'REID.* n. s. [Nereis, Lat.; pl. Nereides, daughters of Nereus.] A sea-nymph.

Her gentlewomen, like the Nereids,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,
And made their bends adornings. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

NERVE.† n. s. [nervus, Latin; nerf, French.]

1. The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body; they have also blood vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve sends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglio or plexus. Quincy.

What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. It is used by the poets for sinew or tendon.

If equal powres
Thou wouldst inflame, amids my nerves, as then
I could encounter with three hundred men. Chapman

Strong Tharysmed discharged a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and cut the nerves in two. Pope, Odyss.

3. Force; strength.

The nerve and emphasis of the verb will lie in the preposition. Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 20.

To NERVE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To strengthen.

Thou, last,
Tremendous goddess, nerve this lifted arm! Aaron Hill.

NE'RVELESS.† adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head. Pope, Dunciad.

O'er all profound dejection sat,
And nerveless fear. Thomson, Liberty, P. iii.

The western eloquence, in its turn, appeared nerveless and effeminate, frigid or insipid, to the hardy and inflamed imaginations of the east. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, p. 71.

NE'RVOUS.† adj. [nervosus, Latin.]

1. Full of nerves.

The body of this fish is three yards long, and one yard broad, thick skinn'd, without scales, narrow towards the tail which is nervous, slow in swimming, wanting fins.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 26.

We may imagine what acerbity of pain must be endured by our Lord — by the piercing his hands and feet, parts very nervous, and exquisitely sensible. Barrow, vol. i. S. 32.

2. Well strung; strong; vigorous.

As " sine nervis esse" is a phrase for debility, so to be nervous, is taken to be valid and strong.
Waterhous on Fortescue, (1663,) p. 197.

What nervous arms he boasts, how firm his tread,
His limbs how turn'd. Pope, Odyss.

3. Relating to the nerves; having the seat in the nerves.

The venal torrent, murm'ring from afar,
Whisper'd no peace to calm this nervous war;
And Philomel, the siren of the plain,
Sung soporifick unisons in vain. Harte.

4. [In medical cant.] Having weak or diseased nerves.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Cheyne.

NE'RVOUSLY.* adv. [from nervous.] With strength; with force.

He thus nervously describes the strength of custom.
Warton, Hist. E. P. iv. 66.

NE'RVOUSNESS.* n. s. [from nervous.] Vigour; strength.

If there had been epithets joined with the other substantives, it would have weakened the nervousness of the sentence.
Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

NE'RVY. adj. [from nerve.] Strong; vigorous. Not in use.

Death, that dark spirit, in his nervy arm doth lie,
Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die. Shakspeare.

NE'SCIENCE.† n. s. [from nescio, Latin.] Ignorance; the state of not knowing.

Not vincible ignorance, or of things he might know, but invincible; not privative ignorance, or of things he ought to know, but mere nescience; in brief, ignorance: — simple ignorance, and not sinful ignorance.
Walsall, Life of Chr. (1615,) sign. B. 4.

God fetched it about for me, in that absence and nescience of mine. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages, have resolved their knowledge into Socrates his sum total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a professed nescience. Glanville, Scepsis.

NESH.† adj. [neſc, Sax.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Skinner. The word is used in several parts of England, sometimes with the pronunciation of naish or nash; and it is old in our language.

For love his herte is tendre and neshe.
Chaucer, Court of Love.

The nesh tops of the young hazel. Crowe, Lewesdon Hill.

NESS.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality; as, poisonous, poisonousness; turbid, turbidness; lovely, loveliness; from niſſe, Saxon.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from neſe, Saxon; a nose of land, or headland.

NEST.† n. s. [neſt, Saxon; the past participle of neſan, to visit frequently, to haunt. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 375.]

1. The bed formed by the bird for incubation and feeding her young.

If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, thou shalt not take the dam with the young. Deut. xxii. 6.

Th' example of the heavenly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark,
Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

2. Any place where animals are produced.

Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted. Bentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Not farre away, not meete for any guest,
They spide a little cottage, like some poor man's nest.
Spenser, F. Q.

Come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep. Shakspeare.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither, for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or repositories.

To NEST.† v. n. [from the noun.] To build nests.

This poor dove, being driven thrice away by that horrible northern wind, which razed at length the dove-house and the city, did she not nest, and as it were hide her head, in secret holes? Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 279.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nested within his leaves.
Howell, Voc. For.

NE'STEGG. n. s. [nest and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for shew,
Like nesteggs, to make clients lay. Hudibras.

To NE'STLE.† v. n. [neſtlian, Saxon.] To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle till succours came. Bacon.

A cock got into a stable was nestling in the straw among the horses. L'Estrange.

The king's fisher wonts commonly by the waterside, and nestles in hollow banks. L'Estrange.

Fluttering there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own. Dryden.

The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the snails nestle all the winter. Addison on Italy.

Mark where the shy directors creep,
Nor to the shore approach too nigh;
The monsters nestle in the deep,
To seize you in your passing by. Swift, Miscell.

To NE'STLE. v. a.

1. To house, as in a nest.

Poor heart!
That labour'st yet to nestle thee,
Thou think'st by hov'ring here to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Donne.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And nestled in his little head. Prior.

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.

This Ithacus, so highly is endear'd
To this Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds:
She, like his mother, nestles him. Chapman, Iliad.

NE'STLING.† n. s. [neſtlinᵹ, Saxon.]

1. A young bird in the nest: in some parts, the smallest bird of the nest, and called also nestlecock.

Second brothers, and poor nestlings. B. Hall, Sat. ii. 2.

The chief object of children, looking after nests, is the eggs, or nestlings, not the bird which lays them. Barrington, Ess. 4.

2. A receptacle; a nest. Not in use.

They [the physicians] inquire not of the diversities of the parts, the secrecies of the passages, and the seats or nestlings of the humours. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 2.

NE'STLING.* adj. Newly hatched; newly deposited in the nest.

I have taken four young ones from a hen sky-lark, and placed in their room five nestling nightingales, as well as five wrens, the greater part of which were reared by the foster-parent. Barrington, Ess. 4.

NESTO'RIAN.* n. s. One of the followers of Nestorius, whose heresy was founded in the fifth century, and whose distinguishing tenet Hooker notices in the following example.

To gather therefore into one sum all that hath hitherto been spoken touching this point, there are but four things which concur to make complete the whole state of our Lord Jesus Christ; his deity, his manhood, the conjunction of both, and the distinction of the one from the other, being joined in one. Four principal heresies there are, which have in those things withstood the truth: Arians, by bending themselves against the deity of Christ; Apollinarians, by maiming and misinterpreting that which belongeth to his human nature; Nestorians, by renting Christ asunder, and dividing him into two persons; the followers of Eutyches, by confounding in his person those natures which they should distinguish.
Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 54.

NET.† n. s. [nati, Goth. net, Icel. net, Sax. from the Germ. neten, suere. Serenius.]

1. A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net, nor lime,
The pitfall nor the gin. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Impatience intangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

2. Any thing made with interstitial vacuities.

He made nets of chequered work for the chapiters, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings, vii. 17.

The vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thomson.

To NET.* v. n. [from the noun.] To knit a net; to knot.

Ideal visits I often pay you, see you posting round your sylvan walks, or sitting netting in your parlour, and thinking of your absent friends. A. Seward, (Lett. 1789,) ii. 314.

NET.* adj. [net, French; netto, Ital.]

1. Pure; clear; genuine.

Her breast all naked, as nett ivory
Without adorne of gold or silver bright
Wherewith the craftesman wonts it beautify,
Of her dew honour was despoyled quight.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 20.

2. Clear; denoting the total of a receipt of salary or income after certain deductions.

The net revenues of the crown, at the abdication of K. James, without any tax on land, &c. amounted to somewhat more than two millions. Bolingbroke on Parties, Lett. 18.

3. Clear; denoting the weight of any commodity, after allowances have been made for tare and tret.

To NET.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To bring as clear produce.

NE'THER. adj. [neoðer, Saxon; neder, Dutch. It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we say the nether part, but never say this part is nether than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems comprised in the word beneath. Nether is not now much in use.]

1. Lower; not upper.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. Deut. xxiv. 6.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and nether great lip. Peacham.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew

The upper part whereof was whey,
The nether, orange mix'd with grey. Hudibras.

A beauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts. Roscommon.

As if great Atlas from his height
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight,
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall
Should gape immense, and rushing down o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first sublime in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shews you are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can revenge. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Numberless were those bad angels, seen
Hovering on wing under the cope of hell,
'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires. Milton, P. L.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise,
In emulation opposite to heaven. Milton, P. L.

The gods with hate beheld the nether sky,
The ghosts repine. Dryden, Æn.

NE'THERMOST. adj. [superl. of nether.] Lowest.

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell. Psalm lxxxvi. 13.

Undaunted to meet there whatever power,
Or spirit of the nethermost abyss
Might in that noise reside. Milton, P. L.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very nethermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself would be too good for him. South.

Heraclitus tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex nethermost. Keil against Burnet.

NE'TTING. n. s. A reticulated piece of work.

NE'TTLE.† n. s. [netel, Sax. naella, Icel. to prick, to sting. Serenius.] A stinging herb well known.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle. Shakspeare.

Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That none for them can, when they perish, grieve. Waller.

To NE'TTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate: to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself. L'Estrange.

Although at every part of the Apostle's discourse some of them might be uneasy and nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was still observed. Bentley.

NE'TTLER.* n. s. [from nettle.] One who provokes; that which stings or irritates.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

These are the nettlers, these are the blabbing books that tell, though not half your fellows' feats.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

NE'TWORK. n. s. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the intersections.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship emboss'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fingering fine;
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

A large cavity in the sinciput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addison, Spect.

Whoever contemplates with becoming attention this curious and wonderful network of veins, must be transported with admiration. Blackmore.

NE'VER.† adv. [ne ever, næfre, Sax. ne æfre, not ever, Goth. niaivi, i. e. ne and aiv.]

1. At no time.

Never, alas, the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame. Cowley.

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.

Congreve.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

Death still draws nearer, never seeming near. Pope.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of solecism; as, he is mistaken though never so wise. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such however is the common use of the word among the best authors. Dr. Johnson. — "Be the distance never so remote:" Some have thought this mode of expression incongruous and ungrammatical: but never is the same as not ever; and the sentence is to be filled up thus: "be the distance not [near, but] ever so remote." Addison, Spect. No. 590. This, then, is one of those elliptical forms which are to be explained "by observing nicely the posture of the mind in discoursing," (to use Mr. Locke's words,) and not by attending merely to the obvious sense of the terms employed. For, in discoursing, we love to contract our ideas, though the opposition be not always, or but imperfectly expressed. Never so remote, if we regard this posture of the mind, is, therefore, as intelligible, and as proper as ever so remote; and, till of late, was more commonly used. We now say ever so remote, more clearly indeed, but with something less force: for never so implies an effort, or vehemence in asserting, which ever so has not. However, as perspicuity is the main object of grammar, I acknowledge it to be a good general rule to avoid not only real but seeming incongruities of speech. Bp. Hurd.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say. Gen. xxxiv. 12.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body, instantly make a transcursion throughout the whole body. Bacon.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never so slow degrees. Wh. Duty of Man.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light, and never so near him. Atterbury.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whosoever has a friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective. Not any; but in reality it is not ever.

He answered him to never a word, insomuch that the governour marvelled. St. Matt. xxvii. 14.

There would be never a plain text. Atterbury, Serm. iii.

5. It is much used in composition: as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature assureth us, by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Ralegh.

But a smooth and stedfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combin'd,
Kindle never-dying fires. Carew.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude. Milton, Lycidas.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flowers,
Revive and raise themselves with moderate showers;
But over-charg'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist. Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays. Roscommon.

Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays. Dryden.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryden.

Farewell, ye never-opening gates. Dryden.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find;
Meet stores of cold so greedily pursued,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackmore.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's self lay dead. Pope.

What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy screw'd up front, thy state grimace. Swift.

NEVERTHELE'SS. adv. [never the less.] Notwithstanding that.

They plead that even such ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished. Hooker.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart; nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

NEU'ROLOGY. n. s. [νεῦρον and λόγος.] A description of the nerves.

NEU'ROSPAST.* n. s. [neurospaston, Lat. νευροσπαστέω, Gr. nervis seu fidiculis traho, moveo.] A puppet: a figure put in motion.

That outward form is but a neurospast;
The soul it is, that, on her subtile ray
That she shoots forth, the limbs of moving beast
Doth stretch strait forth.
More, Immortal. of the Soul, (1647,) i. ii. 34.

NEU'ROTOMY. n. s. [νεῦρον and τέμνω.] The anatomy of the nerves.

NEU'TER. adj. [neuter, Latin; neutre, Fr.

1. Indifferent; not engaged on either side.

The general division of the British nation is into whigs and tories; there being very few, if any, who stand neuter in the dispute, without ranging themselves under one of these denominations. Addison, Freeholder.

2. [In grammar.] A noun that implies no sex.

The adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make it grammar. Dryden.

A verb neuter is that which signifies neither action nor passion; but some state or condition of being; as, sedeo, I sit. Clarke, Latin Grammar.

NEU'TER.† n. s. One indifferent and unengaged.

He is an odious neuter, a lukewarm Laodicean.
Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 81.

The learned heathens may be looked upon as neuters in the matter, when all these prophecies were new to them, and their education had left the interpretation of them indifferent. Addison on the Christian Religion.

NEU'TRAL. adj. [neutral, French.]

1. Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.

Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate, and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. Shakspeare.

He no sooner heard that king Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states. Addison on the War.

2. Indifferent; neither good nor bad.

Some things good, and some things ill do seem,
And neutral some, in her fantastick eye. Davies.

3. Neither acid nor alkaline.

Salts which are neither acid nor alkaline, are called neutral. Arbuthnot.

NEU'TRAL. n. s. One who does not act nor engage on either side.

The treacherous who have misled others, and the neutrals and the false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, are to be noted. Bacon.

NEU'TRALIST.* n. s. [from neutral.] An indifferent or careless being; one who is on neither side.
Bullokar, (ed. 1656.)

NEUTRA'LITY.† n. s. [neutralité, French.]

1. A state of indifference; of neither friendship nor hostility.

His majesty's clearness in the beginning of these motions: his neutrality in the progress thereof.
Wotton, Propos. in 1620, Rem. p. 503.

Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of publick danger, desert the interest of their fellow-subjects. Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth, Ovid.

All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the publick is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift.

2. A state between good and evil.

There is no health: physicians say, that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality. Donne.

3. The state of being of the neuter gender.

Jesus answered, "I and my Father are one:" where the plurality of the verb, and the neutrality of the noun, with the distinction of their persons, speak a perfect identity of their essence. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

To NEU'TRALIZE.* v. a. [from neutral.]

1. To render indifferent; to engage on neither side.

2. [In agriculture.] To make neutral.

These [till and vitriolic soils] necessarily require the calcareous ingredient to neutralize their peccant acid. Kirwan on Manures, p. 90.

NEU'TRALLY. adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on neither part.

NEW.† adj. [niuja, Goth. neop, Sax. newyd, Welsh; neu, Germ. neuf, Fr.]

1. Not old; fresh; lately produced, made or had; novel. New is used of things, and young of persons.

Shoon ful moist and newe. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
What's the newest grief?——
— That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Not being before.

Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

3. Modern; of the present time.

Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple, Miscell.

4. Different from the former.

Steadfastly purposing to lead a new life. Comm. Prayer.

5. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.

There names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days. Pope.

6. Not habituated; not familiar.

Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of hereticks, and such as privily will instil their poison into new minds. Hooker.

Seiz'd with wonder and delight,
Gaz'd all around me, new to the transporting sight. Dryden.
Twelve mules, a strong laborious race,
New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace. Pope.

7. Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.

Men, after long emaciating diets, wax plump, fat, and almost new. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

8. Fresh after any thing.

Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryden.

9. Not of ancient extraction.

A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outshines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

NEW. adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for newly, which the following examples may explain.

As soon as she had written them, a new swarm of thoughts stinging her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney.

God hath not then left this to chuse that, neither would reject that to chuse this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Spenser.
Your master's lines
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakspeare.

Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her or leave her? Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Lest by a multitude
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out. Shakspeare.
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I a gasping, new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd. Shakspeare, Rich. II.
He saw heaven blossom with a new-born light,
On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd
The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright
The way to Beth'lem, and as boldly blaz'd;
Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night. Crashaw.
I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day;
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night,
When a ruddy storm, whose scoul
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night
To blot the newly blossom'd light. Crashaw.
Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together sow'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new-comer shame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton, P. L.
Their father's state,
And new-entrusted sceptre. Milton, Comus.
The new-created world, which fame in heaven
Long had foretold. Milton, P. L.
His evil
Thou usest, and from thence creat'st more good,
Witness this new-made world, another heav'n. Milton, P. L.
All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter hair;
All in that new-blown age which does inspire
Warmth in themselves, in their beholders fire. Cowley.

If it could, yet that it should always run them into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashioned one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined. Ray on the Creation.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new-moulded. Burnet, Theory.

New-found lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery. Burnet, Theory.

Let this be nature's frailty, or her fate,
Or Isgrim's counsel, her new-chosen mate. Dryden.
Shewn all at once you dazzled so our eyes,
As new-born Pallas did the gods surprise;
When springing forth from Jove's new-closing wound,
She struck the warlike spear into the ground. Dryden.
A bird new-made about the banks she plies,
Not far from shore, and short excursions tries. Dryden.
Our house has sent to-day
To insure our new-built vessel, call'd a play. Dryden.
Then curds and cream,
And new-laid eggs, which Baucis' busy care
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.
When pleading Matho, born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashioned chair. Dryden.
A new-form'd faction does your power oppose,
The fight's confus'd, and all who met were foes. Dryden.
If thou ken'st from far
Among the Pleiads a new-kindled star;
If any sparkles than the rest more bright,
'Tis she that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.

If we consider new-born children, we shall have little reason to think that they bring many ideas into the world with them. Locke.

Drummers with vellom-thunder shake the pile,
To greet the new-made bride. Gay, Trivia.
Ah Blouzelind! I love thee more by half,
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

The proctor exhibits his proxy from the dean and chapter, and presents the new-elected bishop to the vicar-general. Ayliffe.

The new-fall'n young here bleating for their dams,
The larger here, and there the lesser lambs. Pope.

Learn all the new-fashion words and oaths. Swift.

To NEW.* v. a. [neopian, Sax.] To make new; to renew. Obsolete.

The presents every day ben newed. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

The good name of a man is sone gon and passed, when it is not newed. Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

And many a maiden's sorowe for to newe. Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 306.

NE'WEL.† n. s.

1. The compass round which the staircase is carried.

Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair open newel, and finely railed in. Bacon.

2. A new thing; novelty.

He was so enamoured with the newel,
That nought he deemed dear for the jewel.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

NEWFA'NGLE.* adj. [new and fangle. Some have pretended that nova evangelia, "new evangels," gave rise to this word; it being much used, they say, about the time that the gospellers, or reformers, began to flourish in England. But it was in use long before. Fangle was probably a cant term, corrupted from fingo, to form, to fashion; fingle, fangle.] Desirous of new things.

Flesh is so newefangle. Chaucer, Manc. Tale.

To NEWFA'NGLE.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To change by introducing novelties.

To controul and newfangle the Scripture. Milton, Of Prelat. Episcopacy.

NEWFA'NGLED.† adj. [from newfangle.] Formed with vain or foolish love of novelty; desirous of novelty.

At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than wish a snow in May's newfangled shows;
But like of each thing, that in season grows. Shakspeare.

Have no fellowship with newfangled teachers. 1 Tim. vi. Arg. of the Chapter.

Those charities are not newfangled devices of yesterday, but are most of them as old as the reformation. Atterbury.

NEWFA'NGLEDNESS. } n. s. [from newfangled.] Vain
NEWFA'NGLENESS. } and foolish love of novelty.

So to newfangleness both of manner, apparel, and each thing else, by the custom of self-guilty evil, glad to change though often for a worse. Sidney.

Yet he them in newfangleness did pass. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in newfangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter. Carew.

NE'WING. n. s. [from new.] Yest or barm. Ainsworth.

NE'WISH.* adj. [from new.] As if lately made.

It drinketh not newish at all. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

NE'WLY.† adv. [niplice, Sax. from new.]

1. Freshly; lately.

Her breath indeed those hands have newly stopp'd. Shakspeare.

They newly learned by the king's example, that attainders do not interrupt the conveying of title to the crown. Bacon.

Her lips were red, and one was thin,
Compar'd to that was next her chin;
Some bee had stung it newly. Suckling.

He rubb'd it o'er with newly gather'd mint. Dryden.

2. In a manner different from the former.

Such is the power of that sweet passion,
That it all sordid baseness doth repel,
And the refined mind doth newly fashion
Into a fairer form. Spenser, Hymn on Love.

3. In a manner not existing before.

NE'WNESS.† n. s. [nipnýpre, Sax. from new.]

1. Freshness; lateness; recentness; state of being lately produced.

Their stories, if they had been preserved, and what else was performed in that newness of the world, there could nothing of more delight have been left to posterity. Ralegh.

In these disturbances,
And newness of a wavering government,
To avenge them of their former grievances. Daniel.

When Horace writ his satires, the monarchy of his Cæsar was in its newness, and the government but just made easy to his conquered people. Dryden, Juv.

2. Novelty; unacquaintance.

Words borrowed of antiquity do lend majesty to style; they have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace like newness. B. Jonson.

Newness in great matters, was a worthy entertainment for a mind; it was an high taste, fit for the relish. South.

3. Something lately produced.

There are some newnesses of English, translated from the beauties of modern tongues, as well as from the elegances of the Latin; and here and there some old words are sprinkled, which, for their significance and sound, deserved not to be antiquated. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

4. Innovation; late change.

Away, my friends, new flight;
And happy newness that intends old right. Shakspeare.

5. Want of practice.

His device was to come without any device, all in white like a new knight, but so new as his newness shamed most of the others long exercise. Sidney.

6. Difference from the former manner.

Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Rom. vi. 4.

NEWS. n. s. without the singular, unless it be considered as singular; Milton has joined it with a singular verb. [from new; nouvelles, Fr.]

1. Fresh account of any thing.

As he was ready to be greatly advanced for some noble pieces of service which he did, he heard news of me. Sidney.

When Rhea heard these news, she fled from her husband to her brother Saturn. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Evil news rides fast, while good news baits. Milton.

With such amazement as weak mothers use,
And frantick gesture, he receives the news. Waller.

We talk in ladies' chambers love and news. Cowley.

Now the books, and now the bells,
And now our act the preacher tells,
To edify the people;
All our divinity is news,
And we have made of equal use
The pulpit and the steeple. Denham.

The amazing news of Charles at once was spread,
At once the general voice declared
Our gracious prince was dead. Dryden.

They have news-gatherers and intelligencers distributed into their several walks, who bring in their respective quotas, and make them acquainted with the discourse of the whole kingdom. Spectator.

2. Something not heard before.

It is no news for the weak and poor to be a prey to the strong and rich. L'Estrange.

3. Papers which give an account of the transactions of the present times.

Their papers, filled with a different party spirit, divide the people into different sentiments, who generally consider rather the principles than the truth of the news-writer. Addison.

Advertise both in every news-paper; and let it not be your fault or mine, if our countrymen will not take warning. Swift.

NEWS-MONGER. n. s. [news and monger.] One that deals in news; one whose employment it is to hear and to tell news.

Many tales devis'd,
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,
By smiling pick-thanks and base news-mongers. Shakspeare.

This was come as a judgement upon him for laying aside his father's will, and turning stock-jobber, news-monger, and busy body, meddling with other people's affairs. Arbuthnot.

NE'WSPAPER.* See the third sense of NEWS.

NEWT.† n. s. [eFeте, Sax. Newt is supposed by Skinner to be contracted from an evet. Ben Jonson writes it neuft; and thus we trace the contraction, nefet, neuft, neut, or newt. "Hath not a snail, a spider, yea, a neuft been found there?" B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.] Eft; small lizard: they are supposed to be appropriated some to the land, and some to the water: they are harmless.

O thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puft,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm. Shakspeare.

Newts and blind worms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen. Shakspeare, Mid. N. Dream.

Such humidity is observed in newts and water-lizards, especially if their skins be perforated or pricked. Brown.

NEW-YEAR'S-GIFT. n. s. [new, year, and gift.] Present made on the first day of the year.

If I be served such a trick, I'll have my brains taken out and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new-year's-gift. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

When he sat on the throne distributing new-years-gifts, he had his altar of incense by him, that before they received gifts they might cast a little incense into the fire; which all good christians refused to do. Stillingfleet.

NE'XIBLE.* adj. [nexibilis, Lat.] That may be knit together. Not in use. Cockeram.

NEXT. adj. [nexτ, Saxon, by a colloquial change from nehſτ or nyhſτ, the superlative of neh or nyh; neest, Scottish.]

1. Nearest in place; immediately succeeding in order.

Want supplieth itself of what is next, and many times the next way. Bacon.

The queen already sat
High on a golden bed; her princely guest
Was next her side, in order sat the rest. Dryden.

The next in place and punishment were they,
Who prodigally throw their souls away. Dryden.

2. Nearest in time.

The good man warn'd us from his text,
That none could tell whose turn should be the next. Gay.

3. Nearest in any gradation.

If the king himself had staid at London, or, which had been the next best, kept his court at York, and sent the army on their proper errand, his enemies had been speedily subdued. Clarendon.

O fortunate young man! at least your lays
Are next to his, and claim the second praise. Dryden.

Finite and infinite, being by the mind looked on as modifications of expansion and duration, the next thing to be considered, is, how the mind comes by them. Locke.

That's a difficulty next to impossible. Rowe.

There, blest with health, with business unperplext,
This life we relish, and ensure the next. Young.

NEXT. adv. At the time or turn immediately succeeding.

Th' unwary nymph
Desir'd of Jove, when next he sought her bed,
To grant a certain gift. Addison, Ovid.

NIAS.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson has here given, by way of definition, "simple, silly, foolish," as if the word were an adjective; and then transcribed, from Bailey, "a nias hawk is one taken newly from the nest, and not able to help itself; and hence nisey, a silly person." So far as to taken from the nest, Bailey's account of the hawk is right.] A young hawk; an eyas. See EYAS.

Laugh at, sweet bird? is that the scruple? come, come;
Thou art a niaise. B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

NIB. n. s. [neb, Saxon, the face; nebbe, Dutch, the bill.]

1. The bill or neck of a bird. See NEB.

2. The point of any thing, generally of a pen.

A tree called the bejuco, which twines about other trees, with its end hanging downwards, travellers cut the nib off it, and presently a spout of water runs out from it as clear as crystal. Derham.

NI'BBED. adj. [from nib.] Having a nib.

To NI'BBLE.† v. a. [from nib, the beak or mouth. Dr. Johnson.— It has been thought allied to the Greek γνάπτω, vellico; and gnibble, I have observed, is the old orthography of this word. See Barret's Alv. 1580. So Junius cites the Belg. knabbelen, or knibbelen, "quod sicuti iis frequentativum est à knawen, ita gnibble Anglis est à gnaw."]

1. To bite by little at a time; to eat slowly.

Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads thatch'd with stover them to keep. Shakspeare.

It is the rose that bleeds, when he
Nibbles his nice phlebotomy. Cleaveland.

Had not he better have born Wat's nibbling of his plants and roots now, than the huntsman's eating of him out of house and home? L'Estrange.

Many there are who nibble without leave;
But none, who are not born to taste, survive. Granville.

2. To bite as a fish does the bait.

The roving trout
Greedily sucks in the twining bait,
And tugs and nibbles the fallacious meat. Gay.

To NI'BBLE. v. n.

1. To bite at.

As pigeons bill, so wedlock would be nibbling. Shakspeare.

They gape at rich revenues which you hold,
And fain would nibble at your grandame gold. Dryden.

If you would be nibbling, here is a hand to stay your stomach. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

This fish plunging himself in mud, and then lifting up his head a little, casts out the string; which the little fishes taking for a worm, and nibbling at it, he immediately plucks them both in together. Grew, Mus.

2. To carp at; to find fault with.

Instead of returning a full answer to my book, he manifestly falls a nibbling at one single passage in it. Tillotson.

NI'BBLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A word used by anglers, denoting the act of the fish trying the bait, as it were: not immediately swallowing it.

NI'BBLER.† n. s. [from nibble.]

1. One that bites by little at a time.

The tender nibbler would not touch the bait. Shakspeare, Passionate Pilgrim.

2. A carper.

You tell me what the wits say of your book. I suppose you mean those identical dunces, who have been at war with sense for these last twenty years, as they were with wit for twenty years before. But these are nibblers at the outside. I can tell you of a London divine that has gone deeper, and has returned your book in a great rage to the bookseller. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 130.

NICE.† adj. [Goth. hnasquia, soft; hneſc, neſc, Sax. tender, effeminate, from hneſcian, to soften; neische, old Engl. effeminate, Gloss. to Wicliffe; nice, old Fr. silly, weak, simple.]

1. Accurate in judgement to minute exactness; superfluously exact. It is often used to express a culpable delicacy.

Such a man was Argalus, as hardly the nicest eye can find a spot in. Sidney.

Nor be so nice in taste myself to know,
If what I swallow be a thrush or no. Dryden, Pers.

Thus criticks, of less judgement than caprice,
Curious, not knowing, not exact, but nice,
Form short ideas, and offend in arts
As most in manners, by a love to parts. Pope.

Our author, happy in a judge so nice,
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice. Pope.

She is so nice and critical in her judgement, so sensible of the smallest errour, that the maid is often forced to dress and undress her daughters three or four times a-day. Law.

2. Delicate; scrupulously and minutely cautious.

Dear love! continue nice and chaste;
For if you yield, you do me wrong;
Let duller wits to love's end haste,
I have enough to woo thee long. Donne.

Of honour men at first, like women, nice,
Raise maiden scruples at unpractis'd vice. Ld Halifax.

Having been compiled by Gratian, in an ignorant age, we ought not to be too nice in examining it. Baker.

3. Fastidious; squeamish.

God hath here
Varied his bounty so with new delights,
As may compare with heaven, and to taste,
Think not I shall be nice. Milton, P. L.

4. Easily injured; delicate.

With how much ease is a young muse betray'd?
How nice the reputation of the maid? Roscommon.

5. Formed with minute exactness.

Indulge me but in love, my other passions
Shall rise and fall by virtue's nicest rules. Addison, Cato.

6. Requiring scrupulous exactness.

Supposing an injury done, it is a nice point to proportion the reparation to the degree of the indignity. L'Estrange.

My progress in making this nice and troublesome experiment, I have set down more at large. Newton, Opt.

7. Refined.

A nice and subtile happiness I see
Thou to thyself proposest, in the choice
Of thy associates, Adam, and wilt taste
No pleasure, though in pleasure solitary. Milton, P. L.

8. Having lucky hits: as, in the following passage of Shakspeare; a signification not in use, Dr. Johnson says. It is here used by Shakspeare rather in the sense of trifling, toying, wanton; and so in the Mirror for Magistrates.

When my hours
Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives
Of me for jests. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Shore's wife was my nice cheat,
The holy whore, and eke the wily peat. Mir. for Mag. p. 412.

9. Foolish; weak; effeminate.

A nyce heart! fie for shame!
A coward heart, of love unlered,
Whereof art thou so sore afered? Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

Men wax nice and effeminate. Barret, Alv. 1580.

10. Trivial; unimportant.

12. Handsome; pleasing: a colloquial expression in several parts of England.

13. To make Nice. To be scrupulous: perhaps from faire le delicat.

He that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up. Shakspeare, K. John.

Ni'cely. adv. [from nice.]

1. Accurately; minutely; scrupulously.

Knaves in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silly ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

What mean those ladies which, as tho'
They were to take a clock to pieces, go
So nicely about the bride? Donne.

He ought to study the grammar of his own tongue, that he may understand his own country-speech nicely, and speak it properly. Locke.

The next thing of which the doses ought to be nicely determined, are opiates. Arbuthnot on Coins.

At nicely carving, shew thy wit;
But ne'er presume to eat a bit. Swift, Miscell.

2. Delicately.

The inconveniences attending the best of governments, we quickly feel, and are nicely sensible of the share that we bear in them. Atterbury.

Nice'ne Creed.✱ The Creed drawn up, for the most part, by the first general council of Nice in the year 325; enlarged in the year 381. See Constantinopolitan Creed.

That other confession of faith, which we call the Nicene creed. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 42.

Ni'ceness. n. s. [from nice.]

1. Accuracy; minute exactness.

Where's now that labour'd niceness in thy dress,
And all those arts that did the spark express. Dryden.

2. Superfluous delicacy or exactness.

A strange niceness were it in me to refrain that from the ears of a person representing so much worthiness, which I am glad even to rocks and woods to utter. Sidney.

Only some little boats, from Gaul that did her feed
With trifles, which she took for niceness more than need. Drayton.

Unlike the niceness of our modern dames,
Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryden.

Nor place them where
Roast crabs offend the niceness of their nose. Dryden.

Ni'cety. n. s. [from nice.]

1. Minute accuracy of thought.

Nor was this nicety of his judgement confined only to literature, but was the same in all other parts of art. Prior.

2. Accurate performance, or observance.

As for the workmanship of the old Roman pillars, the ancients have not kept to the nicety of proportion and the rules of art so much as the moderns. Addison on Italy.

3. Fastidious delicacy; squeamishness.

He them with speeches meet
Does fair intreat, no courting nicety,
But simple true, and eke unfeigned sweet. Spenser.

So love doth loathe disdainful nicety. Spenser.

4. Minute observation; punctilious discrimination; subtilty.

If reputation attend these conquests, which depend on the fineness and niceties of words, it is no wonder if the wit of men so employed, should perplex and subtilize the signification of sounds. Locke.

His conclusions are not built upon any niceties, or solitary and uncommon appearances, but on the most simple and obvious circumstances of these terrestrial bodies. Woodward.

5. Delicate management; cautious treatment.

Love such nicety requires,
One blast will put out all his fires. Swift.

They not from temples, nor from gods refrain,
But the poor lares from the niches seize,
If they be little images that please. Dryden.

On the south a long majestick race
Of Ægypt's priests, the gilded niches grace. Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates are well enough qualified to read pamphlets against religion and high flying, whereby they fill their niches, and carry themselves through the world with that dignity which best becomes a senator and a squire. Swift, Miscell.

NICK.✝ n. s. [nicke, Teutonick, the twinkling of an eye.]

1. Exact point of time at which there is necessity or convenience.

That great instrument of state suffered the fatal thread to be spun out to that length for some politick respects, and then to cut it off in the very nick. Howell, Voc. For.

What in our watches that in us is found,
So to the height and nick we up be wound,
No matter by what hand or trick. Suckling.

That trick,
Had it come in the nick,
Had touch'd us to the quick. Denham.

Though dame fortune seem to smile,
And leer upon him for a while;
She'll after shew him in the nick
Of all his glories a dog trick. Hudibras.

And some with symbols, signs and tricks,
Engraved in planetary nicks,
With their own influences will fetch them
Down from their orbs, arrest and catch them. Hudibras.

This nick of time is the critical occasion for the gaining of a point. L'Estrange.

2. A notch cut in any thing. [Corrupted from nock or notch.]

Though but a stick with a nick.
Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 23.
